"The way I figure it," Abe continued, "reckoning on what we lost by Hyman Maimin, if he settles for 30 cents, and what we make out of Mr. Bramson's first order, we come out even to the dollar."

"So?" Morris murmured.

"All excepting that wedding present, Mawruss," said Abe. "By the way, Mawruss, ain't that wedding present come back yet?"

"Why, sure," said Morris. "It come back yesterday when you were out."

"Why ain't you showed it to me? Ain't I got no right to see it, Mawruss?"

"Of course you got a right to see it," Morris assented, "but I thought I'd get it right uptown to Minnie and have it exchanged."

"And did she exchange it?" Abe asked.

"Well, it's like this," Morris explained: "Minnie liked it so well that she decided on keeping it. So I'll give the firm my personal check for $25."

Abe puffed hard on his cigar.

"You're a purty generous feller, Mawruss," he commented, "to give Minnie a present like that for nothing at all, ain't it?"

"Oh, no, I ain't, Abe!" Morris replied. "I ain't giving it to her for nothing at all. I'm taking it out of her housekeeping money, Abe, $5 a month."

IV.—THE TRAIL OF THE SILK

[Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.]

BARNEY GREENBERG, foreman in the cutting room of Potash & Perlmutter's cloak and suit establishment, boasted a distinction that falls to few of his race in New York. His brother was a policeman, a circumstance which impelled Potash & Perlmutter to pay him $2 a week in excess of a foreman's normal wages—as a sort of insurance premium against theft. Nor was this a poor investment, for the thought of Barney's brother had prevented many a piece of silk from going home with one of the twenty odd operators who labored in the cutting room.

In manner Barney was calm and self possessed, not to say superior, and therefore it came as a distinct shock to his employers when he burst into the firm's show room and sank panting into a chair.

"We are missing in six pieces black silk," he announced.

"O! gewoldt!" he cried and ran both his hands through his thick black hair.

"What's the trouble now, Barney?" Abe Potash asked.

It was at least five minutes before Barney was calm enough to reply.

"We are missing in six pieces black silk," he announced finally, "at $50 the piece, or $300."

"Three hundred dollars!" Abe cried. "Say, Barney, you're joking with us!"

"Joke I'm making it," Barney moaned, appealing to Morris Perlmutter. "He says I make jokes. Mr. Perlmutter. It ain't so, believe me. We are missing in six pieces black silk."

"Maybe it's a shortage in delivery, ain't it?" Morris suggested.

Barney shook his head.

"Yesterday we got it, and today we ain't got it," he said. "Some one pinched it on us."

Abe sat down heavily and set his hat back from his forehead.

"Yes, Mawruss," he said bitterly, "that's a foreman for you! We are missing in silk $300. Where is it? He don't know. All he could say is some one pinched it, and mind you, Mawruss, his brother is a policeman!"

Barney rocked to and fro and clutched his hair with both fists.

"If you expect you should find it that way," Abe continued, "you don't need to got a policeman for a brother."

"Enough's enough, Barney," Morris broke in. "You mourned good and plenty by now, Barney. Tell us who you think done it."

Barney stopped rocking.

"Rifkin," he said.

"Rifkin!" Abe exclaimed. "What are you talking nonsense? Rifkin! I know his people from the old country yet. His father was a rabbi."

"I know it," said Barney, "but his brother, Aaron Rifkin, is in the remnant business—all kinds of remnants from silk, wool, velvet—on Hester street."

He rocked to and fro for three minutes, and then stopped again.

"Near the corner of Eldridge," he said, and resumed his rocking.

"Stop it!" Abe yelled. "You make me dizzy in the head. Why do you think Rifkin done it?"

"Why?" Barney repeated in blank astonishment. "Why? A question! I am just telling you Rifkin's brother is in the remnant business."

"Sure, I know," Abe concluded, "but your brother is in the policeman's business, so Mr. Perlmutter and me, we figure it out like this—either you would find the silk by Monday, or you would find another job, and that's all there is to it!"

Max Greenberg, Barney's brother, had never read the works of Gaboriau or Conan Doyle, but he was thoroughly conversant with the methods of detection in vogue with the metropolitan police.

"Leave it to me, Barney," he said on the following morning, when Barney confidentially acquainted him with the circumstances of the theft.

It being Max's day off, he accompanied Barney to the cutting room of Potash & Perlmutter. When they entered Pincus Rifkin was laying out his cloth in long, smooth folds on a cutting table, preparatory to chalking out the pattern on the upper layer. He was humming a psalm to the traditional Hebrew melody, for Pincus was a pious man, as becomes the son of a rabbi.

By token of that same piety, his whiskers had never known the refining influence of scissors since they first sprouted. They gave him a venerable, peaceful aspect, and in contemplating their profusion one was apt to lose sight of the well developed chest over which they cascaded. Moreover, Pincus had a jaunty way of carrying himself that made the other cutters and operators treat him respectfully. But Max saw only the flowing whiskers, and he winked confidently at his brother.

"Dis here is a pipe," he muttered. "Come here," he growled, advancing toward Pincus.

Pincus smiled and shrugged his shoulders. His English was rather weak, and he relied a great deal upon gesture.

"You're Rifkin, ain't yer?" Max went on.

"Sure," said Pincus.

Max thrust his chin out until it was at least six inches in advance of the rest of his body.

"Who pinched the silk?" he bellowed.

"Sillik?" said Pincus. "What sillik?"

"G'wan!" Max roared. "You ain't never seen no silk, have you? You don't know narten about it, do you? Maybe dis'll make you remember!"

He threw back his right arm and, clinching his fist, aimed straight for the point of Pincus' jaw. Unfortunately for Max and fortunately for Pincus, the patriarchal beard obscured a receding chin, and what was intended for a crashing blow glanced harmless past the side of Pincus' neck and nearly dislocated Max's shoulder.

Then it was that the spirit of Judas Maccabeus became reincarnated in the frame of Pincus Rifkin. With a shout that echoed through the cloak and suit establishment of Potash & Perlmutter, he leaped upon the astonished Max Greenberg. After the dust settled, it required the combined efforts of the twenty odd operators to pry him loose from Max's throat.

They sent around the corner for a doctor, who resorted to artificial respiration before Max Greenberg recovered sufficiently to go home in a cab at Potash & Perlmutter's expense, but the moral influence of having a policeman for a brother was dissipated, perhaps forever, in the minds of those twenty odd operators in the cutting room.

HER LITTLE BOY HAD PNEUMONIA
NEARLY LOST HIM.
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP SAVED HIM.

The slight cold, the irritating cough, the tightness of the chest, if not attended to, will sooner or later develop into some serious lung or bronchial trouble, and our advice to you is that on the first inception of a cough or cold "GET RID OF IT."

Mrs. H. Washburn, Gaspereaux Station, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and tell you just how much I appreciate Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, for I would not be without it in the house. Twice my little boy, now four years old, has had pneumonia, and nearly died, but since using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I have kept him clear of even a cough. I often say that if it had not been for "Dr. Wood's" I would have lost him."

"My little girl, ten months old, is subject to bronchitis, but when she seems to be stuffed up and has difficulty in breathing I give her a few drops of Norway Pine Syrup every two or three hours, and in a very little while she is all well, in fact, on the first signs of a cold or cough we all fly for 'Dr. Wood's'."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, as there are many imitations on the market.

The genuine is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c.

EXPLOSION WAS TERRIFIC.

Alexandria, Egypt, Jan. 4—Charles Grant of Boston, one of the two Americans known to have been on board the British steamship Persia, when she was torpedoed in the Mediterranean last Thursday, has arrived in Alexandria.

"I was in the dining saloon of the Persia at 1.05 p.m.," he said, "when a terrific explosion occurred. The saloon became filled with smoke, broken glass and steam from the boiler, which appeared to have burst. We went on deck as though we were at drill and reported at the lifeboats on the starboard side, as the vessel had listed to port. I clung to the railing. The last thing done was to tie on Captain Sprickly's lifebelt.

"As the vessel was then listing so badly that it was impossible to launch the starboard boats I slid down the starboard rail and into the water. I got caught in a rope which pulled off a shoe but I broke loose and climbed on some floating wreckage. The last I saw of the Persia she had her bow in the air, five minutes after the explosion.

"After floating about in the wreckage until 4 o'clock in the morning, I saw five boats. I was pulled into one of them. We rowed about looking for other stragglers. The boats became overloaded and the occupants were redistributed. Four boats were tied together, and the fifth followed some distance away.

"My boat left the others in order to search the more frequented steamship channels for help. We rowed for three hours. Then we saw a British cruiser and called out: 'We are English.' We gave directions to the cruiser as to where the other boats were. They were soon found.

"It was a horrible scene. The water as black as ink. Some of the passengers were screaming, others were calling out good-bye. Those in one boat sang hymns."

"Humble as I am," said a loud voiced spouter at a meeting, "I still remember that I am a fraction of this magnificent empire." "Are you, indeed," said a bystander, "and a vulgar one at that."

COSTUMES FOR SOUTHERN WEAR

Serge, Taffeta, Faille, and Moire-Poplin Favoured For Suits.

MEDIUM AND SMALL HATS

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—For those of us who are fortunate enough to be able to step, as it were, from beneath the cloudy, wintry skies of the North into the sunshine and flowers of the South, the shops are fairly overflowing with linens, soft silks, cool looking suitings, the most feminine, of hats, parasols and all the other accessories that go to make up the summer costume.

The Popular Bolero Suit.

When the various European countries unconsciously exerted their influence on styles by their entry into the war, or their equally difficult stand of neutrality, the bolero was again introduced into the woman's wardrobe, it being the Spanish note. It is a model that has always been a great favorite. It is generally becoming and may be made at home with results as good as if fashioned by a tailor. Fine blue serge, soutached, or trimmed with a design in gold braid or galoon, is most often seen in the bolero models; often the upper portion of the pleated or gathered skirt is of taffeta in black or the same tone as the serge. Collars and cuffs of taffeta and taffeta covered buttons are also used with good effect.

Stripes and Checks.

In both the suitings and the soft silks being fashioned into frocks and suits for southern wear and early spring, the popularity of stripes and checks is quite as marked as it was last season! the combination of black and white and soft gray is also noticeable. The soft wool suitings in checks ranging

MISSES' COAT SUIT.

By Anabel Worthington.

The tailor made or coat suit is much less in evidence this year than last and yet it is all but impossible to get through a season without one. In the model which we show in our illustration the coat suit is intended for a miss or for a small woman the styles being about the same.

The coat is made with a panel front and back, that of the front being divided by the line of closing, while that of the back is in one unbroken piece.

The sides are attached with long seams extending to the shoulder, still they are cut in at the waistline with a tiny slash which allows of gathering them beneath the belt, which is used on the sides only. The neck is finished with a handsome but small collar and revers. The sleeves are of the regulation coat variety; they may be finished at the wrist with or without a cuff.

The skirt of this dress is a three gore design, closing in the centre of the front. It fits nearly at the top and expands at the lower edge to 2¼ yards around in the medium size.

Pockets are made first and foremost and these, which this season is given a very beautiful finish. Broadcloth is also employed and velveteen. Wools are novelties, such as wool poplin, which are suitable, and a glance through the shops will certainly prompt the doubting taste.

The suit pattern, No. 7398, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 3½ yards of 50 inch material with 1 yard of 27 inch contrasting goods.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

THE LITTLE BAD BOY

The bad little boy has gone to sleep
One hand still shut in a stubborn fist,
As though in his dreams he would bodily keep Himself in position to resist.
The bad little boy throughout the day
Has broken the home rules, one by one,
Has found for his feet the forbidden way,
Has left no disturbing thing undone.
The bad little boy—his face is calm,
Save that a faint smile is clinging there;
And now a forgiving palm
Smooths all of the tangles from his hair;
And now he is lifted into place
By arms unfelt in his slumbers deep;
And nothing but good shows in his face—
The bad little boy has gone to sleep.
So, may it not be, when you and I
As bad little boys lie down to sleep,
The angels that marks our deeds on high
May come on his wings of gentle sweep
And bend over us with a patient sigh,
And whisper to such as are you and I,
"Your day is forgiven you; sleep in peace?"

WHAT ELLA WOULD DO.

I would aim to make my life worthy of one good woman's love and respect.

I would make the happiness of my home the chief ambition of my life.

I would write no letters to any woman, save my life, that all the world might not read.

If in the employ of others, I would do double the duties imposed upon me that I might the sooner have others in my employ.

I would rule in my business affairs and in my own household—not by force of physical strength, but by force of character.

I would never imagine that the possession of a first class tailor and an eye glass could excuse a vile breath and an insolent air.

I would deny myself some pleasures and luxuries in youth that I might not be dependent on others for the necessaries of life in old age.

In my general association with women, I would treat them as nearly as possible as I would like other men to treat my sister or my wife.

I would feel it a great honor to be called a faithful husband and a wise father than to be known as a "sly dog" or as a "great masher" by my fellowmen.

I would give every man a helping hand as I went along the journey of life and expect no reward save in the increase of my own self-respect and satisfaction.

And I would take as great pride in controlling and mastering my passions and appetites as I would in the control of my horses and my dogs. And I would look well to it that none gained the mastery of me.

SWEET MINDED WOMEN.

So great is the influence of a sweet-minded woman on those around her that it is almost boundless The husband comes home worn out with pressure of business and feeling irritable with the world in general; but when he enters the cozy sitting room and sees the blaze of the bright fire and meets his wife's smiling face, he succombs in a moment to the soothing influences which act as a balm of Gilead to his wounded spirit. We all are wearied with combating with the stern realities of life. The rough schoolboy flies in a rage from the taunts of his companions to find solace in his mother's smile; the little one, full of grief with its own large troubles, finds a haven of rest in its mother's breast; and so one might go on with instances of the influence that a sweet-minded woman has in the social life with which she is connected. Beauty is an insignificant power when compared with hers.

MAKE OTHERS HAPPY

When rain beats down and all is drear,
As often is the way,
With happy smile I will recall
What grandma used to say:
"Why, bless your heart, it doesn't help
To let the tears drip too;
Just wipe your eyes and look around
For some good deed to do."
With glee three letters she'd repeat;
Just M. O. H. were they;
Yet what this meaning we knew not.
For did we ask, she'd say:
"Why, that's my motto, and I've learned
The very wisest plan
Is to find out what others need
And help them if you can."
With each success, as we would seek
Some helpful act to do,
We found that cheering others lives
Brightened our own lives, too.
I told her this one day, and plead;
"M. O. H. Please make clear."
Then smiling sweetly, she replied:
"Make others Happy, dear!"
When stormy days give you the blues,
Just help to set things right;
Kind acts will fill the darkest day
With sweetness and with light.
Look up the real unfortunates,
And ease their aches and pains:
As you make others happy, dear,
You just forget it rains."

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS

Paint new pails and tubs with glycerine to prevent shrinking.

Clean mirrors with methaylated spirit and polish with tissue paper.

Clean soiled wallpaper with bread dough, or a cloth dipped in oatmeal.

Windows may be kept free from ice by applying wood alcohol. Use a sponge for the purpose.

Hot vinegar will remove paint from glass.

One tablespoon of ammonia in a pint of tepid water will clean gold or silver jewellery.

Mica in stoves when smoked, is readily cleaned by taking it out, and thoroughly washing with vinegar, a little dilluted. If the black does not come off at once, let it soak a little.

When making cotton flannel broom bags make them four or five inches longer than is really necessary. Then as the bottom wears out run a new seam across the bottom, making practically a new bag with a single sewing.

A campstool to hold the clothes basket is a convenience on washday It is light, easily carried about, and when not in use takes up little room. In hanging out the clothes and taking them from the line the stool saves stooping and keeps the bottom of the basket clean.

The best thing for cleaning furniture is just ordinary brown boot polish. Rub it well in with a piece of flannel, and polish up with a soft, dry duster. The effect is magical. Besides polishing the wood it tends to darken it, and preserves it from insects. As a very little polish is necessary one small tin lasts a considerable time. Less "elbow grease" is needed than if you use the ordinary polish.

Never hang up a mackintosh. When not in use brush and oil, after thoroughly drying it, and place in a drawer. It will last twice as long as if left hanging in the dust. To clean a mackintosh which has become hard and rigid dissolve a handful of the best grey lime in half a bucketful of water. Apply the mixture with a small sponge. Leave. Then repeat sponging in three or four hour's time.

To spread the butter when very hard have a cup of boiling water handy, and dip the point of the knife into it each time before spreading the bread. This enables the thinnest bread to be buttered without spoiling the slice and wasteing the butter.

THAT GINGER CAKE.

A Reminiscence: But Where is the Desired Recipe?

What memories this reference to the five-cent ginger cake of commerce will arouse in the minds of men approaching or past middle age, who passed their boyhood in the country!

At all public gatherings where concessions were given for the serving of refreshments it was a chief feature in the order of the day down to a period much later than half a century ago. And then it seemed to have disappeared, suddenly and mysteriously, after the manner of the disappearance of the bootjack and the passenger pigeon, and like them probably never to return.

Who among us whose hair has grown thin atop or disappeared altogether cannot recall the bill of fare of the refreshment venders in those earlier and simpler days at fairs, town meetings and Fourth of July celebrations! The assortment was not elaborate, but it was filling and satisfying, and one got a good deal for his money!

Most conspiciously displayed were those ginger cakes, everywhere locally known as "baker's gingerbread," to distinguish it from home-made gingerbread, which lacked the delicate color, the spicy fragrance, the workmanlike finish and pleasing regularity of the imported article. Then there were coffee, served in big mugs, crackers and cheese, baked beans and brown bread, not infrequently home-made doughnuts and always raw oysters.

The gingerbread and the oysters were the things that took with the crowd; for only on such occasions were these viands readily attainable. What country boy has not watched some older person order a saucer of raw oysters, cover then with vinegar and cayenne pepper and then absorb them as though to the manner born, without admiring the grace and nonchalance with which the trick was done and wishing for the time to come when he might venture to give such an exhibition?

His consolation lay in a "sheet" of that famous baker's gingerbread, and, if he was particularly well fixed financially, a piece of cheese to go with it. Those were indeed happy days, when a piece of gingerbread and a hunk of cheese, at a total expense of 6 cents, would fill an aching void which in these degenerate days is hardly satisfied with a six-course dinner.—Biddeford "Journal."

from the very tiny pattern to the aggressive checker-board designs are all good, relieved with a touch of vivid green, rose, or orange; black taffeta and moire are also effective for trimming these suits and tailored frocks. The striped silks are usually combined with a plain satin or silk, in a tone that harmonizes with or is an effective contrast to the predominating color in the striped material. Sheer fabrics, crepe Georgettes, chiffon-cloths, silk voiles, and the various other transparent fabrics promise to be as good for sleeves, collars and other trimming purposes as they have been for the past few seasons.

New Blouses Practical.

Blouses of chiffon-cloth, chiffon, and similar materials, dainty and becoming to a degree, were never very durable. It was really heartbreaking when one had a particularly becoming and rather expensive blouse, to have it begin to pull out and wear under the arms and at the elbows after only one or two wearings. This was partially done away with when cotton net was introduced for lining these waists; this season we have the net blouse-itself, often lined with net or chiffon-cloth. These waists are delightfully sheer and they have a wonderful wearing quality.

Often the net blouse is trimmed with a linen cluny, or another equally pretty lace in a rather heavy pattern. Then again collar and cuffs are of a picotedged Georgette in a delicate tone of rose, yellow, or pale pink. Novelty buttons in quaint effective colorings are sometimes used at the closing of collar, or down the front, forming unusually attractive trimming details.

When you are fixing a piece of wood with a screw always rub a little tallow on the screw before putting it in; then it can be taken out much easier, even 20 years after. This is far better than having to heat one's screwdriver, because heating the screwdriver will ruin it, as the heat takes all the temper out of it.

Help to Make Her Dream Come True

SHE is one of some Three Million Belgians who, since they refused to sell their honor to Germany, have lived on the brink of starvation. A thriving industrial people, used to lite's comforts, they have been reduced to a state where they dream, not of luxuries or pleasures, but of having enough to eat!.

True to their character as the war has unmasked it, the Germans callously refuse to help the starving. The task of feeding them has been undertaken by Belgium's Allies and Neutral Nations, through the provided by voluntary contributions and administered with wonderful economy and efficiency by a neutral Commission.

Absolutely none of the supplies go to Germans, and most of the food taken into the country is paid for by Belgians who have still a little money. But to feed those who cannot pay, nearly $2,500,000 a month is needed!

Surely no people ever deserved our sympathy and aid more than do these starving Belgians! They face a winter of necessity, while we are living in plenty. The Fund needs regular weekly or monthly contributions rather than larger but spasmodic gifts. Let us plan to deny ourselves, if necessary—share with our needy Allies—and help to save their lives.

Letters to Prisoners in France Tell of Germany's Sad Condition

Paris Temps Quotes Extracts from Correspondence Which Show the Tragic Impression Made on the German Populace by the Appalling Wastage of Men.

[Special Dispatch.]

PARIS, January 1.

Letters to German prisoners of war in France furnish irrefutable evidence of the sentiments prevailing at present in Germany. The correspondence invariably refers to the constant drain on the male population, owing to the extension of the conscription system and to the steadily aggravating conditions to which those at home are subjected. The Paris Temps quotes a few extracts from such letters. Here is one:—

"Gergast, Oct. 28.—There are now few of us left in this village. Nearly everybody has gone to the war. Many have been killed or grievously wounded. Some have escaped with less damage. It is terrible. Those still left here will soon have to go too, and we have asked for some Russian prisoners of war to do the work for our families in our absence. I have had a letter from Gustav. He is in Berlin being trained for active service and he says that the daily drilling goes pretty hard on him. You know he is in his forty-sixth year."

Another prisoner received the following:—

"It is a pity to see what poor wretches they are sending off to war these days, old men upward of sixty and half grown boys of eighteen. Some are one eyed, others limping. It looks as if they tried to rake together all they can get hold of, only to throw them into the roaring furnace. This cannot possibly last more than a few months at the most. These latest conscripts will be killed, too, in their turn and we have no more to put in their places."

In Schleswig and Holstein several training camps have been organized where both minors and superannuated recruits are being instructed. Persons between forty-five and fifty years of age, who have not been called to the colors as yet, have been forbidden to leave the country and all boys over sixteen years have been informed to keep themselves in readiness, in anticipation of orders to report at some army depot for preliminary military instruction. According to a recent ordinance, the details of which were published shortly after its promulgation, the defectives who had once been exempted as unfit for active service have been re-examined. The number affected by this order amounted to about three million and of these over sixty per cent were passed by the surgeons. Measures of this kind show to what length the German government is determined to go and the common people naturally feel dismayed at the desperate state of things. Some envy the fortunate ones who are safely imprisoned in the enemy's country. One young girl writes to her fiancé in a French prison camp:—

"My little boy, you should not grumble, but rather feel satisfied, for you could be in a much more sad situation. I cannot explain now, but will tell you all about it some time. Heins and August are worse off than you."

From Crefeld a wife addresses this lament to her imprisoned husband:—

"At home we are losing courage altogether. Mother is in despair and most miserable, and father has lost twenty-three pounds. One feels like tearing one's hair, but what good would that do? When I get the blues and am complaining the others chide me and tell me that I, at least, have nothing to worry about, since you are safe and can hope to return home once more."

WARNING TO GERMANY IN HISTORY OF NAPOLEON'S SYRIAN CAMPAIGN

French, After Untold Hardships, Reached Acre, Where, After Futile Siege and Great Loss in Unsuccessful Assaults, They Were Compelled to Begin Retirement Across Desert Wastes to Cairo—Suez Line as British Defence.

[Special Dispatch.]

LONDON, January 1.

The difficulties attending a German-Turkish advance from Syria on Egypt is emphasised by a reference to the French campaign in the same region in 1799. A study of Napoleon's experiences shows that the same physical obstacles of terrain may be expected to-day as in former years. The desert between El Arish and Gaza remains the same, and although Napoleon's force crossed this end stretch in forty-eight hours the French troops suffered untold hardships.

The French objective was St. Jean d'Arc on the Syrian coast. Napoleon captured every fortified post intervening between that place and El Arish, but the united strength of the British and Turks proved too much for the French and Napoleon after a sixty days' siege of St. Jean d'Arc was compelled to retrace his steps over the very route which the German-Turkish forces now propose to utilise in advancing on Egypt.

The present rendezvous of the German-Turkish army is Syria is north of Damascus. The headquarters of the German commander in chief, Field Marshal von der Goltz, is at Aleppo, 180 miles north by railway from Damascus. Aleppo was regarded by Napoleon as the key to India, but before Aleppo could be occupied it was necessary for the French to take St. Jean d'Arc, and in this latter undertaking they were unsuccessful.

To the military observer the remarkable marching powers of the French troops, backed up by the driving power of the staff such as Napoleon had collected about him, is disclosed in the fact that Napoleon moved a portion of his command from Cairo to El Arish, a distance of 137 miles, in five days. This entire command which moved out of Cairo left that city on February 10, 1799. This Cairo force included the divisions of Lannes and Bon and the cavalry, and the whole force was up with El Arish in seven days. Fully seventy-five miles of the 137 was traversed over a semi-desert country, and for twenty miles before El Arish was reached the country was desert in the extreme. The divisions of Reynier and Kleber had preceded Napoleon from the lower Nile, and as fast as the French troops came up they moved to the assault, one command arriving at and going into the fight at midnight. El Arish was occupied on February 20, and important magazines fell into the hands of the French.

From El Arish the French pushed on to Gaza, a distance of forty-three miles. Although the total force of the French did not exceed thirteen thousand men, still Napoleon was obliged to divide this force up and move along by isolated divisions over the desert which separated his army from Syria. It took the French forty-eight hours to reach Gaza, and this march of forty-three miles was the hardest marching experience met by the French in the entire Syrian campaign. The greatest trouble was the scarcity of water, and in separating the army into isolated divisions the idea was to conserve the wells, which were the only resource in that arid region.

The entire French army united near Gaza, which place was found evacuated in advance of the French arrival. Here the French fell into possession of additional supplies, which the enemy in his haste to retreat had left undestroyed.

On March 3 the French reached Jaffa, and on March 7 that place was carried by assault.

On March 18 St. Jean d'Acre was invested. A desperate resistance was met with. The guiding spirit in the early defence of the place was a French engineer and artillerist, General Phillipeaux. On March 28 the first assault took place. It failed. On April 16 Napoleon defeated a Turkish army of 35,000 men at Mount Tabor, which force was marching to the relief of St. Jean d'Acre. Five assaults on St. Jean d'Acre immediately followed the battle of Mount Tabor. All failed. On May 9 the sixth assault was made. This, too, failed. On May 10, with Kleber's fresh troops, brought in from Mount Tabor, the seventh and eighth assaults were made. All were unsuccessful, and on May 21 Napoleon was compelled to raise the siege and retrace steps to Egypt.

On the return march, made over the route which now lays before the German-Turkish armies, the French laid waste all the country, both to supply themselves with provisions for crossing the desert and to deprive the Turks of the means of following them to the frontiers of Egypt. Returning into Egypt, Napoleon marched to Cairo with the main body of his troops, and reached that place on June 14, 1799. Kleber's division retreated to Damietta.

From Damascus, where the German-Turkish armies are concentrated to-day, a railway runs to Haifa, on the Syrian coast. This railway line between Damascus and Haifa is ninety miles long. Haifa is fifteen miles south of St. Jean d'Acre. Field Marshall von der Goltz has it in his power to move his entire army to Haifa by rail, and by so doing place his command on the road which Napoleon used at a point distant 25½ miles from Cairo.

It is understood the Germans recently have united Nabulus and Jerusalem by rail. The distance between the two places is twenty-nine miles. The report is not confirmed, but if true it will mean that the German-Turkish forces can proceed from Damascus direct to Jaffa, covering the entire distance from Constantinople to Jaffa by railway.

From Jerusalem to Jaffa is thirty-two miles by rail and from Jaffa over the coast highway as used by Napoleon the distance to Cairo for marching troops is 212 miles.

From Jaffa to the nearest point on the Suez Canal along the coast highway is 153 miles. This highway passes through Gaza, El Arish and Sebech. This same roadway crosses the Suez Canal at a point twenty-nine miles south of Port Said and fifteen miles north of Ismaila. From the crossing point, as indicated, the distance to Cairo is sixty-two miles and from the same crossing point to El Arish the distance is seventy-five miles.

When Napoleon launched his Syrian campaign the immediate occasion was on learning that the Turks were concentrated in force at Natalia for an advance into Egypt along the Syrian coast highway. Magazines were being collected by the Turks for this army at St. Jean d'Acre and Napoleon believed that it was of paramount importance to destroy these magazines before the Turkish army could put in an appearance before that place.

Viewing the French campaign as it effects the present day situation the impression is gained that the Allies are preparing to duplicate the St. Jean d'Acre resistance with a tremendous defence on the line of the Suez Canal. This defence, it is recognised, will have the added advantage that all supplies and munitions for the German-Turkish forces must be brought up from the eastward across the wastes of the Syrian desert. It is further recognised that the Germans are instituting a campaign which will mean a fat extension of their lines. The line of communication from Damascus extends to Constantinople and thence through the Balkan Peninsula to Hungary, Austria and Germany. Midway of this line is the allied army of Salonica, constituting a force which, so long as it remains in existence, must mean a real menace on the flank of the long line of communications. In addition to the Salonica army the Germans also will have to reckon on the possibilities of the Italian-Serbian force in Albania being capable at some time not far distant of threatening trouble on the German communications still farther to the northward.

GERMAN TRENCH JOURNAL PICTURES FATHERLAND IN A GLOOMY LIGHT

Newspaper Found by British Engineer Relates Troubles of Campaign in Russia, Discusses Failure of Submarine Campaign and, Dealing Bitterly with Question of Food and Prices at Home, Declares Belgians Live More Cheaply Than Civilians in Rhine Country.

[Special Dispatch.]

LONDON, January 1.

Evidence that the German malcontents are not confining their efforts to protests in the Reichstag is forthcoming in the shape of a small four-page newspaper printed in Gothic characters, headed with the German eagle and the title Die Feldpost, which has fallen into the hands of a royal engineer near Ypres.

The contents of this production evidently intended to circulate among the German troops, are not calculated to cheer them up.

A front page article is headed "The Coming Winter Campaign" ("Die Kommende Winterfeldzug"), and it gives a lurid outline of the troubles which lie ahead of the German armies in their winter warfare against the Russians.

"As a consequence of the skilful withdrawal of the Russians," it says, "the German troops will have to fight, not only against the Russian generals, but also against the pitiless Field Commander Winter. * * * The warfare that was waged last winter in the flooded districts of the Yser gives only a faint picture of the battles which soon will develop in the swamps of Russia."

Another article deals in an equally discouraging style with the German submarine warfare, declaring that there is considerable disquietude in Germany because so many submarines fail to return to harbor.

"Their opponents know why," observes the writer, "and they also know that Germany possesses fewer submarines today that she did at the beginning of the war, in spite of the fact that in the meantime she has built a large number of them. * * * The English Admiralty has found excellent means of beating off the attacks of German submarines, but it prudently keeps the knowledge to itself. * * * The so-called 'blockade' of England has become more futile than ever. Germany may go on confidently with her submarines sinking unarmed merchant ships and passenger steamers, but she does thereby more damage to herself than to her enemies. * * * She suffers a moral and material loss combined."

Under the heading "The Censor in Germany" a third article gives specific instances of the way in which, it alleges, the German authorities not only suppress unpalatable news but deliberately falsify articles in the press to give to the public an erroneous impression of the state of affairs. Headed "Die Lebensmittelnot infolge Teuerung und Wucher (Dauer) in Deutschland," another article discusses the alarming increase in the cost of living in Germany, giving extracts from German newspapers showing how two divergent explanations are offered by opposing journalistic schools of thought for this serious state of affairs.

One section of the press declares that the cost of food is due to actual shortage, against which any measures taken by the government are ineffectual, while other organs declare there is food enough for the empire, but that the dearness is artificially produced through the usurious profits exacted by the merchants, against whom the government neglects to take drastic action.

From the Kölner Tageblatt is quoted an instructive letter from a German soldier in Belgium, who complains bitterly:—"It is sad, very sad, when we see how the Belgians, in spite of our pomes-sion of their land, live much more cheaply than our dear wives and children at home, and many a father of a family thinks anxiously of his dear ones."

"The excessive prices," asserts this soldier of disagreeable truths, the Feldpost, "actually restrain the consumers from buying as much as they need in order to live properly, and consequently foodstuffs, in spite of their scarcity, are spoiling in the hands of the greedy merchants. This spoiling has assumed such dimensions that—as the Vorwärts openly declares—'there has now developed a trade in spoilt foodstuffs.'"

The same journal is quoted, in commenting on an advertisement of 500 cwt. of meat for sale as cattle food, as making the bitter statement: "While at present huge quantities of meat are everywhere spoiling, which often hardly can be disposed of as cattle food, the people are no longer in a position, owing to the high prices, to be able in many cases to eat sufficient quantities of meat themselves."

The Feldpost writer closes an article with the prediction:—"An extreme shortage in the nourishment of the German people is only a question of time; it is as certain and unescapable as the financial distress."

MARTIAL SPIRIT OF GERMAN WOMEN

[Special Dispatch.]

AMSTERDAM, January 1.

The spirit that actuates the women of Germany is shown by this remarkable letter to a relative:—

"Since my last letter to you Franz has died of his wounds. Now I am left alone with two small children, but, thank God, I am not discouraged, and when I think of what other women have lost I feel that I have no reason to complain.

"How long this war will last Heaven only knows. The streets here are crowded with soldiers, more so than in the beginning of the war, and we are more and more convinced that we will win. In fact we must win, and should it come to the time when every soldier is killed, wounded or taken prisoner we will still fight, for then the women will go to the front. The strength of the weaker sex here would surprise you if you could see it. There are thousands of women like myself who have sacrificed everything they hold dear, and now they stand ready to sacrifice their lives."

HOSPITAL IN FRANCE IS RUN BY WOMEN

[Special Dispatch.]

PARIS, January 1.

"In the Abbey of Royaumont-sur-Oise," says the Paris Figaro, "a section of the British Red Cross Society established in November, 1914, the Scottish Women's Hospital, which has been in continuous operation since then. The entire personnel of the institution consists of women. The directress is Miss Ivens, a Liverpool surgeon, who is assisted by seven women physicians and sixty graduate nurses. There are beds for over two hundred patients in the hospital. Many very difficult operations have been successfully performed by these British women, and the wounded have received excellent care, resulting in speedy convalescence.

"In charge of the hospital's ambulance is Miss Helga Gill, a young girl from Bergen, Norway. Dressed in a military cape and with a chauffeur's cap perched jauntily on her tresses, she runs her ambulance along the rear of the firing line, ready to pick up the wounded as they are being brought out of the trenches."

BRITAIN'S USE OF SEA POWER IS A TOPIC OF DEBATE

[Special Dispatch.]

LONDON, January 1.

It is recorded that Thomas Jefferson once said in regard to the action of the British government of his time that the only way to prophesy what they would do was to ascertain what they ought to do and infer the contrary. There are persons in Great Britain in the present day who assert that this rule still holds good.

The explanations which Mr. Churchill and others in authority have given of the inception of the enterprises which would have been undertaken only with the use of the sea power exerted by the Allies has given rise to considerable criticism among professional men. No more interesting study, indeed, for sea officers, and especially those of the United States Navy, could be afforded than that which concerns the employment of the naval superiority which Great Britain mainly has been able to assert. It is natural that students of naval warfare should compare the incidents and examples of the present conflict at sea with those which occurred when Barham and St. Vincent exercised command, and also with the precepts expounded later by Colomb and Mahan.

From the first day of the war, owing to the relative superiority of the British battle fleet, the Allies obtained the practical control of the sea communications everywhere outside the Baltic. This is demonstrated in the first place by the freedom of action which has been exercised by the war ships of the allied navies, constantly and continually in spite of submarine and mine, and in the second place there has been little hindrance of the streams of mercantile traffic or the transport of millions of troops and munitions of war in the outer seas. It is a striking fact in this connection that Lord Inchcape, the chairman of the P. and O. Company, was able to state last week that the steamships of this line running to the Antipodes and the East have continued during sixteen months of war their regular voyages, with their usual complement of passengers, just as in times of peace, and have been free from loss by enemy action.

With the command of the seas and the control of communications in its hands, the British government had won the first return for the money invested in the fleet. It also had obtained an essential element for the carrying out of expeditions or the exercise of naval power overseas. In two cases it is seen how this power can be exercised to advantage. One is the action of Lord Fisher in using Vice Admiral Sturdee's battle cruisers for the destruction of Admiral von Spee's covering squadron to the commerce raiders. The second occasion was when Admiral Fisher's pupil and colleague, Admiral Jellicoe, used Vice Admiral Beatty's battle cruisers to turn the scale in the affair in the Bight on August 28, 1914.

Apart from the use of a supremacy of naval power to account for the enemy's war ships, there is its employment in connection with amphibious operations. The examples of this form of exercise fall into two categories, those which were carried out with the object of depriving the enemy of his overseas possessions and those which have been undertaken overseas in Europe and the Near East with the purpose of distressing him or weakening his strength by obliging him to dissipate his forces. The former were uniformly successful. The latter have not been so far fruitful of similarly satisfactory results. It is worth while to examine the causes.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

"Old Curmudgeon"

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

Belle Hinckley was an orphan with a fortune.

While she was abroad her guardian wrote her that certain property she owned, the family homestead, could be made valuable for a certain purpose if there were more of it. If the adjoining place could be united with it there would be ample room. Perhaps the union could be effected.

Belle had been abroad two years when this announcement reached her and would receive her property in a few months. She resolved to return to America and look into the matter for herself. On her arrival she learned that the purpose for which the property was wanted was a large manufacturing plant. Those about to establish it had tried to buy the adjoining property, but had failed. After her departure for Europe a man had bought it who wouldn't sell. Belle, who had inherited a business head from her father, saw that he was making a mistake that would involve her as well as himself.

The morning after her arrival she went to the adjoining place to see "Old Wilkinson," as he was called, and try to induce him to sell. As she went up the walk to the house a young man came out to the porch and stood with his hands in his pockets watching the approaching girl.

"Is Mr. Wilkinson in?" she asked.

"No, he is not."

"Can you tell me where I can see him?"

"It is uncertain. Can I be of service to you?"

"I wish to see him with regard to selling his property to the Excelsior Electric works. I own the next place and am interested. The company will not buy unless it can have both places."

"Come in," said the young man, and he led the way into the drawing room. He said he could represent the matter to the owner of the property and invited her to state her case. This she did remarkably well, the young man listening attentively, though he seemed to be so wrapped in admiration of Miss Hinckley that she doubted if he took in all she said. However, after she had finished he promised to represent the matter to the owner in a favorable light. Then he invited her to inspect the place, taking her into the greenhouses and presenting her with some fine American Beauty roses. When she departed he said that as soon as he had anything to report he would call upon her.

Mr. Alexander—that was his name—called two days later and said that, while he had represented the matter as she had given it to him, the owner was still averse to selling. Miss Hinckley asked the young man what reasons had been given for the refusal and was told that no reason whatever had been vouchsafed. He suspected that the owner wished to build on the property himself, or possibly he might be negotiating with other parties.

Belle was very much disappointed. She told the gentleman that but few concerns had the means to purchase so large a property and if the opportunity were not taken advantage of both places would remain as they were, producing no income and paying taxes that would gradually eat them up. The young man said that he would again confer with the owner and endeavor to impress him with this view of the case.

In a few days Mr. Alexander called again to report that he had failed to impress the owner of the property with the reasons Miss Hinckley had brought forth and feared that he had other views for the property. The matter dragged along. The would be purchasers were known to be looking at other sites, and Miss Hinckley was discouraged.

"The only way I know for you to move the old curmudgeon," said Mr. Alexander one day to Belle, "is to marry him. When you have done that you can make him do what you like."

Belle scouted the idea. Indeed, she had taken quite a fancy to this Mr. Alexander, but anyway she wouldn't marry an old man, especially a stubborn one. But she thought of the matter and concluded that she would look the old chap over. Alexander agreed to arrange a meeting, but when he admitted that he could not on the beginning of a matrimonial negotiation Belle balked again; but, receiving an advance on the offer for her property conditional on the purchase of the adjoining estate, she consented. It was arranged that she go the next day to make the call, Mr. Wilkinson having an attack of gout which kept him off his feet.

Miss Hinckley was received at the door by a servant and ushered into the library, where she saw Mr. Alexander sitting in an easy chair with a leg stretched out on a foot rest. But he rose without difficulty and said:

"I am the owner of this property, having bought it the day before your first call here. If you wish me to join you in effecting a sale to these electric men you will have first to promise me to marry me. I have got another bid for both places and can make those parties to whom you wish to sell pay double the amount they have offered, for they must have the site."

Miss Hinckley was quite ready to make the promise, and both deals, the marriage and the real estate, went through readily.

Mrs. Alexander facetiously calls her husband "Old Curmudgeon."

A TRUE ANALYSIS.

No Romance in War—Only Grim Tragedy and Awful Waste.

In the words of a certain officer, war is now "d——a dull, d——n dirty and d——n dangerous." The people of Britain, and no doubt of the other countries—however bravely they may fight—are fighting not because they love it, but because, alas! they must. This makes them the more heroic, since the romance of war for them is past, belonging to cruder stages of the world.

In our consciousness to-day there is a violent divorce between our admiration for the fine deeds, the sacrifices and heroisms of this war, and our feeling about war itself. A shadowy sense of awful waste hangs over it all in the mind of the simplest soldier as in that of the subtlest penman. It may be real that we fight for our existence, and our conceptions of liberty and justice; but we feel all the time that we ought not to have had to fight, that these things should be respected of the nations; that we have grown out of such savagery; that the whole business is a kind of monstrous madness suddenly let loose on the world. Such feelings were never in the souls of ordinary men, whether soldiers or civilians, in the days of Elizabeth or Themistocles. They fought them as a matter of course. In those so-called heroic ages "the thrilling realities of war" were truly the realities of life and feeling. To-day they are but as a long nightmare. We have discovered that man is a creature slowly, by means of thought and life and art, evolving from the animal he was into the human being he will be some day, and in that desperately slow progression sloughing off the craving for physical combat and the destruction of his fellow-man.

This process does not mean the loss of stoicism and courage, but rather the increase thereof, as millions in this war, after the most peaceful century in the world's history, have proved. We are a few paces farther on toward the fully evolved human being than were the compatriots of Themistocles or Elizabeth. That is why the modern pen, save some few atavistic quills, refuses, and will refuse, to identify itself with war, and to wax lyrical and epical thereon.—From Second Thoughts on This War by John Galsworthy, in Scribner.

THOUGHTS FOR THE DAY.

CARRANZA OUSTS RED CROSS WHILE MEXICO STARVES

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—After conducting relief work for several months in Mexico, in response to an appeal from the people of that country, the American Red Cross has recently withdrawn, at the request of Gen. Carranza. This request came just at a time when increased relief funds were available from the American public, including a special appropriation from the Rockefeller foundation.

This request came with assurance from the Mexican government that adequate plans for the relief of suffering were being carried out and that the Red Cross was no longer needed.

In the middle of October, when the Red Cross agent, Charles J. O'Connor, left Mexico City, however, he felt that the situation was serious. He had found that the official record of burials in one cemetery in the early part of August gave starvation as the cause of 8 per cent. of the deaths.

Many Typhus Deaths.

How the lack of food—with the help of typhus—has swelled the death rate may be gathered from the deaths in the federal district. In early October the daily number of deaths was about 200 in a population of about 700,000. The normal number used to be 81, or a death rate of about 40. The death rate in early October was thus in the neighborhood of 180 to 190, or ten times that of New York City.

Conservative estimates place the number of people living on charity in some form as at least 100,000 and probably as high as 200,000. Money of the Constitutionalist government was worth only a small part of its face value, $16,000 being equal to about $1,000 of United States currency.

Industry Paralyzed.

A small loaf of bread sold for $1, a larger loaf for $3, and a cake of soap for $1. Yet wages were paid on substantially the old value—a laborer receiving about $1 a day. Industry was paralyzed and even where jobs could be had it was not surprising that men refused to work at such a wage.

The foresight of Americans and other foreigners had led them to buy large supplies of corn and beans last January. These they used for their families and employees, selling small quantities to the latter at a low price. But for this forehanded action, many office clerks, store salesmen, and factory operatives would have starved. Some employers kept their employees on their pay rolls at much sacrifice.

When the Red Cross agent went from Vera Cruz to Mexico City it was some weeks before supplies could be brought in because of the fighting lines around the city. For the early Red Cross relief, $18,000 was available. With a large part of this money a supply of "chick pea" was purchased. This vegetable is not eaten very much in Mexico, but is exported to Spain, where it is known as garbanza.

Soup Supports Many.

With this supply, which the owner had not been able to export, and with some meat and vegetables, a soup was prepared for distribution through eight stations in various parts of the city and four were distributed daily to 15,000 families.

From all groups in the community the Red Cross received splendid cooperation. As many as 1,000 volunteer investigators from clubs, churches, the foreign colonies and various sorts of organizations, rendered efficient service.

The applications of about 27,000 families were approved and about 14,000 applications were pending. It is estimated that probably 180,000 people needed relief. Such a number could have been kept alive for from $0,000 to $40,000 a month.

Cordial relations were early established with the international charity committee, organized by foreign residents representing seventeen nationalities. The method of this committee was to sell food at low cost, but it had difficulty in obtaining supplies. It was asked by the constitutionalist government to discontinue its work about the time the request was made to the Red Cross.

Mexican Relief Slack.

The relief work of the Mexican government was well planned, but it was not adequately supported. It provided, among other things for the sale of food at low prices from government stores. For lack of supplies these sometimes closed, however, within a few days after they opened or had for sale only part of the articles advertised. Moreover, the poor often did not have the money to buy even at the low price.

At the time of the request to withdraw, the Red Cross, after a period of uncertainty as to whether funds would be supplied by the American people, was planning a renewal of its work on a large scale. The withdrawal necessitated the abandonment of the soup stations, except in a few cases where neighboring committees took them over.

The poor crops of this year point to even greater distress and starvation in the months ahead, and the normal planting was not done owing to the fear of farmers that the soldiers would take everything they could and there would be difficulty in selling produce. The outlook appears to be extremely grave.

The Greatest Naval Harbor of England

"Men-of-war large and small; indefinitely colored transport, laden with troops; and a never-ending line of war-requisitioned freighters, the first naval harbor of the world's greatest naval Power, bearing their reinforcement to all or the troubled zones of Europe, Asia, and Africa," begins a primer on war geography just issued by the National Geographic Society. "The burdens of responsibilities of this English port have grown enormous since the outbreak of the war; for it, like German Kiel, symbolizes the mighty, vital naval effort of a great group of Powers in the greatest war of history.

"Very little has been written about Portsmouth, the war-port; for the labors and planning that have taken places there have been much too important, much too intimately bound up with the hopes and the aims of the Entente Allies, to be trumpeted abroad. A veil of military exclusiveness has been drawn over the fearful stress and turmoil fo Portsmouth, hiding the nature of its giant's tasks, the details of its multitudinous enterprises and the significance of its achievements. One remembers, however that Portsmouth is the chief naval arsenal and port of Britain, the heart of the Allied Powers triumphant rule upon the seas.

"Situated in Hampshire, at a central point in England's southern coast about 74 miles southwest of London, Portsmouth is both sheltered and well-placed to serve the Empire's naval bases, the English port, an aggregate of four towns, possesses a splendid harbor, and one that has been developed as a base for English naval power through more than five centuries. Portsmouth has the more complete and impregnable fortifications in England; for it is a master servecenter in the Empire's life and dominion.

"Portsmouth, Portsea, Landport, and Southsea are the towns which join to form the port, and they are all located on Portsea Island. Portsmouth proper is the garrison town; Portsea is the naval station, with drydocks, great dock-yards, torpedo and gunmounting stores, electrical shops and innumerable subsidiary shops; while Landport is occupied by the home of the artisian. Southsea has enjoyed a steady growth in fame as a fashionable watering place.

"The port is defended by a powerful ring of landward forts, the Portsdown forts and the Hilsen lines; and by the Spithead forts to the seaward. The anchorage of Spithead is roomy enough to ride the great fleets of England, scores of boats safe in the shelter of the Isle of Wight.

"Richard I built the first town there, influenced to his foundation solely by reasons of strategy. The fostering care of King Henry VIII and Queen Elizabeth first brought the port into importance; and its importance as a naval harbor has grown steadily ever since, keeping pace with the growth of the Empire."

MOTHER! DON'T TAKE CHANCES IF CHILD'S TONGUE IS COATED

If Cross, Feverish, Sick, Bilious, Clean Little Liver and Bowels

A laxative to-day saves a sick child to-morrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, Mother! If coated or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," then don't worry because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleansing" is oftimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs" which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company."

DARING DOCTORS DECREE DARLING DIMPLE DEFECT

She dimples very prettily, my mother used to say,
My friends all said they wished that they could dimple, too, that way.
I used to smile, most all the time, but science says that now—
My dimples are defects, and so I cannot smile nohow.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 5.—"Dimpled darlings" are aghast, sad, and sorrowful. They are also angry. And it is all because of "mean" scientific research.

Science, be it known, has decreed that the dimple, sweetest, and most alluring of all beauty marks, is a common, ordinary defect in the anatomy.

Once Symbol of Beauty.

That which in the past has been desired by beauties the country over; that for which actresses and society leaders have been operated upon that they might be called "dimpled," and that because of which men have been known to go "love mad," is now decreed a physical defect.

Dr. Martin Frederick of the city medical staff of Cleveland, O., is the surgeon whose scientific research resulted in spreading sorrow among the country's dimpled beauties. And his opinion is concurred in by Charles H. Whitman, superintendent of the Los Angeles county hospital.

"Milady's dimples," Dr. Frederick has announced, "are defects caused by faulty construction or weaknesses of the cheek muscles."

"I believe Dr. Frederick's finding is correct," said Dr. Whitman.

Girls Will Keep Them.

Miss Gladys Wilson, an attractive pupil of St. Agnes' Academy on West Fifty-Third Street, whose deep dimples bid bad 'cess to the opinion of science, may have solved the deep problem.

"Science never did have anything to do with style and beauty, anyway," said Miss Wilson. "The girls themselves make style. Any girl always will like dimples. So dimples will always be in style."

So there!

ORIGINAL UNCLE TOM DIES.

BEBBINGTON, Vt.—Daniel Worcester, who was known as the original Uncle Tom of the dramatization of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is dead at the Vermont Soldiers' Home at the age of 88 years.

Worcester was said to be the last survivor of a company which produced the drama for the first time in Lowell, Mass., in 1851.

He served in the Civil War as the 9th Connecticut Regiment.

HOW RUSSIAN AND GERMAN PRISONERS ARE EXCHANGED

American Woman Describes Remarkable Spectacle Witnessed By Her on Far Northern Frontier of Sweden and Finland

(By Louise de Wetter.)

Travelling from Petrograd to Stockholm a few days ago, we reached Torneo on the Finnish frontier just as the first exchange of wounded soldiers between Russia and Germany took place. After going through the usual passport formalities, we were allowed to go down to the temporary pier, about which the entire village population had expectantly gathered. Young birch trees decorated the long plank walk on either side, alternating with Russian flags. Below, on the pier, the military band waited with instruments shining in the sun. It might have been a scene set for some joyous festival — save for the mute presence of dozens of stretchers standing in long rows on a green slope.

Silence fell on the waiting people when the first strains of the Russian Anthem pealed forth. Prince Oldenburg, a stately, white-haired old man, walked down the pier with his staff, and Mme. Sazanoff, the President of the Society in charge of the Prisoners' Exchange.

Two barges came slowly across the blue water from the Swedish shore, and we could gradually distinguish the groups of Russian soldiers, their faces turned homeward at last. Finally the boats came alongside the pier. A chill seemed to spread through the watching throng. Slowly and painfully the first pitiful, bandaged creatures hobbled up the long incline.

It was a tragic procession of human wrecks. They all wore what was left of their war-stained uniforms. I saw some with coats still clotted with dried blood, and with holes shot through them. Others had not even a coat. A few carried what was left of their possessions knotted in a handkerchief. People had evidently given them flowers along the road through Sweden, and these they wore tucked in their breast pockets.

Their poor maimed figures were sad enough, but what sent a shudder through one's heart were their faces, white, hollow-cheeked, and many haunted pairs of eyes. Worst of all were those who seemed to see nothing and to be past feeling.

It is ghastly to see men so weary of life that their faces are blank, as though already their spirits hung dead within them.

Not a whisper passed through the crowds save a sigh when some tragic creature was carried past, often with both legs amputated far above the knee, with both sleeves empty, or with part of his poor face shot clean away.

Men beside us, tanned and hearty, sobbed as they watched, and the women were white, with terror in their eyes, though in their country all is peaceful still. No military duty yet awaits their men, and this procession of one human wreck after another was their first vision of the world-war.

Finally the last stretcher had been slowly carried by and all the carts had rolled away toward the improvised reception hall near the railroad. There board tables, strewn with flowers, a long bench running on either side, awaited the men. Between two windows stood an altar, flanked by groups of young birch trees and garlanded with flowers. Many lighted tapers flickered before the picture of some well-loved saint. Two aged priests, with long white hair and gorgeous brocaded robes, chanted prayers and swung incense burners.

Through the blue, perfumed haze I saw hundreds of wounded sitting, with hands folded and gazing at the shrine with tear-blinded eyes. What gladness and what sadness lay in these first moments of their homecoming!

Then came food—real home food at last—such as they had only dreamed of for months and months. Some ate like ravenous beasts and some were so weak and ill that they barely tasted the food which nurses tried to give them, a spoonful at a time.

A great moment came when the old Prince, his face working with emotion, led the cheers for Emperor and country. Loud and long and thrilling they rang out above the music of the anthem.

After the ceremonies were over we were presented to His Imperial Highness the Prince, and were invited to luncheon. This was a most interesting experience, also, as these few hours spent in this company gave us a glimpse of the real Russian spirit. They were all full of courage and of the hope of ultimate victory. Finally we we obliged to say good-bye, and they kindly sent us across the river by a special boat in time for our train.

On arriving at Haperanda, on the Swedish side, a card of introduction gave us an entree to the Swedish Red Cross train. It was filled with German wounded returning from Russia after eight months of imprisonment.

The contrast between them and the 250 Russians sent by Germany was startling. Russia had provided these men with new, warm suits of clothing and they were a bright-eyed, well-fed looking lot in spite of their amputations and bandaged heads.

We spoke with dozens of them as we passed through car after car of the wonderfully equipped train. All of them said they had been well treated and had had plenty of food. One could see that without their own testimony. What a contrast they were to the pitiful, half-starved creatures on the other shore of the river! We talked to many of the Russian boys, and one and all had only this to say: "We were always hungry!"

On arriving at Stockholm we were greatly interested in comparing the Russian and German accounts in the newspapers.

We read one German article which was supposed to have been written by an eye-witness. He calmly stated that the Russians were well-cared for, well-fed looking lot, full of praise for the German treatment they had received! Further comment is unnecessary, save that the Swedish Government has complained to Germany of the condition in which the Russians are sent out.

Sweden has requested that they be supplied with clean and sufficiently warm clothing. This would seem almost unnecessary to ask, in view of the fact that their road lies within twenty miles of the Arctic Circle at Torneo, and even those who have not been there know how cold that part of the world is, even in summer.

A Real Flesh Builder For Thin People

Thin men and women—that big, hearty filling dinner that you ate last night! What became of all the fat producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is that you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of this people the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are probably sadly out of gear, and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and fussy sawdust diets. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating and eat with every one of these a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Let the scales be the judge. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay-there" fat may be the result. Sargol aims to change weak, stagnant blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles—to give the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, too, mixes with your food, to prepare it for the blood in an easily assimilated form. Thin people tell how they have gained all the way from 10 to 25 pounds a month while taking Sargol and say that the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a careful combination of six of the most assimilative elements known to chemistry. They come forty tablets to the package, are pleasant, harmless and inexpensive, and all druggists in this vicinity sell them, subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in every large package.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid.

Y.W.C.A. 50 YEARS OLD ON MARCH 3 MONTH OF JUBILEE

March 3, 1916, will mark the fiftieth birthday anniversary of the National Young Women's Christian association. The whole month of February has been designated as Jubilee month and the association in the United States will have fitting celebrations during that time. There are three days that all the association will observe simultaneously. Membership day, on Feb. 1; Pioneer day, on Feb. 7; the fifteen birthday service, on March 3.

The first city association in the United States was started by thirty women in Boston in 1866. They opened downtown rooms with Miss Mary Foster as general secretary. The work consisted of religious meetings, educational classes, and an employment bureau.

A border in the Boston boarding home gave the first physical instruction in 1871. Cooking classes were opened in this same association in 1879. The first student association was formed in Normal, Ill., in 1873.

First Year Fruitful.

The years between 1886 and 1906 were very fruitful and showed many "first" things undertaken. The first girls' branch was started; the first national traveling secretary began her work; the student volunteer movement came into existence; the Travelers' Aid department was organized; Philadelphia erected the first student association building in 1886; the first national publication, the Young Women's Christian Association Quarterly, came from the press in 1890; Kansas City, Mo., opened the first cafeteria in 1891.

In 1891 the first summer conference was held at Bay View, Mich. The World's Young Women's Christian association was organized in 1894.

The greatest landmark of 1906 was the sending of American secretaries to the foreign field. One secretary went to China, another opened Y. W. C. A. work in Japan, and a student secretary went to India.

Members Number 459,415.

The Young Women's Christian association is the largest organization of women in the world, and it is interesting, by means of a few statistics, to trace the growth of the national branch through the fifty years.

There was one city association in 1866, to-day there are 245 with a membership in Bible classes is 47,835, secretaries on the employed staff. The enrollment, in Bible classes is 47,835, with another 23,045 in mission study classes. There are 459,415 girls and young women in the educational department; in 125 associations there are 9,635 members of cooking classes; 389,496 attended classes of physical instruction. Since 1866 over 6,500 volunteers have sailed for foreign fields.

There are 721 students associations with a membership of 66,190; there are 97 student secretaries. The county associations one of the largest steps on the road to progress, number fifteen.

Let's Talk It Over.

An able lawyer and thoughtful man is the Hon. Reynolds R. Kinkade of the Ohio Court of Appeals. From him comes this suggestion: "That the competency of a man to make a will be decided before his death instead of afterwards." Concretely, a man wanting to make a will would go before a judicial tribunal—say the usual Probate Court—which should take evidence as to his competency and make findings which should be forever binding. This would do away with the expensive and tedious lawsuits which occur sometimes a score of years after the will is made and at a time when the best possible evidence, namely, the maker of the will, has long been under the ground. The certifications of this judicial tribunal would be final. Is there not in this a complete analogy to those proceedings of public officials which validate certain bond issues and so certify the bonds? Certainly it is a suggestion worthy of discussion on the part of lawyers.—Colliers.

German Excuses For Cavell Crime

Deadness of Soul Shown by Von Bissing in Discussing Case.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The World publishes the report of an interview between its staff correspondent, Karl K. Kitchen, and Baron Von Bissing military governor of Belgium, which is commented upon here as an astonishing exposure of the German deadness of soul. Mr. Kitchen in his report of the interview writes:

Gov. Von Bissing, the military governor of Belgium, whom I saw in his office overlooking the gardens near the Palais Royale, was also most polite and solicitous for my welfare. He greeted me with the most democratic of handshakes, and before I could begin interviewing him he was interviewing me.

"So you came to Brussels to write about the Cavell case? That is very interesting," he went on before I could interrupt him. "You did not find traveling difficult, did you? And Brussels in not much changed, is it? I suppose you have been here before?" After I had reassured him on these points he said:

"The Cavell woman was found guilty of the offence of aiding English, French and Belgian soldiers to escape from Belgium. In times of war this offence is punishable by death in all countries. The Cavell woman was accordingly executed.

"I may add that she was not a young woman who did not realize what she was doing. She was a woman of 50, strong-willed and determined to carry out her dangerous work at all costs. These are the facts in the case. It was necessary for you to come to Brussels to learn this."

"But the entire civilized world is interested in the case," I protested.

"I cannot understand why," he replied frankly. "With all the thousands of innocent people who have died in the war, why should anyone become hysterical over the death of one guilty woman?"

"Because she was a woman," I interrupted.

"Exactly," agreed his Excellency.

"Why was it necessary to execute her? Couldn't she have been placed in prison?" I asked.

"I am glad you ask this," he replied, drawing his chair closer to his large flat-top desk, which was covered with papers, books and several photographs in silver frames. "This Cavell woman was guilty of a very serious offence. According to her own admission she aided 120 men of military age, English, Belgian and French to escape from Belgium. Many of these men are now fighting with the enemy—naturally the case was not one to be overlooked.

"A few years in prison is not sufficient punishment for an offence of this kind. For punishment in a case nature is meted out to deter others from committing the same offence. If the Cavell woman had been sent to prison she would have been released in two or three years—at the end of the war. Amnesty is usually granted to all prisoners convicted of offences of this nature, espionage and so forth, when peace is made.

Part of Big Spy System.

"We have only recently uncovered a big spy system here in Belgium. Important military matters have been communicated to the enemy for some time, I will not go into details, but I will say that this Cavell woman was aware of their activities—had guilty knowledge of much of their work. Such a system of spying assails our very safety and we proceeded to stamp it out.

"The Cavell woman was not charged with espionage. The charge of aiding the enemy's soldiers to escape which was made against her was sufficiently serious. Her death was deplorable—but I do not see why it should occasion such hysteria in America. In England—yes. There are many hysterical persons in England, and England is at war with Germany."

I informed his Excellency that many people in Berlin—even high officials—regarded the execution as a political blunder in view of the delicate situation in Belgium.

"Very interesting, very interesting," he commented. "Some people make mountains out of molehills," he went on, adding, "and sometimes what appears to be a molehill turns out to be a mountain."

I did not ask if his Excellency referred to the case we were discussing. But he must have divined my thoughts.

"You have all the facts you desire about the case?" he asked.

I replied in the affirmative.

"Then let me wish you a pleasant journey back to America," said his Excellency, rising and offering me his hand. "If I may be of any service to you, command me."

As I was leaving his office he called to me: "Please present my compliments to your Minister, Mr. Whitlock. He is held in the highest esteem by all of us."

A moment later I was on my way down the stairs to the bright sunshine of the street.

WOMEN REPLACE MEN.

Will Do Work of 150,000 British Government Clerks.

Women are to take the place of 150,000 clerks employed by the government, who will be released for active service. Preference will be given to the wives and sisters of the recruits in filling the vacancies. There are over 300,000 government clerks employed in England and Wales alone who are of military age, but part of them are physically unfit for the army and others have a specialized knowledge of their work that makes them invaluable in their departments.

The women clerks, after a short training course, will receive the wages of the men whose places they take. Classes for training in shorthand, typewriting, bookkeeping and clerical methods have already been formed in London, Manchester and other cities.

Wounded soldiers and sailors discharged as unfit for further services are also preparing themselves for work as government clerks in large numbers.

WITHDRAW FROM SUEZ.

Diversion of Dutch Liners Will Reduce the Canal Revenues.

The withdrawal of the Dutch liners from the Suez Canal to the East Indies, which goes into effect January 1st, will mean another considerable falling off in the revenues of the canal. In 1914 vessels of Dutch nationality held third place, both as regards numbers and tonnage. Great Britain was first with 3,000 vessels of 18,000,000 tons; Germany came second with 480 vessels of 2,100,000 tons, and Holland third with 380 vessels of 1,400,000 tons.

The official reason given for the diversion of the Dutch boats is "the increasing uncertainty of being able to obtain the necessary coal at the oppointed stations" but shipping men in London think that the decision was more likely due to German submarine activity in the Mediterranean ports, there is no shortage in the supply. The price for January at Port Said will be about $25 per ton, as compared with $6.50 begore the war, but, owing to the withdrawal of many vessels which used the Suez route in normal times, the reserves at the coaling stations are very large.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorder.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Cures Biliousness Prevents Brights Disease

The Certified Statement of One Has Proven the Efficiency of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Colin M. Kiel, Craighurst, Simcoe county, Ontario, writes: "My mother and I have both used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with great satisfaction. We find that there is nothing to equal them as a prompt cure for torpid liver, biliousness and indigestion. Some years ago my mother came near to death from kidney trouble and has to be careful in preventing Bright's disease. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills occasionally she keeps the kidneys healthy and active. Another point favourable to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills is that they do not gripe and yet accomplish good results. You are at liberty to use my letter."

This statement is endorsed by Mr. Marmaduke Caston, Justice of the Peace, who writes: "This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. Colin M. Kiel and believe his statement regarding Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

If you are interested in this case, write to Mr. Kiel, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify his statement. We like to have people to do this, for we are very careful to only use statements from responsible persons.

Should this case not be similar to yours, write to us for the statement of some one whose trouble was along the same lines. We have thousands of letters to choose from. Or better still, put the Kidney-Liver Pills to the test right away. They will only cost you a quarter and a box lasts for some time.

GREEK ISLAND OCCUPIED SAYS BERLIN

Labour Opposition To The Conscription Bill Lessening

Reassuring Size of the Government's Majority on the First Reading Offset the Anti-Conscriptionist Vote of the Labour Congress---Parliament Will Not Sit Until Monday---200 Lives Lost When Italian Vessel Struck Mine

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, Jan. 7.—The political situation to-day was calmer after the overwhelming vote secured by the Government in the House of Commons Thursday night on the first reading of its compulsion bill. The reassuring size of the Government's majority in the lower House of Parliament offset to a considerable degree the anti conscriptionist vote of the Labour Congress which also was partly discounted by the attitude of such important Labour leaders as Arthur Henderson, who resigned as President of the Board of Education, and John Ward, George Nicoll Barnes, and John Hodge, members of the House of Commons.

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—Anglo-French troops have occupied the Greek Island of Milos, according to Athens despatches to-day, which reported the Greek public indignant over the seizure.

PARIS, Jan. 7.—The Montenegrin Consulate to-night issued a statement to the effect that an Italian steamer from Brindisi, with 425 recruits from the United States and several hundred tons of foodstuffs, ran onto a mine yesterday near San Juan de Medua and was sunk. Two hundred of the passengers perished.

BERLIN, Jan. 8.—Max Harden, whose paper has been suspended, belonged to a school of German editors utterly opposed to militarism and Prussianism. In December, 1911, he prophesied that Germany would be tangled up in a disastrous war with Britain and other powers unless she changed the Government to one that was representative of the people. He said the Reichstag was merely an ornament, and under it was responsible ministry. Harden's weekly paper, which has just been suspended, had an enormous circulation.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 8.—The Ford peace party arrived in Holland from Copenhagen to-day by a special train through Germany. They received most considerate treatment while travelling across German soil.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 8.—The Bourse Gazette to-day prints a sensational story of a narrow escape from death by Emperor William during a flight in a Zeppelin airship over Warsaw. The statement says the crew and officers of the airship were especially rewarded for having saved the Emperor's life during the flight at the front.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—In Germany's latest communication concerning the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye, that country makes a concession that the mere placing of non-combatants in lifeboats when the prize is to be destroyed is not under all conditions to be considered assuring safety. The German note says that "persons on board a vessel may not be ordered into lifeboats except when the weather condition of the sea and proximity of land afford absolute certainly that the boats will reach the nearest port.

TOKIO, Jan. 8.—Yuan Shi Kai, who recently accepted the throne of China, has suffered a stroke of apoplexy and is in a serious condition.

Yuan Shi Kai was born in 1859, the son of a district governor in the Province of Honan. He served in Corea as Secretary with the army, and rose rapidly. Yuan Shi Kai, on December 11 accepted the throne of China after serving for nearly three years as the President of the Chinest Republic, at the request, he said, of representatives of the Chinese people.

56,081 BOOKS ISSUED DURING THE PAST YEAR

Annual Report of Public Library Shows a Steady Increase in Circulation and in the Number of the Visitors

GRATIFYING FIGURES

At the meeting of the Public Library Board on Thursday, the librarian Mr. F. M. DelaFosse, presented his annual report, as follows:

Dear Sir,—I beg herewith to present my report on the work accomplished in the Library during the past year.

The year has been a very satisfactory one in every way. The circulation has shown a steady increase and visitors to the reading rooms, to the juvenile reading tables and to the reference department have been constantly growing in numbers. It is a pleasure to add that everything has gone harmoniously and that the work of the members of the staff and of the janitor has been painstaking and efficient.

During the year the Red Cross Society and King's Daughters applied for rooms for the prosecution of their work and were allotted space for that purpose. They have expressed themselves as being well pleased with the accommodation accorded them by the Library Board, and I may add, that their entry into the building has not proved in any way a drawback to the regular work of the Library.

784 tickets were issued during the year, 633 to the adults and 171 to juveniles. The total number of tickets issued since the Library was opened now amounts to 5,475.

The following statement shows the number of books issued, the figures for 1914 being placed side by side for comparison:

	1915	1914	Inc.	Dec.
Fiction	46416	45203	1213
Biography	964	690	264
Philosophy	326	317	9

History	1048	906	142
Magazines	890	663	236
	56081	53479	2786	184

Increase over last year, 2602.

The total number of juvenile books taken out during the year, the figures of which are included in the above statement, was 8,012, an increase of 2,498 over the preceding year.

In the course of the year 1,222 books were added to the Library, 288 of these were juvenile books.

Their classification is as follows.

	Adult.	Juvenile.
General works	73
Fiction	414	156
Biography	60	17
Philosophy	13	3
Religion	13	2
Sociology	81	39

	934	288

132 books were presented to the Library by various donors, amongst them being Messrs. O'Dell, W. R. Morris, J. F. Harvey, Miss Roberts and Capt. Burnham, M.P., to whom the library is indebted for much friendly consideration and valuable help in regard to government publications.

381 volumes were worn out and have had to be retired. 280 of these were adult reading matter. Of the whole total 366 were works of fiction.

The museum has continued to draw large numbers of visitors to the building who otherwise would probably not have entered its doors. It has thus been in a very real sense a most valuable help in making more widely known the many ways in which the Library is being made use of by the public.

The repair department of the Library has had a very busy year, about 5,000 volumes having had to be attended to in one way or another. The cost, as will be seen by the statement, has been considerably less than last year.

I regret to have to add that as in other years there have been several cases of mutilation and theft of books and magazines. Nothing of any great value has, however, been taken.

In conclusion, I beg to thank the Board on behalf of the staff and of myself, for the kindness and consideration extended to us during the year I remain

Yours respectfully,
F. M. Dela Fosse.

ENJOYABLE TIME AT OPENING OF THE NEW CLUB FOR SOLDIERS

Recreation Rooms on Simcoe Street Thrown Open to the Men of the 93rd Last Night--Promotions Announced in To-day's Orders---Pte. Bruce Mills Returning From the Front--To-day's Military News.

Last evening the members of the 93rd Battalion were entertained by the Otonabee Chapter of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire, the occasion being the formal opening of the new club rooms on Simcoe street. Hon. Major J. C. Davidson, chaplain of the 93rd Battalion, in a few brief remarks said that Mr. A. E. Coulthard, representing the Speakers' Patriotic League was present to formally hand over the club rooms to Lieut.-Col. T. J. Johnston, Officer Commanding the 93rd Battalion. This Mr. Coulthard did during the course of a few well-chosen remarks. Lieut.-Col. Johnston in accepting the gift thanked the Speakers' Patriotic eague as well as the Otonabee Chapter of the I.O.D.E., for the interest manifested in the Battalion. He said that the five hundred mark had been reached, and he hoped that another five hundred men of the same calibre would be secured to complete the strength of the Battalion. The record of the 93rd was second to none.

No Regrets.

His Worship Mayor Buller followed with a few remarks of a valedictory nature. He said it was practically his last night as Mayor of the City of Peterborough. After nine years in the City Council first as alderman, then as mayor, he was about to retire. He felt no regrets and assured the members of the 93rd Battalion of his continued interest and support. He always had a soft spot in his heart for the local military interests and would still continue to assist in every way possible. Peterborough as a military centre had a record to be proud of.

Major Davidson concluded this portion of the programme by issuing a general invitation to those present to enjoy themselves and make the evening as informal as possible. Miss Laura Logan contributed a violin solo which was well received. Miss Dorothy Allan followed with that well known patriotic song, entitled, "Somewhere in France." She responded to an encore. The members of the 93rd participated in the chorus. Later in the evening several other numbers were rendered including a song by Lieut. Raymond ad a reading by Mr. Hunter.

The girls of the Junior Chapter acted as waitresses and supplied the members with refreshments. The room are a credit to those responsible for their creation. They are appropriately decorated and have such facilities as might be required.

Mr. Manley Peever, Queen's medical student, who recently enlisted with the Queen's artillery unit, has been transferred to the medical corps and leaves for overseas service on January 31st.

The Methodist section of the 93rd Battalion will attend the service at the George street Methodist church tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

This will be printed, and the 59th, 80th, 109th, 93rd and other battalions will be asked to send teams to the city for each contest. The new band of the 146th will be available for this date, and there will be no admission fee to the armouries. The contests will be conducted in the afternoon and evening and several boxing bouts will take place at night. The meeting is promoted purely in the interests of entertaining the soldiers in the city.

WILL BE EFFECTED MORE QUIETLY THAN EXPECTED

GEN. HAMILTON'S EXPEDITION THE GREATEST FIASCO

In History, Says Ashmead Bartlett, the Noted War Correspondent, Who Was the Credited British Reporter at the Dardanelles

EMPIRE STANDS AGHAST

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—"On the grave of Erasmus W. Basle is written the significant word 'Terminus.' Is it not time that the same word is written over the career and writings of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton?"

This was the comment of Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, the noted war correspondent, who was the officially credited British correspondent in the Dardanelles, in summing up a critical analysis of Gen. Hamilton's report on the Dardanelles operations.

"A foolhardy expedition headed by woefully weak officers — the monumental fiasco of history," was another comment used by Ashmead Bartlett. He was an eyewitness to practically all the principal operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

Britain Stands Aghast.

"The British Empire stands aghast at what Gen. Hamilton's report reveals," he said. "I am unable to conceive the extent of public feeling should the mothers and fathers who sacrificed their sons become fully aware of what happened at Gallipoli."

"The Gallipoli campaign failed because it ought never to have been undertaken under such conditions and in such a country," said Ashmead Bartlett.

"Troops were sent to attack positions which no General acquainted with modern warfare would have attempted to attack. Sir Ian Hamilton's attempt to make out that his strategical plan almost succeeded is absolute nonsense.

"Why did the Australian force suffer 12,000 casualties and never reach its objective? A few Ghurkas actually reached the summit of Chanak Bair which is only one of the lower ridges leading up to Sari Bair and Koja Chemen Tepe, the real objective.

Allies' Positions Untenable.

"The losses were so terrible in these attacks that even if the troops had reached the highest ridges, which they never did, it would have been utterly impossible for them to maintain themselves. They could have been driven off by even a mild counter attack.

"Sir Ian Hamilton may hope to deceive the general public. But he can not hope to deceive those who were on the spot and know.

"He may try and put the blame on Gen. Stopford, but the real burden of responsibility rests upon his own shoulders and on those of his Chief of Staff.

"Why were inexperienced troops employed for the first landing at Suvlu Bay when two Australian brigades or even the 29th Division which they did not fail to call upon later, could have been utilized for this purpose?

"Why were thousands of lives thrown away in an abortive attack on the front of the Achi Baba, in what was supposed to be a feint attack?

2,300 Australians Wasted.

"Why were 2,500 men of the 1st Australian Division sent to their doom to win the useless position of Lone Pine?

"Why were thousands of more lives thrown away in useless attacks from Quinn's, Pope's and Courtney's posts, which had nothing whatever to do with the main operation?

"Why, if his objective was to get astride the peninsula, did Gen. Hamilton throw the main weight of his attack against the side of Koja Chemen Tepe, in an impossible country, when apparently his real objective was to seize Anafarta Hill?

"Why was there no control from headquarters of the operations at Suvla Bay?

"How could Gen. Stopford get his men forward when they were split up and lost in a broken country without water and without telephones? They were so greatly harassed by enemy snipers that no orderly could have carried a message, even if there had been a horse ashore to put him on.

"Apart from all these considerations there is no reason to suppose that even the capture of Anafarta Hill and Koaj Chemen Tepe would have brought about the fall of the Narrows or have cleared the way to Constantinople.

Although Conscription Bill is the Toughest Job Mr. Asquith Has Had to Negotiate Says T. P. O'Connor.

REVIEW OF THE WEEK

(Copyright 1916, Central News, by T. P. O'Connor.)

LONDON, Jan. 8. — The crisis arising from the Government's decision to impose compulsion upon single men who have not enlisted voluntarily diverts, temporarily the attention of the country from the operations of the army in the field. The indications are that this revolutionary departure from British traditions will be affected much more quietly than was anticipated. So far only Minister Simon has left the Cabinet on account of the decision and though other resignations are talked of, Mr. Asquith is confident that these resignations may be avoided.

Mr. Asquith's dexterity as a smoother is extraordinary and though this is the toughest job he has ever had to negotiate, the probability is that he will succeed.

Nor is the opposition throughout the country as great as there was reason to fear. The great bulk of his own followers is standing by the Premier, while the Labourites, wherefrom the principal opposition was expected, are considerably divided. The scheme of compulsion as proposed is of a very limited character, affecting, probably not more than 200,000 men, and but for the fact of the abandonment of the voluntary principle, whereon England has justly prided herself, the volume of opposition would be considerably smaller than it is.

A satisfactory feature of the situation is the exclusion of Ireland, for any attempt to apply compulsion to that country would meet with fierce opposition from the Irish party in Parliament, and the forcible resistance of Ireland itself.

This fact is recognized by all parties who besides gratefully appreciate the magnificent services already rendered by the Irish regiments in the field.

The only people who are against the exclusion of Ireland are the extreme conscriptionists, and the followers of Sir Edward Carson, who were hoping to make political capital by posing as being more earnest in war than were the Nationalists.

This attitude is thoroughly dishonest, for it is notorious that conscription is quite as unpopular in Ulster, especially in the rural districts, as it is in the rest of Ireland. Despite exclusion the Nationalists are opposing the bill, first because it is against conscription principles, and second because they feel it their duty to support the British voluntarists, who are among Ireland's best friends.

The central fact of the situation, however, is that the substantial unity of the Kingdom is maintained and whether the bill passes as it at present stands, or as is more likely, in a modified form, the whole country will press forward as one man until victory is assured.

The only important fighting of the week so far reported, has been in Bukowina, where the Russians have made a notable advance resulting in the capture of Czernowitz. Whether this is the beginning of the great Russian offensive may be doubted, but it is gratifying evidence that the armies of the Russians are rapidly gathering strength.

The movement which has ended in the formation of an Inter-Parliamentary Committee of the French and British Chambers, owed its inception to a very remarkable Frenchman, who is already well known in France, and is beginning to be well known in England. Many things pointed him out as the chief agent in carrying out such a scheme His father was a friend of Victor Hugo—shared his political opinions, including of course intense and irreconcilable hostility to the Empire of Louis Napoleon; and like Victor Hugo

A STEADY GROWTH.

The annual report of Mr. F. M. DelaFosse, Librarian of the Peterborough Public Library, which is published to-day, makes pleasant reading inasmuch as the report indicates a steady increase in the circulation of books and in the number of visitors, showing that the citizens are coming to a proper appreciation of the valuable asset they have in the Public Library. It is interesting to note that 9,603 more books were issued this year than last year, and that the increase has not been altogether in the fiction department. During the year, too, 1,282 books have been added to the library. The report indicates that the library has been well conducted and is growing more popular month by month.

SIR JOHN THOMPSON'S SON.

John Thompson, K.C., of Ottawa has for months past devoted his time gratuitously to the direction of the War Contracts Enquiry under Sir Charles Davidson. Now he has enlisted for overseas service. If this patriotic son of a noble father comes home safely from the war, this country, which needs such faithful servants, should keep its eye on him.—Montreal Star.

MARTIANS AND GERMANS.

The feeling of disgust entertained towards the Hun by all the non-Hun world might be compared to the peculiar loathing and shrinking which H. G. Wells relates to have been provoked by the Martians in their invasion of our earth, says the London Advertiser. Scores of thousands who have read that early and popular story of our greatest living novelist, "The Martians," will remember the utterly scientific, intellectual and machine like character ascribed to the invaders from Mars, their altogether non-moral though systematic procedure wasp-like purpose and superhuman organization, as they came down, not like men nor like "a wolf on the fold,' but 'like a tidal wave of soldier ants. Stricken humanity, appalled shuddered, and the flesh crept. It was as though they had to fight with spectres, vampires and foully unclean spirits, something uncannily alien. Such is our feeling towards the Germans to-day. The murderers of Miss Cavell are not human; they are non moral; they are ghastly vampires, at least as organized by the junkers. On a signal of command, they do anything. What to us is dishonor is to them a boast, done deliberately officially and with blaspheming words of religion. Such a people are to us the denizens of another planet. They belong to Mars.

GERMANY' WANING CREDIT.

That the financial world is evidently of opinion that the Teutonic empires are approaching economic exhaustion is indicated by the continued fall in the exchanges on their capitals and the bargain counter prices to which their bonds have been reduced.

Checks for reichmarks payable at sight in Berlin were quoted in New York at the end of September around eighty-four cents for four marks, the mint parity of that sum being 96.2 cents of United States money. At the close of last week the rate had declined under seventy-six cents.

The imperial German five per cents., which in September were offered in New York by Messrs. Zimmerman & Forshay at $210 for a bond of 1,000 marks, have been successively reduced until now they are advertised by the same banking firm offering them at $198, exclusive of most Aprils' coupons. As the parity of 1,000 marks is $238, the depreciation in the bonds is enormous.

Austrian currency and credit as measured in the rates of exchange and the reduction in her third war loan five and one-half per cents., have undergone even greater deterioration. Sight bills, payable in crowns—nominal parity 20.3 cents—are offered the American money centre at 19.95, a discount of more than thirty per cent. As one financial critic points out, the exchanges and depreciated Teutonic government securities tell the tale.

TOO MANY UNFIT.

Between twenty-five and thirty per cent. of the men of military age who have offered themselves for enlistment have been rejected in this city, despite the fact that some of the original restrictions have been relaxed, says the Toronto Mail and Empire. This is evidence enough that there might well be a further relaxation, for it is difficult to believe that one-quarter of the male population, not disqualified by age, or by obvious defects which would prevent a man from offering himself, is unfit for military service. We may be sure that one-quarter of the German and Austrian population, of similar age, has not been rejected, and the Germans and Austrians have had as hard fighting to do as any others. Indeed, since up to the present time the initiative has been largely theirs, we may assume that their operations have made even greater demands upon the endurance of their soldiers than have ben made upon the Allies. In Canada alone there have been hundreds, if not thousands, of enthusiastic young men who, having been once rejected, have trained themselves into fitness or have subjected themselves to medical treatment which has enabled them to appear again, and this time to pass the test. It ought to be the duty of the Government to provide the medical treatment that will enable an unfit recruit to join the ranks. This matter ought not to be left to the recruit, who may he without the means of securing the attention he requires.

The discovery that at least one-quarter of the male population is sufficiently defective to warrant rejection by medical officers at a time when men are so urgently needed ought, when the war is over, to prove a great stimulus to State supervision of the public health. Government will probably recognize that it is even more important to the State than to the individual that he shall not have flat feet, varicose veins or some other little "out" which gives little or no trouble to the victim thereof but which unfits him for doing his duty to the State in time of war. The medical care of children, which now begins in the Public schools, ought to be continued in after years or as long as a citizen remains of military age. Periodic examinations by competent doctors employed by the State would probably increase by ten or twenty per cent. the number of men available to bear arms for their country. Above all, the discovery that so many young men are physically incapacitated for military service should lead to the establishment of a national service system, under which every youth and young man would get the great personal and public benefit of good outdoor training. That would make strong men of the weaklings and put every man in condition for defensive service.

DREARY STRETCH IN MESOPOTAMIA

"The country between Bagdad and Basra on the Tigris, in which stretch of Mesopotamia the British expeditionaries and the Turks have carried on a varying campaign for months, is as cheerless as any that could be imagined, dreary, flat, sun-glazed plains and vast, desolate swamps," according to a statement on war geography just given out by the National Geographical Society.

"The Tigris pursues a lazy course through these tedious lowlands. To the right and left stretch barren plains of baked clay as far as the eye can reach, offering no advantages for defence. The reed-choked swamps lie in between, while the dull brown Arab villages straggle through plain and swamp alike, with indifferent impartiality as to the disadvantages of both.

"World-wearied flocks and occasional Arabs constitute the sole life of the lower Tigris plain. The shimmering heat frets the clay soil with deep cracks in every direction, and makes the thick yellow river appear like a stream of molten metal. This is the southern end of the Mesopotamia, down to the junction of the Tigris and the Euphrates at Shat-el-Arab, whence mile after mile of dreary marsh takes the place of the dreary plains. Throughout the marsh-country, communication between villages is carried on by means of rush boats. In the springtime of Mesopotamia's history, it was all a garden land, a country compelling the stranger's admiration for its fruitfulness and beauty.

"Kut-el-Amara, well down the river, was, at least for this region, a thriving port before the war, and large shipments of grain were sent from here. This surplus grain was grown in abundance somewhere on the apparently arid plains, which, if irrigated once more as in ancient times, might be an agricultural supply spot for the leading markets of the world. The old canals, which carried water to the plains, have fallen into decay, and, in most cases, their markings have been levelled by time beyond all recognition. Basra lies about five hours by boat below the junction of the two rivers, and it has been the principal port of lower Mesopotamia for centuries. To-day, this city forms the base of the British Expedition, the Calais or Salonika of fighting in the south."

BALLAD OF FRENCH RIVERS.

Christopher Morley, in New York Times.

Of streams that men take honour in
The Frenchman looks to three,
And each one has for origin
The hills of Burgundy;
And each has known the quivers
Of blood and tears and pain—
O gallant bleeding rivers,
The Marne, the Meuse, the Aisne.

Says Marne: 'My poplar fringes
Have felt the Prussian tread,
The blood of brave men tinges
My banks with lasting red,
Let others ask due credit,
But France has me to thank,
Von Kluck himself has said it:
I turned the Boche's flank"

Says Meuse: "I claim no winning,
No glory on the stage,
Save that, in the beginning,
I strove to save Liege.
Alas that Frankish rivers
"Should share such shame as mine—
In spite of all endeavours
I flow to join the Rhine!"

Says Aisne: "My silver shallows
Are salter than the sea,
The woe of Rheims still hallows
My endless tragedy,
Of rivers rich in story
That run through green Champagne,
In agony and glory,
The chief am I, the Aisne."

Now there are other waters
That Frenchmen all hold dear—
The Rhine, with many daughters,
That runs so fev clear;
There's Moselle, deep and winy,
There's Loire, Garonne and Seine,
But, oh, the valiant, tiny
Marne and Meuse and Aisne!

FOORING SEA WITH CONCRETE.

With her neighbors all flying at one another's throat, little Holland quietly keeps on with a century-old fight of her own—her struggle with Neptune. Every attempt of the ocean monarch to occupy more of Dutch soil is met with some ingenious defensive device. The very latest is a concrete pavement laid on the bed of the sea itself. Some years ago, we are told by W. J. L. Kiehl, in The Scientific American (New York, November 27), it was discovered on the coast of the island of Schouwen in Zeeland, that although the dykes remained intact, the waters oozed up in the dike-protected polders; the sea was undermining the land, and this undermining process began far out from the coast under the waters. The water ate into the land until the dykes, having lost their foundation, toppled over. Says Mr. Kiehl.

"It was the engineer of the Department of Waterways for Schouwen, Mr. Yonk Heer (Yonk Heer is a title of nobility) de Mur-t, who devised a means of defence against these inroads. He caused the sea-bottom itself, where is sloped away seaward from the foot of the dyke, to be strengthened by laying over it a flooring of concrete. Such a flooring is in reality a sort of 'mat' composed of blocks of concrete, each one metre (39.37 in hes) square. Every such 'mat' weighs 200,000 kilograms (220 tons.)

"It is constructed on an incline built over the water. When the 'mat' is ready an iron pontoon is drawn up just above it, and by an ingenious system of hawsers and pulleys the 'mat' of concrete is hoisted up until it rests against the bottom of the pontoons, where it is fastened by means of the hawsers. A tug-boat then tows off the whole affair—pontoon and 'mat'—to the spot where it has to be sunk.

"This proved so effective that the Netherlands Government adopted the method for all places where the coast is menaced."

Russia Plans Offensive, the Like of Which the World Has Never Experienced

PETROGRAD, Jan. 7.—Watchful waiting, that well-known American policy regarding Mexico some months ago, sums up the war situation in Russia to-day, but watchful waiting in Russia has a meaning all its own.

Whereas Uncle Sam, after experiencing a few pin-pricks in his patience, remained passive, the great Russian bear after sustaining a healthy, life-sized wallop on his tender snout let out a roar that shook the earth continents away. Reduced to plain English the roar was.

"Give us munitions; I've got enough men."

That was several months ago. Russia's greatest arsenal, near Petrograd, had been blown to smithereens; the armies of Grand Duke Nicholas, yielding to the Austro-German steam roller, had been driven from the Carpathians back into Russia and had lost Warsaw and the whole of Poland; there was political dissension in Russia; alarming semi-revolutionary outbreaks were occurring here and there; the ever advancing enemy was threatening even Moscow, and the greatest seaport in the Baltic, Riga, appeared to be about to fall.

In Winter bears usually hibernate, but all these things and more which happened to the Russian bear in the Summer and Fall of 1915 precluded any idea of his going into Winter quarters this year. Russia is to-day the most active Winter bear extant.

Russia has now mobilized her industries and shells and other munitions in great quantities have begun to flow from the factories and shops in every important Russian city; the Russian cabinet has been reformed with particular reference to a more active conduct of the war; the peasants who used to drink vodka have become used to a vodka less Russia and are putting their profits from vodkaless harvests—hence bigger harvests—into the provincial banks; Grand Duke Nicholas has been superseded by the czar as commander-in-chief and has taken hold of the important campaign in the Caucasus. Stirred to renewed vigor under its ruler, the army has used the shells born of the industrial mobilization and repulsed the enemy in the vicinity of Riga, besides putting him on the defensive elsewhere.

Many Things Happen.

These and many more things have happened in Russia since the double eagle whacked the bear on the snout. The roar for munitions which the bear let out soon reached Japan, England, and America, and for the last three months rifles, shells and cannon have been pouring into the Pacific and Arctic ports. Canadian ice-breakers will keep Archangle open all winter for munition-laden ships from America. Heavily loaded trains are crawling across the Siberian plains in almost endless procession, stopping here and there to deposit rifles and cartridges for the men who have been training with sticks and only lacked the arms wherewith to join the armies now preparing for Russia's future campaign.

With the beginning of the New Year various estimates place the number of fresh-armed Russian troops at five million. At least two million more are being armed at the rate of over half a million a month. An additional million of twenty-year-old youths were called up on December 4. These will take their places in the ranks early in the year.

Twelve Million Men.

Russia's veterans already holding the battle-line from Riga to the Black Sea and operating in the Caucasus are estimated to total at least 4,000,000, all hardy fighters, making the total of Russian military strength in sight approximately twelve million men.

Like England, France and Italy, Russia is preparing to fight in the Balkans. This campaign, which is already under way, is under the leadership of General Dimitrieff, ex-commander of the Ninth Bulgarian army, who renounced Czar Ferdinand and Bulgaria, and sent back the military decorations tendered him by his former sovereign. Dimitrieff's first objective is Bulgaria, anticipation of which early in December sent Austro-German and Bulgarian regiments hastily to Rustchuk, the nearest Bulgarian city to the Russian border.

It was Russia that delivered Bulgaria from the Turkish yoke. When faced by the Russians as a foe, led by a former popular general of the Bulgarian army, wholesale desertions from the Bulgar forces are considered a potent possibility.

Russian forces, too, have been sent in ample numbers to the Caucasus in order, if necessary, to lend aid to the British in the event the Suez canal should be seriously threatened by the reinforced German-led Turks.

Captured Million.

Though Russia has lost an estimated million and a half prisoners to Germany and Austria, nearly a million men of the double enemy have been captured and sent to Siberia where they are in no danger of liberation, as are the Russian prisoners in Germany and Austria. The Austro-German losses during the last three months, on the Russian front have been enormous. Russia's own losses have not been slight, but they undoubtedly are far under those of the enemy, most of whose fighting has been offensive. The activities of General Ivanoff in Eastern Galicia during September, October and November are credited with putting 200,000 of the enemy out of the fight.

Optimism has now taken the place of the pessimism that prevailed in Russia during the dark days of the Summer. The man on the street in Petrograd knows as well as the highest official that Russia plans an offensive against Germany and Austria in the Spring of 1916 the like of which the world has never experienced. Perhaps it will come sooner. Whether the expenditure of vast quantities of ammunition on the front, starting in November and continuing through December, is preparation for an advance earlier than March, or just a measure to keep the Germans from digging in and protecting themselves against the intense cold of a Russian winter is not quite clear.

Russia generally is watchfully waiting, but it takes no clairvoyant to forecast that the animal that confronts the Germans before many weeks will not be the same sorenosed beast of the Summer and Autumn of 1915.

Something New.

Many advertisers are constantly trying to think up "Something New" or "Different" and the results are startling to be sure, but certainly not convincing nor conducive to increase in the business of the advertiser.

The craze for originality is a mistake. People do not care for stunts or mental gymnastics. They do want to know the facts in regard to your business and whether you can offer better prices or better quality than your competitors.

Tell the facts in a straightforward, unassuming manner. You will gain the confidence of your patrons, and you will find that advertising pays abundantly.

GRAPHIC STORY BY GEN. IAN HAMILTON ON THE FAILURE AT SULVA BAY

How Regiments of British Troops Were Wiped Out By Hordes of Turks, Who Themselves Were Later Annihilated—Names General Responsible for Disastrous Delay

LONDON, Jan. 8.—General Hamilton's report on the British operations on the Gallipoli Peninsula tells the story of the fighting on the peninsula from the beginning of May to the middle of October.

Probably no more important contribution to the history of the present war has yet been made. The report throws light upon the great landing at Anzac Cove and Suvla Bay August 7, which has been the subject of strong attacks upon the military administration of the Government, the whole operations requiring the combined action of the army and the navy. General Hamilton names General stopford as the man whose orders resulted in delay and the nullifying of the chance to to take advantage of the surprise landing. General Stopford was later relieved.

The handling of the masses of troops within a limited area probably was the most complicated ever undertaken, and military men are not surprised that some important details failed to work as planned.

Praises Men's Bravery.

The Sulva Bay landing failed to accomplish its object, the report shows, partly because the force consisted largely or pntried troops under Generals inexperienced in the new warfare, and partly through the failure of the water supply. The sufferings of the troops for lack of water make painful reading.

General Hamilton bestows the highest possible praise upon the bravery of the men. He believes that after the middle of August the Turks outnumbered the British and had plenty of fresh soldiers and munitions, while the British Government was unable to furnish him with the reinforcements he wanted, the reason being one which prevented him from further insistence.

The General strongly opposed the abandonment of any of the bases held by the British troops.

Oppose Evacuation.

Gen. Hamilton's report which was submitted to Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, carries the story of the Dardanelles operations up to mid-October, when the relinquished his command. Concerning his retirement, General Hamilton reports:

"On the 11th of October your Lordship cabled asking me for an estimate of the losses which would be involved in the evacuation of the peninsula. I replied in terms showing that such a step was to me unthinkable. On the 16th of October I received a cable recalling me to London for the reason, as I was informed by your Lordship on my arrival, that his Majesty's Government desired fresh, unbiased opinion from a responsible Commander upon the question of early evacuation."

The Ill-fated Landing.

The most stirring passages of the document describe the ill-fated landing at Sulva Bay and Anzac early in August, for securing command of the heights on the middle of the peninsula and cutting off from their base the Turkish forces at the lower extremity, where the allied armies made thier first landing.

This operation began on August 6. The climax was reached at daybreak on the 10th, when the Turks made a grand attack from the summit of Chunnuk Bair Hill upon a short front held by two battalions of the 6th North Lancashire and the 6th Wiltshire Regiments, which General Hamilton describes as weakened in numbers, though not in spirit.

"First our men were shelled by every enemy gun," he says, "then assaulted by a huge column consisting of no less than a full division plus three battalions. The North Lancashire men were simply overwhelmed in their shallow trenches by sheer weight of numbers, while the Wiltshires, who were caught out in the open, were literally almost annihilated.

"The ponderous mass of the enemy swept over the crest and swarmed round the Hampshires and General Baldwin's brigade, which had to give ground, and were only extricated with great difficulty and very heavy losses.

Iron Rain Sweeps Turks.

"Now it was our turn. The warships and the New Zealand and Australian artillery brigade, and the 29th Brigade Royal Field Artillery, were getting the chance of a lifetime. As successive solid lines of Turks topped the crest of the ridge gaps were torn through their formation and an iron rain fell on them as they tried to reform in the gullies.

"Not here only did the Turks pay dearly for their recapture of the vital crest. Enemy reinforcements continued to move up under a heavy and accurate fire from the guns. Still they kept topping the ridges and pouring down the western slopes of Chunnuk Bair, as if determined to gain everything they had lost. But once they were over the crest they became exposed not only to the full blast of the guns, naval and military but to a battery of ten New Zealand machine guns, which played upon their serried ranks at close range until the barrels of their weapons were red hot.

"Enormous losses were inflicted, and of the swarms which had once fairly crossed the crest line only a handful ever straggled back to their own side of Chunnuk Bair.

Battle's Bloody Climax.

"At the same time, strong forces of the enemy were hurled against the spurs to the northwest, where there arose a conflict so deadly that it may be considered the climax of four days' fighting for the ridge. Portions of our line were pierced and the troops were driven clean down the hill. At the foot of the hill the men who were supervising the transport of food and water were rallied by Staff Captain Street. Unhesitatingly they followed him back, where they plunged again into the midst of that series of struggles, in which Generals fought fought in the ranks and men dropped their scientific weapons and caught one another by the throat.

"The Turks came on again and again, fighting magnificently and calling upon the name of God. Our men stood to it and maintained by many a deed of warning the old traditions of their race. There was no flinching; they died in the ranks where they stood. There Generals Cayley, Baldwin and Cooper and all their gallant men achieved great glory. On this bloody field fell Brigadier-General Baldwin, who earned his first laurels on Cæsar's Camp at Ladysmith. There too, fell Brigadier-General Cooper, badly wounded. Lieut.-Col. Nun, commanding the 9th Worcestershire Regiment; Lieut.-Col. Livenge, commanding the 6th Royal North Lancashire Regiment and Lieut.-Col. Cardin, commanding the Fifth Wiltshire Regiment.

Birdwood's Casualties 12,000

"Toward this supreme struggle the absolute last two battalions from the general reserve were now hurried, but by ten in the morning the force of the enemy was spent. Soon their shattered remnants began to trickle back, leaving a track of corpses behind them. By night, except for prisoners or wounded, no live Turk was left upon our side of the slope."

Two lesser attacks were made by the Turks the same day. General Hamilton continues:

"By evening the total casualties of Gen. Birdwood's force had reached 12,000 and included a very large proportion of officers. The 13th Division of the new army, under Major-General Shaw, had alone lost six thousand out of a grand total of 10,500. Brig.-Gen. Baldwin was gone, and all his staffmen and commanding officers, thirteen, had disappeared from the fighting effectives. The Warwicks and Worcesters had lost literally every single officer.

Explode German Notion.

"The old German notion that no unit could stand the loss of more than 25 per cent. has been completely falsified. The 13th Division and the 29th Brigade of the 10th Irish Division had lost more than twice that, and in spirit were game for as much more fighting as might be required. The British had held all they gained except two important salients, one a hill, momentarily carried by the Gurkhas, and the position of Chunnuk Bair, which had been retained forty-eight hours.

Worth 10,000 Lives.

"Unfortunately," says General Hamilton "these two pieces of ground small and worthless as they seemed, were worth, according to the ethics of war, ten thousand lives, for by their loss or retention they just marked the difference between an important success and a signal victory. The grand coup had not come off, the Narrows were out of sight and beyond field gun range, but this was not the fault of General Birdwood or any of the officers or men under his command."

The first operations in the Anzac zone appeared to have been carried out with comparative success. The Suvla Bay expedition, which has been the subject of the greatest criticism, suffered [illegible] fortune. Elaborate plans were worked out by the Army Staff with Vice-Admiral De Robeck.

Foe Completely Surprised.

During the night of the 11th a division consisting of the 32nd and 34th Brigades was brought from Imbros to Suvla. Three brigades with three batteries were landed in the darkness. The Turks were completely surprised. The division made good its position ashore. More of the supporting force, consisting of the Irish Tenth Division, were brought from Mytelene. General Hamilton compliments highly the navy for landing the first of them at dawn from a distance of 120 miles at the psychological moment when theye were most needed.

But the navy was unwilling to land six battalions where the corps commander considered they could act most effectively. The cause of the navy's action, General Hamilton says, was for some reason not specified but it resulted in delay. The men were obliged to march a considerable distance under fire, and arrived fatigued.

General Hamilton lays stress on the fact that a large proportion of the troops were new men.

Suffer from Lack of Water.

"On the morning of the 8th," says the report, "General Stopford, recollecting the vast issues which hung upon his success in forestalling the enemy, urged his divisional commanders to push on; otherwise all the advantages of the surprise landing must be nullified. But the divisional commanders believed themselves to be unable to move."

The weather was hot. The new troops suffered much from want of water. There was disorganization, inevitable after a night landing followed by fights here and there with an enemy scattered over a country unknown.

"These pleas for delay," says General Hamilton, "were perfectly well founded. But it seems to have been overlooked that the half-defeated Turks in front of us were equally exhausted and disorganized and that an advance was the simplest and swiftest method of solving the water trouble and every other sort of trouble.

Root of Failure.

"Be this as it may, the objection overbore the corps commander's resolution. But it was lack of artillery support which finally decided him to acquiesce in the policy of going slow, which by the time it reached the troops, became translated into a period of inaction. The divisional Generals were informed that in view of the inadequate artillery support General Stopford did not wish them to make frontal attacks on entrenched positions, but desired them to try to turn any trenches which were met with. Within the terms of his instruction lies the root of our failure to make use of the priceless daylight hours of the 8th of August."

General Hamilton explains that artillery could not be disembarked before owing to the necessity of disembarking mules for carrying the water supply, and argues that, while normally infantry cannot advance, driving power and a certain ruthlessness were required.

Turk Tricks New.

The remainder of the story consists largely of misfortunes. General Hamilton states that the Turkish methods were new to the inexperienced commanders. On the 13th General Stopford was relieved of his command of his division corps. General De Lisle succeeded him.

The accounts of the suffering of the soldiers from lack of water are graphic. An enormous quantity was secretly collected at Anzac, where a huge reservoir was built. Oil tins with a capacity of 80,000 gallons were collected and fitted with handles, but an accident to a steamer delayed part of the supply of the time of landing.

True Thirst on Anzac.

Describing the operations on August 10, General Hamilton explains why all the reserves were not available. "At times," he says, "I thought of throwing my reserves into this stubborn central battle, where probably they would have turned the scale. But each time water troubles made me give up the idea, all ranks at Anzac being reduced to a pint a day. True thirst is a sensation unknown to the dwellers in cool, well-watered Britain, but at Anzac when the mules with the waterbags arrived at the front the men would rush up to them in swarms just to lick the moisture that exuded through the canvas bags. Until wells had been discovered under freshly won hills, the reinforcing of Anzac by even so much as a brigade was unthinkable.

Concerning the water supply for the troops landed at Suvla on the 7th he says:

"As it turned out, and judging merely by the results, I regret to say that the measures actually taken for distribution proved to be inadequate, and suffering and disorganization ensued."

The distribution of water from the beaches failed to work smoothly. The soldiers cut the hose to fill their water bottles, and lighters grounded so far from the beach that the men had to swim to them to fill the bottles.

Enemy Well Armed.

In the middle of August, General Hamilton estimated the Turks had 110,000 rifles to the British 95,000. The Turks had plenty of ammunition and reserves, while the British divisions were 45,000 below their normal strength. General Hamilton wanted 50,000 fresh rifles. He sent a long cablegram, asking for reinforcements and munitions, believing that with them furnished at once—he underlined "at once"—the troops could clear a passage for the fleet to Constantinople.

"It may be judged how deep was my disappointment," he says, "when I learned that essential drafts or reinforcements and munitions could not be sent, the reason given being one which prevented me from further insistence."

Sickness' Heavy Toll.

The report describes fighting only partially successful, and with heavy losses, on August 21, which was designed to consolidate the various positions. Important fighting ceased then.

"Sickness, the legacy of a desperately trying summer, took a heavy toll of the survivors of so many arduous conflicts," the report continues. "But all ranks were cheerful. All remained confident that so long as they stuck to their guns the country would stick to them and see them victoriously through the last and greatest of crusades."

An important feature of the document is the description of the joint army and navy plans for probably the most difficult and complicated operations ever attempted on so large a scale. It was impossible to concentrate a third of the fresh troops to be launched in an attack on Suvla and Anzac within the confines of the British-held ground. Part of the forces were at Imbros, part at Mytelene, respectively 14 miles, 60 miles and 120 miles from the arena in which they were to appear simultaneously with munitions, stores, animals, vehicles, and particularly, water.

In conclusion, General Hamilton bids an eloquent farewell to his comrades.

JOHN BROWN owns a prosperous grocery store in a thriving Canadian town. He is a live merchant and attributes much of his success to his [illegible] of creating interest in his store.

Recently, he took several [illegible] of his regular goods, put them under cover in boxes and barrels, and wrote the name of each article on the outside. Only he mixed up the letters in each name so that instead of spelling the right name of the article, it spelled something different altogether. For instance box 9 contains Raisins, but Mr. Brown jumbled the letters in the words Raisins until they read "Si Rains." Then he rubbed the word apples off the apple barrel, and jumbled the letters in that name until they read "Ping Pe," so you see on barrel 11.

Fourteen lines of goods in Mr. Brown's store were displayed this way, and a prize was given to any customer who could place an order for all fourteen and tell the number of the box each was in. Little Mary went to Brown's store to make her purchases, guessed all the names correctly and won the prize. Can you do as well?

Two of the names are already given to you to start you right. What are the other twelve?

THIS CONTEST IS ABSOLUTELY FREE OF EXPENSE

If your answers gain 120 points you will win First Prize

A FEW HINTS.—The goods mentioned under each of the fourteen numbers, are staple lines such as are to be found in every grocery store and in regular use in every home. No trade-mark names or products of any particular firm or manufacturer are given,—just the regular name of each product or article. A good plan is to write down the names of all the things usually found in a grocery store and use the list as your guide. Be careful, because Mr. Brown was clever, and sometimes he made two or three words, and even more out of a name.

The judges will award the prizes in this contest, according to the points gained by each entry, and we will fully advise you of the method, when your answer is received. For instance, 60 points can be gained by sending a correct answer to each of the twelve names you can guess, there are ten points given for general neatness, ten for style, spelling, punctuation, etc., and when you qualify, 40 points additional can be gained. Take lots of time to puzzle out your answer, be neat and careful, and you can win a good prize.

THE OBJECT OF THE CONTEST.—Every loyal Canadian will approve of the object of this great contest. Frankly, it is to advertise and introduce EVERYWOMAN'S WORLD, Canada's greatest magazine, to hundreds of new homes, which should know that a magazine of such excellence and real worth is being published right here in Canada by Canadians for Canadians. You can help us to do this, when you enter the contest, but you do not have to be a subscriber nor are you asked or expected to take the magazine or spend a single penny in order to compete and win the touring car or one of the other magnificent prizes.

EVERYWOMAN'S WORLD is now the established favorite in more than 80,000 of Canada's best homes. Though that is the greatest circulation ever attained by any Canadian magazine, it doesn't satisfy us. Our motto is "Every woman's World in Every woman's Home." Hundreds of Canadian homes which may not know it now, will welcome this handsome, interesting, up-to-the-minute magazine, and once it is introduced they will want it every month.

If, therefore, when your answers are received, we find them to have gained sufficient points to merit standing for the judging and awarding of prizes, we will write and tell you so, and send without cost, a sample copy of the latest issue of this greatest of Canada's magazines. Then, in order to qualify your entry, we will ask you to do us the small favor of introducing it to three or four friends and neighbors. We will even send you ample copies to leave with each of your friends, if you will tell us they would like to have them. State your willingness to accord this favor when you submit your answers. The company agrees to pay you in cash, or reward you with a handsome gift for your trouble, entirely in addition to any prize your answers may win in the contest.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

LEFT BREST-LITOVSK A RUIN TO GERMANS

Russians Destroyed the Splendid Forts and Fired Two-thirds of the City

BREST-LITOVSK, Poland, Nov. 20. (Correspondence)—On Aug. 26 the Russians evacuated Brest-Litovsk, after causing damage estimated conservatively at $100,000,000 with dynamite that probably cost many hundreds of thousands of rubles.

While three-quarters of the houses of the city still burned, the Germans moved in across pontoon bridges flung over the Bug River, and one week later Graf W— arrived with the German Emperor's commission as Military Governor.

He and his subordinates have since that time, been working approximately eighteen hours a day to bring order out of the chaos that they found. Order they have achieved, but it will take years to rebuild and reconstruct the city—probably the strongest and most important fortress which the Russians possessed.

As was almost universally the case in Poland, the civil population had been taken along Russiawards by the retreating army. But almost before the Germans could begin the work of reconstructions forlorn detachments of the former population began to straggle back into the city. The refugees for the most part were Jews who had been hiding in swamps. Many of them were sick, and, before order had been restored, thousands of them died of malignant disease.

Inhabitants Sent Westward.

Graf W— proceeded with an iron hand. The robber bands that lurked in the alleys of the city were gradually cleaned out. The returning inhabitants, if healthy, were put into camps in the surrounding country, and access to the city was sternly denied them. Many thousands of men, women, and children were sent westward accompanied by small detachments of soldiers, and invariably with a German field kitchen on which to cook their meals. To remain in Brest-Litovsk spelled starvation, for every bit of food had been carried away or burned.

For four weeks Graf W— and his officers and soldiers lived on pickled pork, and ate their evening meals by the light of candles stuck in wine bottles. Eventually an electric light plant was built, but it showed and still shows an inclination to go out of commission frequently.

Two days before the evacuation of Brest-Litovsk, Grand Duke Nicholas is reported to have declared that the fortress never would be captured. The Germans themselves, it is said, did not believe they could hope to take it under two months. Aside from its remarkable strength, it was tremendously important because it was the centre of a number of railroad lines.

Originally the fortification consisted of a ring of forts, built about 1870. With the invention of modern artillery these became of slight value, and so a new outer ring was begun in 1909, and in 1912 a series of ten new and absolute up-to-date and modern forts, with a periphery of eighty-six kilometers, was completed. The city was additionally strengthened by a set of infantry positions between the forts, which the German military experts declared are ideal and models of their kind.

Russians Destroyed the Forts

When the Russians decided to leave Brest-Litovsk they systematically destroyed all but one of their forts. The one still intact is one of the old, inner ring and valueless. With the forts destroyed the Russians apparently went from house to house squirting petroleum and gasoline over everything and then setting it afire.

The higher Russian officers had lived in the so-called citadel, a mile or so removed from the centre of the city. This they did not destroy, nor some 400 cannon and hundreds of thousands of shells. The cannon for the most part, however, are of an old model. The new and up-to-date pieces seem all to have been carted away.

While Graf W—, a Major General, took charge of the purely military operations of Brest-Litovsk, Captain Gisevius, in peace times Professor of Economics in the University of Giessen, was installed in the city as head of the so-called "occupied district," a section including most of Brest-Litovsk and the surrounding country. He first banished all civilians from the city and started little colonies whose members were soon engaged in threshing out the grain and harvesting the potatoes that were all but rotting in the ground. A partial food supply for the homeless and foodless fugitives has been supplied in this way.

Under Captain Gisevius' direction the houses of Brest-Litovsk have been in a measure straightened up, the streets have again been made as nearly passable as their impossible pavements and mud holes allow.

Among the interesting finds in Brest-Litovsk are a number of maps, apparently of a military nature which the Germans have discovered were intentionally falsified and left behind, apparently in the hope that the pursuing Germans would try to be guided by them.

HER LITTLE BOY HAD PNEUMONIA

NEARLY LOST HIM

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup Saved Him

The slight cold, the irritating cough, the tightness of the chest, if not attended to, will sooner or later develop into some serious lung or bronchial trouble, and our advice to you is that on the first inception of a cough or cold "Get Rid of It."

Mrs. H. Washburn, Gaspereaux Station, N.B., writes: "I thought I would write and tell you just how much I appreciate Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, for I would not be without it in the house. Twice my little boy, now four years old, has had pneumonia, and nearly died, but since using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I have kept him clear of even a cough. I often say that if it had not been for "Dr. Wood's" I would have lost him."

"My little girl, ten months old, is subject to bronchitis, but when she seems to be stuffed up and has difficulty in breathing I give her a few drops of Norway Pine Syrup every two or three hours, and in a very little while she is all well. In fact, on the first signs of a cold or cough we all fly for "Dr. Wood's."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's" when you ask for it, as there are many imitations on the market.

The genuine is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

Eleven Degrees Below Zero Last Night

Interesting Statistics Concerning Local Weather Conditions During the Past Year

LOWEST TEMPERATURE

The thermometer last night went down to 11 degrees below zero. This is the coldest for the present winter up to the present time. At 7 a.m. it stood at 6 degrees below zero.

The following are a few items regarding the weather conditions during the past year as recorded by the local observer:

The rainfall (including the snowfall) during the year amounted to 29.12 inches. This is below the yearly average for this locality, which is about 32 inches. March and April especially had a very light rainfall, .53 and .92 of an inch respectively. July, August and September, on the contrary, had a rainfall much above normal, August giving a total for the month of 6.87. The year 1912 still holds the record for rainfall, namely, 39.66.

The lowest temperature during the year was on January 30th, the thermometer being down to 28 degrees below zero during the night. On 18 occasions during the year the thermometer went below zero.

Sleighing continued good until Feb. 17th, and from that date until March 10th it could only be classed as poor—at least in the town.

Robins and blackbirds made their first appearance on April 7th. The grass put on a vernal hue about April 22nd. The maples began to bud April 24th.

The warmest day during the year was July 31st, with a maximum temperature of 88 degrees. Other high temperatures were April 26th, 85 degrees, (particularly remarkable for so early in the season); July 14th. 85 degrees; July 30th, 87 degrees; August 1st, 86 degrees; September 3rd, 86 degrees; September 14th and 15th, 87 degrees each day. There was not the excessive heat on any day that is sometimes our portion. The summer taken as a whole was cool. Neither did we have the long-continued cold dips that are sometimes recorded.

The outstanding feature of the year was the excessive rain during the first half of August, and especially on the 3rd, 4th, 7th and 12th. On the 3rd the rainfall amounted to 1.36; on the 4th, 2.16; on the 7th, 1.25; and on the 12th, .57. Less heavy rain on other days during the month gave the ground such a soaking as is seldom seen.

TORONTO FEARS A LUMBER SCARCITY.

It Is Said That Higher Prices Will Prevail in the Spring.

While to builders the price of lumber seems close to the maximum, dealers report that there is every probability of still higher prices in the spring, with a possible shortage of supply. The trouble is that many of the big lumbering concerns are carrying smaller gangs of lumberjacks in the northern woods than ordinarily, which is partly due to enlistment and partly to the falling off in demand for lumber immediately after the war broke out.

JOINT INSTALLATION OF FORESTERS

Held Last Evening at the Hall, Simcoe St.—A Successful Gathering

In response to an invitation from Court Peterborough No. 29, Canadian Order of Foresters, extended to the sister Courts of the city and surrounding district to meet with them in the Foresters' Hall, Simcoe street at their regular meeting Friday evening, Jan. 7th for the purpose of installing the officers for the ensuing year, the following Courts availed themselves of the opportunity and turned out in goodly numbers, taxing the seating capacity of the Court room: Court Selwyn No. 427, Court Bridgenorth 315, Court Little John No. 92 and Court Langton 344. When the 17th order of business was reached the Court turned over to the D.D.H.C.R. John Hardwick, who, with Walter Hooper, D.D.H.S.M. proceeded to instal the officers elect for the ensuing year. This ceremony over, a hearty vote of thanks and appreciation was extended to the installing officers for the very creditable manner in which this task was performed. Under the head of good and welfare the newly elected C.R. of Court Peterborough announced that refreshments would be served after the closing of the Court and desired that none should retire. In a neat little speech a hearty welcome was extended to the visiting brethren expressing the hope that many similar occasions would be the result of our meeting together and not to lose sight of the fraternal spirit of the Order. While closing the Court the refreshment committee got busy and a very inviting spread was sat down to and seemingly enjoyed to judge by the way the good things disappeared from off the festive board. Everybody was now in a mood to be entertained and a spirit of good fellowship prevailed.

Speeches that had the ring of patriotism for the manner in which the members of the Order responded to the call to arms in defence of empire and justice, the liberality of the High Court for keeping in good standing members who were on overseas service, many complimentary remarks for the Order in general, more especially the fraternal end, that has done so much for the relief of widows and families of deceased brothers. Songs and recitations enlivened the proceedings, which was brought to a close by singing Auld Lang Syne and God Save the King.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

Eleven o'clock Monday morning is the hour that has been set apart for the inaugural meeting of the 1916 City Council. The Mayor-elect will make his initial bow to the Council Board, and will probably outline his policy for the current year.

Garbage Collection.

People in the garbage collecting area are slowly awakening to the fact that they are not required to place the garbage on the street line. Three feet inside the houseline is the requirement.

Brevity is Wit.

"Brevity is the soul of wit," and more than one ratepayer is wondering whether the new Council will excell last year's Council taking the above axiom as a basis.

Standing Committees.

There is considerable speculation as to the personnel of the standing committes of the City Council. Both Ald. Weir and Ald. Duncan have been mentioned as chairman for the Board of Works with Ald. Edgar as head of the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

New Toronto to-day votes upon the by-law granting the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company a fixed assessment. President Gormaly of the Mimico Board of Trade stated that his organization would actively assist in promoting the passage of the by-law, as it is felt that whatever benefits New Toronto would help Mimico too. In return for the fixed assessment the company agrees to erect a large plant employing from 1,500 to 3,000 hands.

New Alderman Enlists.

Galt, Jan. 8.—Samuel Law, elected as Alderman for Ward Three in the recent elections, will not take his seat at the Council, having joined the 111th Batalion as a private. He is the first member of the Council to enlist for active service.

69 PERSONS LYNCHED, RECORD OF THE YEAR

In four Instances Innocent Persons Were Victims, Tuskegee Report Shows.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 5.—Lynchings in the United States in 1915 numbered 69, as recorded at Tuskegee Institute, and announced to-day. This was seventeen more than in 1914. Georgia led the States with 16 lynchings. Mississippi was second with 9.

Fifty-five persons lynched were negroes and 14 whites. The year before 49 were negroes and 3 whites. Three women were 1915 mob victims. In four instances, according to the Tuskegee records, innocent persons were put to death by mobs as proved by later events.

More Cases of Measles

Sanitary Inspector Spence Has Placarded a Number of Houses —A Timely Warning

Sanitary Inspector Spence is still placarding houses for measles. Several cards have been tacked up during the past few days. In some families there are several cases. Some of the cases have threatened to take a serious turn, but as yet there have been no deaths. According to the last issue of the "Health Bulletin," published by the Department of Public Health, Toronto, there have been forty-seven deaths from measles in the City of Toronto.

Complying With the Law.

The bulletin has the following to say regarding the situation in Toronto:

What would you do if you suspected that your child had scarlet fever? You would immediately become alarmed, prevent any other children from coming into contact with the child or anything he touched, and send for the doctor. What if it were measles? You might say, like many others: "It is only measles, let the other children get it and have it over." You might be quite innocent of the terrible results that may follow, but when you have read this article the plea of ignorance can no longer be used to satisfy your conscience.

You would consider yourself a murderer if you deliberately exposed a child to scarlet fever. Are you aware of the fact that this year measles has killed over four times as many as scarlet fever? When you know that 47 children have died of measles to date, can you persist in the delusion that the disease is not serious? Let us repeat: Four times as many persons die from measles as from scarlet fever!

But the half of the story is not yet told. Much greater is the mortality from other diseases brought on by measles. No other known cause is so powerful in destroying the natural immunity to other germ diseases. A large proportion of the deaths from broncho-pneumonia are directly traceable to a previous attack of measles. Similarly, a rise in the mortality from infantile diarrhoea is usually noted after an outbreak of measles.

This is the seventh time this year that attention has been drawn through the Bulletin to the importance of measles. Most of the physicians of the city have responded splendidly by complying with the law requiring reports of cases. A few of the profession and many of the public remain to be convinced. It is to them that this statement is addressed.

SAYS HUSBAND ABUSED HER

Wife, Twenty and Mother of Three Children, Shows Scarred Flesh to Justice.

EGG HRBOR, N. J., Jan. 8.—Mrs. Ella Henderson, twenty years old and mother of three children, appeared before Justice Berchtold and showed places several inches in diameter on her legs where the flesh had been seared by hot coals taken from the stove by her husband, she said, and thrown upon her after he had hurled her to the floor.

Previous to that she charged he hung her by the thumbs in a barn and beat her with a whip. On another occasion, she said, he attempted to force her on a hot stove. Welts across her head showed where broomsticks had been broken.

Henderson in default of $2,000 bail was committed to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

Advance In Price of Teas

Situation is Due to a Scarcity of Tonnage—In the Grocery Market

The following comment on the market situation as regards food stuffs, appeared in the Canadian Grocer:

Following up what was said in these columns last week about the tea situation, there are cables from England which report that there have been advances in both Indias and Ceylons at the London Auction of anything from 1c to 2c. At the same time, both Colombo and Calcutta are reported easier. This apparent discrepancy is explained by the fundamental cause of the actual highness in London. This is neither more nor less than the fact that freight, which have been so scarce this year, are even scarcer now. The activity of the enemy submarines in the Mediterranean and the rumoured closing of the Suez Canal mean that tonnage is exceptionally hard to get; hence although market is very firm on teas in London, Colombo and Calcutta are both somewhat easier, because apparently not much tea is being brought there. There is such a scarcity of tonnage that the tea bought is likely to lie around and deteriorate in quality. Spot teas in London, however, are exceptionally firm. This is partly attributable to a scarcity of freight, and partially again to the rumour which seems now to have crystallized into something definite that the Suez will be closed at a date in the near future. Teamen concede that this will cut the tonnage actually in half. Moreover, it will materially lengthen the time from shipment of teas in the East to their receipt in London.

Lack of Freight.

Russian tea buying does not seem to be a factor at present. The fact of the matter is that the lack of freight is also troubling Russia very much and apparently she is not buying for that reason. If freights were plentiful she would doubtless be buying to a much greater extent than she is and that would then be another bull factor for the tea market. It appears now that we are in for a session of higher levels. Spot teas are therefore a good buy.

Some weeks ago we recorded in this summary that in the Toronto market lobster was now so dear that some dealers did not bother with it. The public will only pay a certain price for lobster and when the price at which it was procured ran above that, several dealers refused to go on handling it. However, the milder weather, or some other cause of that sort, had been responsible for a better supply of lobster coming in, and the price is now down about 10c and within the reach of anybody. Dealers are therefore selling a good deal of it. The fish market is doing good business these days in two or three things, notably in prawns and in oysters. There is a scarcity of oysters which is likely to get worse instead of better. Prawns are fairly cheap. Just about the only fresh caught fish on the market at present is lake trout, a supply of which was received in the Toronto market this week. Trout was very much in demand as soon as it arrived and good business was done.

Rice is reported to be higher in both Winnipeg and Montreal, and there is a distinct firmness in the primary market. Scarcity of freight has been a factor in this regard also, as well as in the firmness existing in spices and in several lines of dried fruit.

A WEAK HEART.

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and by its use flood the system with rich, red vitalizing blood. This is nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting health.

Trips To East Will Be Popular

Heavy Tourist Traffic to the Oriental is Expected

MONTREAL, P.Q., Jan. 8.—By a new arrangement made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and six Oriental railways, namely the Imperial Government Railways of Japan, the Railway Bureau of the Government General of Cohsen, the South Manchuria Railway Co., the Peking Mukden lines, the Tien Tsin Pukow line and the Shanghai-Nanking line, it has become possible for the ordinary traveller to include in his tour Pekin and other cities of Eastern China, which hitherto have been difficult of access. The conflicting interests of these railways have reconciled, so that one through ticket covers the whole journey from Yokohama, through Japan and Korea to Mukden, thence to Pekin, Nanking, and Shanghai. The forbidden city is now no longer concealed from the gaze of the foreigner, and its truly imperial splendour of marble palaces make it one of the sights of the world. While Europe is practically closed to the tourist, the Orient is open, and the return to the commercial service of the Canadian Pacific steamers, Empress of Russia and Empress of Asia will no doubt be followed by a heavy tourist travel to the flower festivals and fairy-like scenery of the far East.

when he went into exile, Franklin Bouillon's father found a home in the Channel Islands. In Jersey the father met his happy destiny in a Jersey beauty, and Franklin Bouillon is the child of this mixed parentage, and it was in England, therefore, that he was born. The result is that he speaks English exactly like an Englishman; that he spent some years in Cambridge University; and that though his vivacity, restless energy, abundant and rapid speech, proclaim the thorough Frenchman, he might also pass when he begins to speak, for an Englishman. When the time came for his choice between the two nationalities, to each of which he partially belonged, he opted for the land of his father; served his military term; and when he was a youngster was caught by the hereditary instinct for politics, and started a journal. It did not succeed; and he lost in it a considerable fortune. But he has gay spirits and indomitable will; he gave some years to liquidate his debts; did a good deal of travelling; and finally resolved to devote himself to a Parliamentary career.

He belongs to the group which stands next to the Socialists in advanced views, and yet is not a Socialist. Thus it was that when he resolved to stand for the constituency near Paris which he represents, and where Socialism reigns rampantly in the towns—though Conservatism is equally strong in the rural districts—he had many difficulties to oversome. There had been a strike, and the strike had led to disorder and to the deaths of some workingmen; feeling was very bitter—especially against Radicalism and Radicals; for these things had taken place under the Premiership of M. Clemenceau, and M. Clemenceau had been a strong ruler who did not hesitate to strike hard when he thought it necessary. The "tiger," as M. Clemenceau is named, has a heavy paw, as so many Ministries he has overthrown have reason to know. M. Franklin Bouillon, addressing his first meeting in a cafe, was interrupted by a polite Socialist leader who with gentle but biting irony pointed to some holes in the windows of the cafe, and reminded the candidates that these holes had been made by the bullets sent through them by a Radical Prime Minister. But in spite of these difficulties, M. Franklin Bouillon won; and now has the love and confidence even of his Socialist constituents.

What are the qualities of this remarkable man which compel attention the moment you meet him and cast almost a spell over you? Physically, he is a man of middle height; of a thickset frame, with what I may call a thickset head; every line in the figure suggesting tremendous and almost bull-like strength. The face is rather pale, the eyes blue-grey, not large but penetrating, open, candid, brilliant. The speech is a curious mixture—like his parentage—of English and French methods. It is English; it is brusque; it is businesslike; but on the other hand it becomes an occasion essentially French. For start him on a discussion, he gets excited in manner, though not in language—for there is a cold clear brain always at work; he rises from the dinner table; paces the floor, and pours forth a lava stream of brilliant eloquence. And yet even when he becomes thus so thoroughly French, he retains some of the English method; for he sticks a good deal to the concrete; his illustrations are taken from daily life. French the speech is because it is highly imaged; but English also because the images are taken from something you may see in any street and in any individual. Thus once I heard him discussing what attitude England and France and Russia would have to take on trade and commercial questions to Germany when the war was over; and he at once drew a scene of the thousands of mutilated soldiers, blind, lame, armless, who would pass through every street in every town in the three countries; and asked if the propaganda which these mute witnesses to the horrors of the war Germany had provoked, would not speak irresistably against a war of trade as well as a war of arms against Germany.

I first saw the kind of man Franklin Bouillon was when I went with the Irish Mission to Paris. Literally, he carried the whole French side of it on his own shoulders. He was at the station to meet us with the members of the Foreign Affairs' Committee; he had ordered the cabs; he had ordered the rooms in the hotel; there was no detail so small that he had not attended to. Then he had made all the arrangements for the receptions to us; sometimes with political friends; sometimes with political opponents; and in spite of the fierce animosities of French political life, he was on as good terms personally with the one as with the other. He was with us at eight in the morning; he was with us all day; he was with us at midnight; seeing journalists; reading the speeches on the ceremonial occasions, not only of our members but of the Frenchmen; suggesting a change here and there, sometimes because there was a French, sometimes a British difficulty; in short, was guite, philosopher and friend; always good humoured; always prompt; always fiercely active; until in the end every member of the Irish Mission became his devoted and life-long friend; and no one more so than Joe Devlin, who is as much like him in temperament, in consuming energy, in magnetic power over men, as an Irishman can be to a Frenchman.

Disinterested, as most of the descendants of the idealists that made war on Napoleonic despotism have always been, Franklin Bouillon has never sought office. He is one of the great forces of the French Parliament who work in committees—shape opinion there and in the lobbies; and thinks his work done when he has substituted a capable for an incapable Minister. It was he who first realized the incompetence for their work of some of the first French War Ministry. For five months he worked to get necessary and salutary changes; and at the end of five months the Ministry fell, and a new one of greater concentration and greater energy in the conduct of the war succeeded. Franklin Bouillon put in his pocket all old resentments; fought for the Premiership of M. Briand, though the two men had had hard fights in the past; and when he was offered a portfolio, refused it; he thought he could be more useful by retaining his freedom.

In the French Chambers there is an entirely different system from that in the British. The French Chambers do most of their work rather on American than on British lines; that is to say, they do the main work in Committees. Three of these Committees deal with Foreign Affairs, with the War and with the Naval Departments. The first Committee is, of course, especially important; except that it has not the Treaty-making Power it is almost as important as the Senate of the United States. I can summon Ministers before it; it gets all or nearly all documents; it can often dictate a policy; it can even overthrow a Minister.

Of this great body in the Chamber of the Senate, M. Clemenceau, that terrific figure, is the chairman; while in the Committee of the Chamber of Deputies M. Franklin Bouillon is the vice-chairman. Now these French Committees have appointed twenty-five members to meet twenty-five members chosen from the British House of Lords and House of Commons. They will meet alternately in London and in Paris; will keep the peoples and the Parliaments of the two nations more closely together; will address meetings in towns of the different countries; in short, will help to make even tighter the strong bonds which now hold France and Britain together against the common enemy of French and British Democracy.

"Open Season" Is Declared By Bachelor Girls

Twenty-Six Paterson Girls Are Strumming Their Bows with Cupid's Darts.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Following the announcement of William B. Gourley, prominent lawyer of Paterson, N. J., and a bachelor, that "bachelors are a blot upon the community and ought to be fined," it developed that there is a Bachelor Girls' Club in Paterson with twenty-six members all of whom are pledged to be married or engaged to marry before January 1, 1917, or to forfeit $500 to some charity.

The strict secretary regarding the identity of the young women in the club was violated, however, by a talkative bachelor girl, so that society in Paterson is now doing its best to find out who are at the head of the organiation. It is said that several of the twenty-six members already have become engaged or are on the eve of engagement, while the remainder have hopes.

20-TON TRUCK RUNS OVER BOY

Isadore Apler Drops From Wagon in Front of Automobile and is Killed.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Run down by a twenty ton tank automobile truck, Isadore Apler, eight years old, of No. 314 Jackson avenue, Long Island City, was instantly killed in front of St. John's Hospital, at Jackson and Nott avenues, Long Island City.

The truck was driven by Millard Callahan, of No. 652 Leonard street, Brooklyn, and after an investigation of the affair by the police, Callahan was not detained.

The boy and other companions were riding on the tail board of a wagon on their way to school and Apler dropped off the wagon directly in front of the truck which Callahan was unable to stop in time to avoid running the boy down. Apler's head and chest were crushed by the wheels.

Travelled Over 2,800 Miles

Did This Man to Become a Soldier of the King.

Few more outstanding examples of devotion to the cause of King and country have been chronicled in the present war than the case of R. Lee Pettigrew, who endeavoured to enlist. A year ago he was a fur trader, employed by the Hudson Bay Company at its point in the Mackenzie district, the last named place this side of the Pole.

He did not hear of the outbreak of hostilities until five months after the first shot had been fired. When he got the news he immediately started for Edmonton, eight hundred miles away, and he "mushed" the distance in the hope of getting into the army. He came on to Toronto, but at the recruiting depot he was turned down on account of defective eyesight.

He was not satisfied by any means with the rejection and interviewed some of the prominent officers who, realizing that such a man was too good to be lost, gave him a position at Divisional Headquarters at the exhibition Camp and Pettigrew has realized his ambition to become a soldier of the King.

He is a man of excellent education and of good physique, and should justify the stretching of a point in his favour by the military authorities.

F. F. PROCTOR, JR. SUED BY WIFE

Separation Action Accuses Theatrical Man of Cruelty and Associating With Other Women.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Frederick F. Proctor was made defendant in an action for a separation brought by Mrs. Georgia A. Proctor in the Supreme Court. Mr. Proctor is vice president, secretary and treasurer of F. F. Proctor, Inc., theatrical producers of this State, and holds similar offices in more than twenty-five corporations in the United States. He is a stockholder and director in many other theatrical concerns, according to his wife.

Mrs. Proctor asserts that after her marriage, June 12, 1911, in Stamford, Conn., her husband became so cruel that it was both unsafe and improper to live with him. He "has entirely disregarded his marriage vows," she says, and has "absented himself from home for long periods without cause, associating with other women in an improper manner."

"In the fall of 1911," says the complaint, "he was a constant visitor of a woman residing at the Albany Hotel, Broadway, and Forty-first street.

"On June 8, 1912," the paper continues "in his night clothes he went to a room in the home of the plaintiff and defendant at Sands Point, L. I., which room was occupied by a guest of the house, who was also in night attire." Mrs. Proctor says that she doubted her husband's propriety on the occasion.

Another woman is said to have been a close friend of Mr. Proctor at Asbury Park, N. J. It is understood that he will enter a general denial of the charges.

THE SOUVENIR

(From Punch)

They were a carriage full of Tommies returning from Flanders on short leave, and they were bubbling over. Stories of Mons, the Marne and "Wipers" were incongruously interspersed with reminiscences of callow larks and ingenious anticipations of the times they were going to have during their leave.

First one and then another produced some treasured souvenir that he was carrying back—a helmet, a piece of shell for shrapnel. They all displayed their trophies, excepting one somewhat older, hard-bitten man, who sat a little aloof, taking no part in the loud talking and showing but small interest.

At last one of the men addressed him directly. "Wot 'ave you got?"

"Ow, it ain't much." And he produced a small iron door-knocker from his pocket.

"W'y, that's only a blinkin' knocker," said the other. "I s'pose yer pinched it off of some pore old French woman's cottage door."

Well, if yer thinks that, yer a bit aht, then, Mister Body-snatcher. That there knocker 'as an 'istory, it as. One night—must 'a bin fawst December—I was in Wipers, a perishin' cruel night it was, too. There was a bitin' wind and rain, and I was just abaht fed up wiv the 'ole job. I was goin' dahn one of them side street, just orf the Cloth 'All—you know the place as it was then—pore ole Wipers, ain't much left of it nah!"—there was a sympathetic murmur of assent. "Well as I was saying, I was wakin' dahn this 'ere street, sloppin' an' 'obblin' along them blinkin' cobbles in the dark, we'en I sees one of them French pubs, wot they calls 'Eastaminets,' wiv a cosy light. Dim o' course, but warm-lookin' and snug, an' a bit of a sing-song comin' aht. Not 'exactly the sime as a Bermondsey pub of a Saturday night, but lively for that 'ole of a Wipers. "'Ere goes,' ses I, thinkin' of a few pints of that there French beer, wot is wet all right, but don't seem to touch the spot. O' course there wasn't no double swing doors, with 'Public Bar' writ on them just a plain door with this 'ere knocker. So I gives a knock and waits there in the drivin' rain. After a bit, seeing as no one come, I ups with the knocker again to give a fair old belt wiv it, and" he paused while they all leant forward anxiously—"blimey! if a blinkin' Jack Johnson didn't blow the 'ole 'ouse out of me 'and!"

She Feels It Intuitively.

THE pleasure of shopping may cause you to forget that you are hungry and fatigued till you are on the point of reaching home. On such occasions, or, in fact, whenever you want food quickly, a cup of OXO is just the thing. It can be prepared in a moment.

It is a good plan to take a cup of OXO whenever you experience fatigue, or have to expose yourself to wet or cold. It is wonderfully refreshing, and fortifies against sudden changes of temperature.

RIGHT WAY TO BLOW THE NOSE

Doctor Says Failure to Do It Right Responsible for Large Part of Catarrh Trouble

Do you know how to blow your nose? If you do you are an exceptional person. Listen to this from Dr. E. Harrison Griffin of New York writing in the Medical Record:

"I have specialized in the nose and throat for over thirty years, and in my hospital experience in the old Bellevue clinic and in my private practice I do not think I have seen twenty-five patients who knew how to blow their noses properly, unless they had previously been taught. The failure to clean the nose by the handkerchief thoroughly is responsible for over 75 per cent. of the catarrh cases that apply for treatment. The incorrect way of cleansing the passage is also responsible for any number of ear cases."

Dr. Griffin says the average winter cold starts in the head. Instead of properly using the handkerchief the sufferer snuffles, hawks and spits. But he always leaves mucus clinging to the back of the soft palate, and this gives him what is known as a winter cough. Cough medicines do not reach it and the pharynx remains irritable.

Now, the nose is "the grand central terminal of the air tract. It is here where the various branch lines have their juncture." The passage that begins at the nose runs down behind the mouth into the throat, just below which it divides, one branch going to the right lung and one to the left. These branches divide and subdivide until they ramify through the lungs in minute passages and tiny air cells. Dr. Griffin insists that this entire system must be used in blowing the nose. For it is through the nose that all the air that goes into them must enter, and it is through the nose that everything that goes out of them ought to be driven.

Into the bony chambers of the upper part of the nose many cavities in the fosepart of the head drain. Among these are the frontal sinuses which are holes in the bone between the eyebrows; the antrum of High more, a cavern in the bone of the cheek, under the eyes, and the lachrynal ducts, which drain the tears from the eyes. All of these produce mucus, and the only exit for this mucus is through the nose.

It is not the nose that breathes; it is the chest. The nose must remain passive. The chest is the bellows, the nose merely the end or nozzle of the tube leading to the bellows.

"To blow the nose properly," writes Dr. Griffin, "it is best to look at it as a double shotgun, the nose as the muzzle of the gun and the chest as the air receiver, the mucus in the nose as the bullets and charge.

"A deep inspiration to fill the chest with air, then one finger is placed upon the ala of one nostril to obstruct the passage. With one violent expiration the air from the chest is forced through the open chamber of the nose and the offending discharge is caught by the handkerchief. This manoeuvre is repeated on the other side. It is a simple, mechanical process, and one that I have pointed out before, but is seldom known.

"We have our toothbrush drill in the public schools, why not the nose drill. If it was instituted and the pupils taught the proper use of the little piece of linen, catarrh would be diminished, ear cases would be less common and the germs that first find their way into the anatomy through the nostril would be expelled before they had time to find a sleeping place in the human network."

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought that I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework, and have a family of ten.'

FEDS PERFORM FINAL DUTIES ON WEDNESDAY

NEW YORK, Jan. 8. — Federal League magnates will come to bury Caesar and collect his life insurance next Wednesday, when they cluster again in New York for their final meeting as Federal League magnates.

Announcement of the meeting was made yesterday. Formal obsequies over the League are expected to include the signing of a joint pact by all the club-owners agreeing to the withdrawal of their suit against organized baseball and the signing of certain agreements by the organized owners to protect their new brethren now that the outlaw is dead.

The National League meeting will follow on Friday, and it is likely the Federals will find business to draw out their session until then. The Kansas City club's wail against the action of the other Federal magnates in taking over all Kaw City players whose contracts have expired, and leaving the club itself to pay off on the players' agreements remaining, is expected to be settled Wednesday.

School Board Case Will Be Re-opened

It was learned to-day that the School Board investigation will be reopened during the coming week for the purpose of putting some additional matter. Mr. Moore, counsel for Mr. Ackerman, did not address Judge Huycke in the concluding reviews of the evidence and will likely do so on this occasion.

"No, he hasn't," the little girl answered thoughtfully, "'cept I've just dropped it."

Happiness As An Asset

By Charles F. Thwing, L.L.D.

Happiness is at once a state of mind, a result and a cause. As a state of mind we think of it most frequently; it represents a proper environment.

As a result it stands for the operation of certain forces, some conscious, some unconscious.

Happiness is, on the whole an unconscious by-product.

Knowingly striven for it is elusive, even illusive.

Not striven for, but accepted as a conclusion or process in the day's toil, it comes as naturally and beautifully as the unfolding of the flower from the bud.

But quite as important as a state of mind and as a result is happiness in one's life and character. Happiness in this relation as a cause, is seldom thought of.

A Force For Health.

Happiness really is a great force in creating physical health. The pulse beats with more and proper vigor. The breath moves with greater fulness.

The step becomes more elastic. The eye takes to itself a new lustre. The whole man is more responsive under the exhilaration of happiness. Sorrow is depressing and depressive. All life's tides ebb. "Give me happiness that I may lift myself with it" is a worthy prayer.

Happiness also operates on the mind, on the whole spiritual part of one's being. Truth is seen with clearer clearness and more substantial worthiness. Details to principles and principles to details are more easily adjusted.

Relations become better proportioned. The reasoning process is more easily and the more accurately carried forward. The mind takes to itself wings. The leaden weights, the hampering fetters drop.

Affects All Nature.

With this quickening of the intellectual parts, happiness also impresses the whole moral nature. Courage takes the place of cowardice, vigor of indifference, vision of nearsightedness, breadth of narrowness. Initiative becomes natural and the conquering attitude natural.

Without arrogance or presumptuousness one feels his strength mightier, his aspirations mounting higher, his whole being assuming its proper place as a force co-working with forces universal and eternal.

Some Sensible "Don'ts."

Don't wash the face on going out.

Don't fail to dry the hands thoroughly and rub into them some softening lotion every time the hands are bathed.

Don't wear tight shoes as they impede the circulation and make the feet cold.

Don't wear a veil more than two or three times without its being washed.

Don't fancy because nobody praises you, your well groomed appearance is overlooked.

Don't wash the face in very cold water; tepid is best.

SATURDAY MARKET SETTLES DOWN TO NORMAL CONDITIONS

Butter and Eggs Continue to Maintain Good Prices—Wood, Hay, Pork and Beef Coming to the Front

Market day bows to Jack Frost, and as a result the attendance was smaller than usual.

Outside, wood, hay, beef and pork predominated, while up in the hall, butter and eggs held sway.

Hay, several loads of it, sold at $19 a ton. One load of straw hauled all the way from Chemong, sold for $4.50 and had to be delivered below the Canadian General Works. Last year a load like that brought $14.00 to $15.00.

Wood was offered in large quantities. Four foot hardwood brought $6.00 a cord as well as the 2 ft. variety, while mixed wood sold at low as $3.00.

Beef sold 10 cents front quarter and 11 cents hind quarter.

Pork realized 14 and 15 cents, while a few quarters of lamb sold at 18 and 20 cents.

Very few vegetables were offered. Apples, russets, were selling at $1.25 a bag.

Live ducks made their debut to-day and commanded $1.00 each for their owner. The same man had a few collie pumps which he was offering at 75 cents each.

Basket Section.

Butter and eggs vied with each other for first place in regard to quantity. Butter sold at the same old price of 30 cents, though a few were trying to bolster it up to 31 and 32, but their baskets looked lonesome.

Eggs, the majority of them, sold at 40 cents a dozen, a few lots being offered as low as 38 cents.

Fowl were not very plentiful. One lone turkey weighing 14 1-2 lbs. stood for a long time at $3.00. Geese sold as follows: 13 lbs. for $2.00, 12 1-2 lbs. $2.25. Chickens sold at $1.50 per pair.

Wool yarn has declined 10 cents a Oranegs sold at 25, 30 and 40 cents a pound and is now sellin gat 80 cents. dozen.

O. U. Priceman.

Gen. Hamilton's Expedition, etc.

Whole Attack a Fiasco.

"The whole attack, so costly and such a fiasco, was based on the attainment of a purely limited objective.

"Sir Ian Hamilton stands condemned out of his own mouth. He states that in the middle of August the Turks had 110,000 bayonets available and that we had 95,000. He then claims that if Lord Kitchener had sent him 50,000 more men he would have brought the campaign to a successful conclusion.

"As a matter of fact all he could have done was to bring the 50,000 men to a successful conclusion.

"I have never heard of a General in modern warfare who held such a childish view—it would be impossible to successfully attack 110,000 men, in the most formidable positions that nature and man could devise, with a numerical superiority of 35,000 bayonets, especially when it was impossible to give adequate artillery support owing to the peculiar formation of the ground."

Progressive Club Gives $25 For The Poor Belgians

Belgium is again calling to us for help. Her people are starving and the crying of the little children for food is ringing in our ears. They look to us for succor—surely we will not fail them. The days grow colder, the bread lines stronger and the bread scarcer. Can we resist this appeal which is being made from coast to coast, we who are warm and comfortable and well fed?

The Belgium Relief committee is making a great effort to raise funds to send wheat to Belgium for that is what they need and Canada must supply it.

When this urgent appeal came to the Peterborough Progressive Club they felt they must take it up and do all in their power to help, their first act was to send $25.00 to the central office and now, along with all their other work they have decided to begin an active campaign for this cause.

Money is what is needed. Any assistance will be most thankfully received by the treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Morris, 372 Rubidge street, or any other member of the Society.

HOW TO AVOID THE GRIP

Overfatness is a very unwelcome condition, especially in the present day when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than is should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it or a large sized box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Canada.

ELECTRIC INTERMEDIATES WON THEIR FIRST O. H. A. GAME OF THE SEASON

Local Team With New Line-up in Action Won a Hard Fought Game With Campbellford Intermediates at Brock Street Rink.

THE SCORE WAS 4 TO 2

With an almost completely different team from that which wore their colours in the exhibition games T.R. and A.A. and Brampton, the Peterborough Electric Intermediates won their first O.H.A. game of the season last night when they defeated Tommy Moffatt's Campbellford Intermediates 4 goals to 2 in a game that was always interesting. The Electrics had to send out rather a makeshift team, owing to the illness of players, and the desire of the management not to use too many of the Junior team in one game. The line-up that was sent out had never practised together, in fact several of the players had had hardly any practice of any kind, and the Intermediates will be able to put up a much stronger front on their next time out. They were badly disorganized for the first two periods last night, but got together in the last twenty minutes and won out handily.

The Campbellford team showed more speed and stick-handling ability than the fans expected after their defeat on their own ice last week at the hands of the Electric Juniors. They looked a better team last night than they did on that occasion, and several changes made in the line-up were an improvement. The visitors worked hard and several fast men on their forward line were always dangerous. The result was that it was nip-and-tuck hockey in the first two periods, with neither team having much advantage. The Electrics finished the stronger, however, and in the last ten minutes were pretty well all over the Easterners.

Legros, the Junior defence player, was in the nets for the Intermediates, and although he has had little practice in the position, gave a good account of himself. On the defence were Pete Spratt and Frank Montgomery of the Juniors, and the work of the two kept the Electrics in the hunt in the early stages of the game. The Electric forward line seemed rather at sea in the first two periods, but the rushing of the defence pair made up for the disorganization in the advance guard. Spratt, although he has had little practice, was a tower of strength, both offensively and defensively, while the sixteen-year-old Montgomery opened the eyes of the crowd by his speed and aggressiveness. On the forward line Evans and Jackson played rover and centre. Billy Hamilton, a brother of the Junior right wing, played that position for the Intermediates, while Smythe, a Junior spare, was at left wing. The forward line had no practice together, and for a while they failed to play their positions and bunched badly. Hamilton, though not in shape, looks like a handy man on any team. His goal in the second period was one of the prettiest of the night. Evans was effective all through, and was one of the best men on the ice in the closing period. Jackson hurt his knee early in the game and was not as effective as usual. The youngster Smythe tried hard all the way. He had to retire in the last period.

For Campbellford, Lott the auburn-haired right wing was probably the most effective player. He did not show much against the Juniors last Saturday, but came through with a fine performance last night. Clements was also good, and Nesbitt did well at rover. Brown was good in the nets, and the defence pair, Farrell and Stewart, checked hard. The two introduced a new method, the right defence man playing close to the boards on his side of the rink, while his mate hugged the left side. It worked very well except on one occasion when the two collided in mid-ice, and Evans came along, grabbed the puck and had a clear passage through to the nets.

Ernie Laing, of Belleville, handled the bell and made a good job of it. He was impartial, and did not miss much.

The teams lined up as follows:

Campbellford.	Electrics
Goal
Brown	Legros
Defence
Farrell	Spratt
Stewart	F. Montgomery
Rover
Nesbitt	Evans
Centre
Clements	Jackson
Right Wing
Lott	W. Hamilton
Left Wing
Chesterson	Smythe

The going was pretty even in the first period. The players on both teams were bunching and it was hard to get away. The Electrics lost several opportunities by poor shooting and slow work around the nets, and it was finally Campbellford that broke the dead lock by scoring the only goal of the period. Clements found the Peterborough defence pair away from home and sailed in on top of Legros for a counter.

In the second period the Electrics got working together better, and soon tied the score and then took the lead. Evans got the tying goal when Farrell and Stewart collided, and he had an open right of way to the nets. Hamilton went right inside for goal No. 2 on a pretty rush, winding up by skating around Goalkeeper Brown as he came out to meet him.

That put the Electrics in the lead, but it did not last long, as Lott took Legros' measure with a pretty shot from the boards, and they were all even again.

The Electrics won out in the last period. Both teams had apportunities early in the session but fell down in front of the nets. Smythe was hurt and had to retire, and the Electrics got along better at the six-man hockey. Evans put them in front with a beautiful rush that carried him through the defence and in on top of Brown, and then Spratt got away nicely and passed to Montgomery, who tore in and beat Brown for the final goal. The summary:

First Period.

1—Campbellford, Clements.

Second Period.

2—Electrics, Evans.
3—Electrics, Hamilton.
4—Campbellford, Lott.

Third Period.

5—Electrics, Evans.
6—Electrics, Montgomery.

MEETING TO ORGANIZE CITY HOCKEY LEAGUE

At last a decisive move is being made to form a real city hockey league in Peterborough. It seems almost too good to be true, but the right men are behind the scheme and are sparing no efforts to make the organization complete when we will be treated to some good, fast, and best of all, clean hockey as the men who are interesting themselves are determined to have the city league as far above anything suspicious as it is humanly possible. Already three teams have signified their intention of entering. The "Pennants," St. Luke's and the team now holding the cup. There will be a meeting on Monday night, Jan. 10th at 7.30 in the Y.M.C.A. to complete organization and draw up a schedule. Any teams wishing to enter should be represented and will be made welcome.

COBOURG TO PLAY INTERMEDIATE GAME HERE ON MONDAY

The Peterborough Electric intermediates will go into action again on Monday night at Brock street rink when the Cobourg St. Michael's team will play an O.H.A. game here. The Cobourg team beat the Campbellford team in Campbellford in the opening O.H.A. game and they will be a hard team to beat on Monday night. The Electrics however, will have a stronger line-up in action than they had last night and they are hopeful of beating the Lakeshore gang. The game should be well worth seeing and will undoubtedly attract a good crowd of fans. The game is called for 8.15 o'clock.

JUNIOR SEASON OPENS WEDNESDAY

The junior O.H.A. season will open on Wednesday of next week, when the Lindsay juniors will meet the Peterborough Electric Colts. One of the biggest crowds that ever saw a junior O.H.A. game is promised as the local youngsters by their victories over the Campbellford and 33rd Battalion intermediates have won the admiration of the fans and they are assured of a good following from now on. Fans are asked to keep Wednesday night open, as Lindsay is picked as the team to beat in this district.

SPECIAL TRAIN TO PETERBOROUGH

Lindsay Juniors will try conclusions with the Peterborough Junior O.H.A. team in the Electric City next Wednesday, Jan. 19th, and in order to give the fans an opportunity of witnessing the game, a special train will be chartered for the occasion. The rivalry has always been keen between the two centres in different lines of sports, and no doubt a big crowd will accompany the team. Very little is known about the Electric City seven, but the team will have to go some to beat the Incals.

CURLING

Toronto Telegram: Curlers of every club are expressing sympathy for J. D. Flavelle, the Lindsay veteran, who fell on the ice and cracked a couple of ribs. Mr. Flavelle is known as the grand old man of Ontario curling. He carries at his belt more trophies than any other member of the O.C.A. He has been fourteen times to Winnipeg Bonspiel, and has generally come away with his share of the glory and prizes. This year he had practically retired from the game as his duties as chairman of the Ontario License Board leaves him little time for amusement. It is just bad luck at this late stage of his long career on the ice he should meet with his first mishap.

Curlers of the 93rd Regiment will play a rink or two of civilians tonight.

The Morning "Conversat," sometimes called the "Kickers' Club," discussed the superannuation of skips of to-day, and a number of suggestions were gleefully proposed. It was the unanimous opinion that they should be shelved or "joffred" every few years, and new men promoted. But their disposition was not agreed upon. One member suggested that the rinks comprise five players, the fifth a demoted skip, for sweeping purposes; another would let them begin all over again as leads, while still another would relegate them to the gallery. It's a good thing the "Kickers' Club" has no authority.

A meeting of the club will be held on January 14th, to ballot on applications for membership from Mr. J. Wiley and Mr. Abbott, who comes to Peterborough as successor to Mr. W. R. Travers, with the Bank of Montreal.

Many of the games are being won on final ends and in some cases with a last shot, and a lot of good curling is being shown even at this early date.

BALL PLAYERS MAY HAVE TO SIGN PLEDGE WITH THEIR CONTRACT

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—One of the most important steps for the betterment of conditions among baseball players may be taken before next season by the Baseball Players' fraternity. The fraternity expects to put a rule placing all the ball players nigh and dry upon the water wagon.

The moving spirit in this innovation is Ed. Reulbach, secretary of the fraternity. Reulbach doesn't wish to take a high and mighty attitude on the temperance question, nor does he want any title like "Hit-the-Trail" placed before his name. What he has done, however, is a lot of missionary work among the ball players in the cause of the white ribbon.

Secretary Reulbach had three years of study in the medical school of the University of Chicago and knows whereof he speaks when he talks about the ill effects of drinking on ball players. Many a muffled fly in a championship game and many a booted grounder or a little stupidity on the bases, may be traced to what the ball player was doing the night before.

Temperance is Favoured.

Reulbach has interviewed many of the members of the fraternity and the majority of them are in favour of the action which he has suggested. Most baseball players are in such good physical condition at all times that they can stand late hours and more or less brew. However, Secretary Reulbach has pointed out to many of the delinquent players that it consumes much time, energy and a great deal of money. It lessens the player's efficiency and takes many years of his playing career.

"The ball players," says Secretary Reulbach, "took a sensible attitude on this question when I approached them. They realized that it would be well for themselves and a great thing for baseball if they retire earlier and omit beer drinking. Of late, years there has been a decided change in the behaviour of the ball player. Years ago it was taken for granted that he spent his money like a sailor and cared little about his physical welfare.

"There is a decided change in the discipline of the sensible player today. He is a book reader, a sight-seer, goes to bed early and doesn't play poker far into the night as he did years ago. This thing has come on gradually. On the spring training trips in the south nowadays one will find ironclad rules against card playing and cigaret smoking.

May Introduce Pledge.

"Branch Rickey, the former University of Michigan player and coach, and who the last few years was manager of the St. Louis Browns, took a decided stand on the question two seasons ago and the scheme worked out well for the betterment of the members of his club.

"The question of beer drinking, however, is a singular subject to take up with the players. The influence of the many temperate players has brought many of the more careless performers into line, and I would not be surprised if at the next meeting of the fraternity a rule was passed either suggesting temperance or prohibiting drinking among the players entirely.

"We have seen many stars of the diamond who had short careers because of intemperate habits. The high-salaried ball player of long ago spent his money freely. It is different now. He invests it profitably. The standard and personnel are getting higher each season, and the fraternity is now in a position to take a decided stand on the question of such great moment to the players' welfare.

"While some of the best men in the game may object to total abstinence, they are, nevertheless, in favour of passing a rule curtailing the use of beer or ale except with meals. This plan works out well with the college athletes, the football payers, for instance, who are permitted to have a bottle of ale with their dinner. With the ball player it is drinking at night and the long sessions about the jovial board that work against his best interests."

Where Drink is Harmful.

"After a ball game," continued Secretary Reulbach, "the player rushes to the club house, jumps into the shower bath, hustles through his dinner, and, in the hurry and hustle, pays little attention to his physical welfare. A cold glass of beer after a game, when the player is heated from his energy on the ball field, is a bad thing for his health, and to-day he is coming to realize this.

"Indigestion and low spirit invariably follow the ball player's careless habits. At best, the player's career is short. Conserved energy is the only thing, the player now realizes, which will prolong his diamond career. Temperance among the players will add years to their time on the playing field.

"Nearly every man I have talked to is heartily in favour of this campaign against drinking, and I would not be surprised if the fraternity voluntarily took a decided stand on the total abstinence question before another season begins.

"Now that the baseball controversy is settled, I believe that the player and the club owner will reach a better understanding. There is no reason why there should not be more co-operation and harmony. I look for highly improved conditions in baseball next season."

ALEXANDER HURT PITCHING ARM

Players who took the trip to the Pacific Coast with the All-National and All-American baseball teams return with a tale that the master right arm of Alexander the Great is in anything but good condition.

Grover Cleveland Alexander admitted to some of his closest pals that he hurt his arm near the close of the season, and that he was far from being right in the world's series.

The pitching prince was not batted hard by the Red Sox. He beat them in the first game, but lost in Boston.

"My record in the world's series looked good," explained Alexander, "but as a matter of fact I didn't have a thing, and was simply getting away with it through luck. The Red Sox ought to have batted me all over the lot."

Alex. Forced to Quit.

Alexander started the trip because he didn't want to go back on his word. He gave his promise in the middle of the season to Frank Bancroft, who directed the project, and wanted to make good.

The monarch of National League pitchers pitched a few games in the Middle West and had to quit. He didn't go to the coast. His side was so sore that it gave him pain every time he released the ball.

Johnny Evers begged Alexander to quit the team and go to his home for rest, and the latter finally consented. It is also understood that Pat Moran, who was put wise to Alexander's condition, telegraphed him to stop all pitching until next Spring.

Hurt in Labour Day Game.

Alexander says he hurt his side in Brooklyn Labour Day at the same time Bill Killifer hurt his throwing apparatus. Alexander finished the season in good style so far as victories went, but he "felt an arm" on him for the first time in his life.

The pain grew in the last two weeks, and Alexander was worn and haggard in the world's series. He refused to make public his condition, fearing that he might be accused of offering an alibi.

One player on the trip predicted that Alexander would never be the pitcher in 1916 that he was in 1915, but, of course, this is an extreme view. Fans think that a good long rest will bring him around again. Alexander is still in the bloom of his career and shouldn't fade this early.

OBITUARY

MISS JANE DONNELLY.

The death occurred yesterday morning of Miss Jane Donnelly, at her late residence, 268 Townsend street, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. The late Miss Donnelly had lived all her life in Peterborough and this vicinity. She was born in Smith Township, her father and mother being among the first pioneers of this county. She leaves to mourn her loss, two sisters and two brothers. The sisters are Mrs. M. J. Johnston, of North Monaghan, and Miss Mary, of this city. The brothers are Messrs. Alex., of Carberry, Man., and Ed., of Oregon.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning at 10 o'clock, from 268 Townsend street to the Little Lake cemetery, and will be private.

$1,000,000 DAMAGE WAS DONE

Strikers in East Youngstown Play Havoc in Business Section

EAST YOUNGSTOWN, O., Jan. 8—Mayor W. H. Cunningham to-day estimated that $1,000,000 damage was done in the nine hours' rioting last night by a mob of several thousand strikers of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., and the Republic Iron and Steel Co. Practically the entire business district was in ruin. Buildings that were not razed by incendiary flames were looted and wrecked by the mob. Fourteen saloons were destroyed.

Youngstown, O., Jan. 8.—With three regiments of the Ohio National Guard patrolling the smouldering ruins of the town of East Youngstown or encamped in the steel mills nearby, civic and military authorities here to-day expressed the belief that for the present at least an end had been put to the wild scenes of rioting and looting which marked last night, and left the thriving little city a mass of embers. One life is known to have been lost. Fully ten blocks of the town, including the entire business section, were burned, and several thousands of people were driven from their homes.

The loss was placed at one million dollars.

Physicians who were called to look after the wounded placed the number at one hundred, although only fifteen had been brought to the hospital here.

FUNERAL OF LATE MRS. JAMES STRATTON

Striking Tribute of Popular Respect and Affection

The funeral of the late Mrs. James Stratton, which took place from the family residence, "Ardyn," Gilmour Street, yesterday afternoon, furnished conspicuous evidence of the high place she attained and occupied in the esteem and affection of the entire community during her four score and ten years of residence. The large gathering assembled to pay their last respects was typical of the best social, communal, and church life of the city. The religious services were conducted by Rev. J. R. Webb, pastor of Murray Street Baptist Church, assisted by Rev. Canon Davidson of St. John's. In the course of the service Rev. Mr. Webb paid a high tribute to virtues and character of the deceased, pointing out that the loving devotion and tender care she had given her large family came back to her, in, especially, the later years of her long life, when she was the special and tender object of the loving solicitude of her daughters.

The offering of flowers was almost embarassingly abundant. The spacious drawing room was almost literally banked with bloom. In addition to those sent in by individual friends in the city and in Lindsay, Ottawa and Toronto, special floral gifts were sent—by City Council, wreath; Murray Street Baptist Church, wreath; Examiner Office; employees, harp; Editorial and Office staffs, gates ajar

The pall-bearers were His Honour Judge Huycke, Mr. W. H. Morrow, Mr. Peter Campbell, Mr. John Crane, Mr. A. J. Grant, and Mr. Vincent Eastwood.

Tobogganists Had Unpleasant Dip in Jackson Park Creek

Gentleman and Two Ladies Went Further Than Was Desired on the Slides Last Night—Had a Cold Bath

Two ladies and a gentleman whose names could not be learned, had a rather unpleasant experience at the Jackson Park slides last evening when their toboggan went a little farther than is usually the case. Owing to the fast condition of the slide the toboggan went right into the creek that runs through the Park. The creek, not being frozen over, the tobogganists had a chilly dip in its shallow, but icy, waters. The gentleman in charge of the toboggan stated that it was going too fast to stop it before they plunged into the water. After emersing from the creek the unfortunate trio hustled to their homes at top speed to change their wet and frosen clothes for something warmer.

Speakers' Patriotic League to Resume

At a meeting of the Speakers' Patriotic League, last night, it was decided to continue the activities which were broken off some time ago. Patriotic and recruiting meetings will be held in the city and county not only to swell the ranks of the 93rd, but to foster the patriotic spirit which the past year awakened. Further details will be arranged later and the public advised of them.

The Hennessy twins were the trial of the kintergarten. One day when their teacher was asking the other children what they wanted to be when they grew up her eyes caught the twins up to mischief, as usual, and paying no attention to the subject under discussion. She turned quickly and said: "Mickey Hennessy, what are you boys going to be when you grow up?" "Irishmen," was the prompt reply.—Harper's Magazine.

Many French Jobs Between Battles

LONDON, Jan. 4.—Philip Gibbs in a letter to the Chronicle from British General Headquarters says:

There are still some simple folk, I suppose — God bless them! —who imagine that a soldier's only work in war is to fight, and that when he is not fighting with a bayonet or rifle he is sitting snug in a dugout writing letters home. During these Winter months of "inactivity." (it is surprising how the casualties pile up,) when there is little news from the front, those simple people will be wondering what our soldiers have to do and what amusements they find to fill up all their time. Well, the Winter has begun, and there is nothing in the way of a big action with men across the parapets, (though the guns are busy in the mist), but our troops have not yet begun to be idle. It's work, work, work, and not time enough for all there is to do.

"Now, get a move on there," said an engineer officer yesterday to a working party on a road in Flandera and as I watched him directing enormous patience from himself and his men, I thought the scene was typical of all this work of war which goes on incessantly night and day in and behind the fighting lines.

"What are you here for?" is a question asked in a soldier's song, (very popular in my billet,) and the answer, sung "con expressione," is, "To beat the Boche!" It was to beat the Boche, by doing his particular bit in this highly complicated process, that the engineer officer was getting through a dirty and difficult job with the perseverance that put a strain upon his nerves and temper. It was a question of getting an awkward piece of metal, weighing some ten tons and belonging to an incomplete crane, a mile or two along a Flemish road. The way of doing it was by rolling it forward on logs, with thirty men harnessed to it by ropes. As soon as it had passed over two logs those left behind had to be carried forward and put in front. Then the men tugged again, sweating and grunting, and the progress, through half a foot of stodgy mud, in a road crowded with horse transport, was, as far as I could reckon, a yard in five minutes.

"Lord God!" said the engineer, loading up his pipe as he stood on top of the piece of metal, steadying himself in a miraculous way every time it jerked forward an inch or two. That was a prayer for help, to get this precious part of a crane to the right place at the right time.

Along the whole length of the line, and for forty miles behind, there are many thousands of men doing jobs like that to get the right thing to the right place at the right time. And it isn't easy.

Keeping Trenches in Repair.

It is not easy, for instance, to keep the trenches in order, now that it has been raining for weeks, so that the sandbags have rotted and the parapets crumbled, and the walls of the trench show an awful tendency to slide away into pulp and water. "We must have more wood, sir," says the junior subaltern in charge of a section of trench which won't stand up straight.

It's a nasty place for the men in daylight, where they can be seen by watchful eyes behind the enemy's loopholes.

"Wood!" says the C.R.E. "Perhaps you would like gold and precious stones? Who's going to send us as much timber as would make a toothpick?"

There is an awful irony in his voice, and the under subaltern's heart sinks into his boots (which are extremely moist as he is standing in two feet of water), and because he knows that without wood his section of the trench will melt away like Summer snow, leaving some very good fellows and himself exposed to a German machine gun over the way.

Yet there are lots of woodcutters at work, so that timber may go up to the trench. A month and more ago I used to pass parties of soldiers in the glades and corpses behind the lines cutting and sawing and carting away logs as though the whole business of war were to get enough of them. In the Autumn, when the leaves were still yellow on the trees, and woodland scenes were pleasant to watch, especially when the red and blue of the French territorials twinkled among the tree trunks.

In one of these woods there was a little chapel to Our Lady of Compassion, and the French soldiers used to kneel down there to say a prayer or two for France before getting on with the next trench to the tune of a rabald song. I did not realize then the urgent need of all this cutting and looping. Now I know that our men and their comrades in red and blue were working against time to supply timber before the Winter rains began, for the leveling of trenches, for propping up dugouts, and strengthening gun emplacements and building huts.

Lots of Work for Carpenters

The rains have outplaced carpenters in some places, and there are not huts enough to house all the new divisions who have come out since the early days when camping grounds were delightful under Summer skies and when the roads were white with dust. Now it is rather different, and under a sky full of rain some of the camps are quagmires. So now, if you can get material or find time for the labor (there are lots of other jobs to do) they are putting up wooden shelters and timbering the floors with a hurrying zeal, so that when they are "resting" after a spell in the trenches they do not get slack with idleness.

There is not much sleep o' nights up in the trenches themselves or behind them. Working parties are out in the darkness digging, and digging —repairing communication trenches which have tilted in, making new trenches in places where men who captured the ground were too busy bombing off the enemy to make safe ways back.

From our army General to the youngest of platoon commanders the officers are as busy as the men, although there is "nothing doing" along the front. One little scene yesterday, not far from the enemy's front line, was typical of the incessant watchfulness and work of staff officers and regimental officers who are responsible for the safety of our lines and the lives of men. It was in a little wooden hut which serves as the mess room of a divisional headquarters, so close to the line that its timbers shake when the guns are busy. It was the luncheon hour, and the General commanding one of our armies was expected as a guest of the divisional General. But there was no ceremony, and it was the hurried meal of workingmen who have many jobs to do.

The army General had many ribbons on his coat, but, like every private soldier in his zone, of war, he was muddy to the top of his top-boots after a long tramp around the camps. There was a great collection of muddy boots in that log hut as one after another officer came in —from nasty places in the trenches where they are directing repairs, from sandheads where men are listening to the enemy's mining, and from observation posts where they had been studying the effects of our gunfire at the enemy's parapets.

One young gentleman looked like the Beau Brummell of the trenches. Exceedingly tall, with waders up to his waist, he wore his mud with a swagger, and it gave him an extra touch of grace. I sat among these officers listening to their "shop". The army Generals was the first to go. There were more camps to inspect. The divisional General had to hurry away to deal with reports from his Brigadiers. The door of the log hut opened and shut as one after another the officers went out in a hurry because somewhere outside there as a job which would not wait. There is always a job which will not wait, for the business of war never stops and the day is not long enough to keep pace with the work which gives but little rest to soldiers, although there is "nothing to report."

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

EYE TALKS SERIES

No. 6. Thoughtless Neglect of the Eyes

As a general rule 99 out of 100 people are procrastinators. They intend to do things but put it off. That is just why so many people have needless trouble with their eyes. They have morning headaches, dry, strained feeling of the eye-balls, dimness of vision, eyes tire quickly and letters all blur together when reading, and they resolve at each reminder, that they will have their eyes attended to, at first opportunity. Those opportunities are a long time coming themselves, you must make the opportunity. The neglect only aggravates the trouble, and puts off the day of comfort, ease and perfectly restored eyesight that comes when Fowler's Pebblo Glasses are supplied, to exactly correct whatever weakness your eyes may have. Don't be a procrastinator.

Editor of The Examiner

Dear Sir,— Having dropped into your fair city yesterday evening and while looking over the Evening Examiner, noticed the article title, 'The Real Issue in the Manufacturers' Sun Life Deal,' which to my mind is very misleading to the public. In the first place I have occasion to know that the Sun Life is not paying better profits than the Manufacturers' Life, and I will venture to say in a number of cases not as much. In the second place no gains were ever made out of amalgamation, only by the stock holders. If the policy holders of the Manufacturers Life knew of the criticism the Sun Life received from the hands of the Royal Commissioners during the investigation of some few years ago, they would vote to a policy holder against the proposed deal. Any fair-minded person can see from the article that appeared in last night's issue that it is paid-for space by some party or parties for a personal interest. I as a policy holder of the Manufacturers' Life, say to one and all other policy holders vote against this deal, less we live to repent.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, I am,

Yours truly,
Policy Holder.

German Army Dogs Have a Hospital Built By Troops

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Jan. 10 (by Wireless to Sayville, L.I.)—The dogs of the army hospital service have had a hospital provided for them in Jena and already many dog patients have been treated there for wounds and various ailments. The hospital was built by convalescent soldiers.

So far during the war the dogs of the service have rescued at least three thousand wounded soldiers who otherwise would have perished.

FIGHT RISE IN BEER PRICES.

Germany's hotel men and innkeepers are protesting energetically against what they call the unjustified attempts of the brewers to advance the price of beer, and in one instance at least their agitation has been successful as is shown by the following excerpt from Das Gathaus, the hotel men's paper:

"Unfortunately, the hotel men were rather slow in learning that the brewers were not forced by necessity to raise the price of beef, as they have been doing of late, but now most of the innkeepers who have been skinned for the benefit of the brewers admit they would be well pleased if, as stockholders in the suffering breweries they had the privilege of gathering in the 18, 20, and 24 per cent. dividends.

"There has been a general outbreak of indignation, not only in the capital but all over Germany, following the announcement of these dividends, and hotel men and the beer-drinking public are not at all reserved in expressing their wrath over the breweries' unjustified advances in the price of beer.

"At last, however, there seems to have been found a way to prevent the brewers' profits from rising to heaven itself. The Hotel Men's Association of Middle Germany, upon receiving notice from the Brewers' Society of Cassel and vicinity that the price of beer would be advanced about one cent a quart on November 15, took the matter up with the military commander of the Eleventh Army Corps, with the result that the military authorities investigated the case, declared the proposed advance unfair, and temporarily forbade any rise in prices at all."

To the weary the sluggish often whisper: "There will be no dawn."
Faith whispers: "After the darkness there will be light."

MINISTER WARNS YOUNG WOMEN OF THINGS TO AVOID

CLEVELAND, O., Jan. 8.—Rev. Clayton L. Peck, pastor of the Cleveland Heights Methodist Church, has prepared a list of "don'ts" for young women. The list follows:

Don't forget the respect due to parents.

Don't sit in the parlour and read a novel while mother is in the kitchen washing the dishes.

Don't marry a man to reform him.

Don't do your sparking over the 'phone, which was invented for business and not buzzing.

Don't expect a young man earning only $10 a week to spend $15 or $20 in automobile hire and theatre tickets.

Don't marry simply for a home; but rather to make one.

Don't harbour a grudge.

Don't think that powder and paint make a lady, as beauty is more than powder deep.

Don't accept the company of a young man who drinks or smokes, because no young man would be seen on the street with a young woman carrying a cigarette in her mouth.

Don't fear being an old maid; personally I would rather have a dozen old maids on my hands than one drunken son-in-law.

SHOULD HAVE PRECEDENCE.

France, Says Ferrero, Saved Europe, And Should Lead in Council.

In a brief note to the "Secolo" Guglielmo Ferrero says that France is now the chief factor in the coalition of the allies. He continues:

"At the outbreak of the war everyone thought France owed her salvation to England and Russia. To-day the world knows that if France had not made herself the allies' shield against the furious hammer strokes of Thor, Europe would not have escaped German hegemony.

"Thanks to France, who broke the first German drive, the Triple Entente was given time to prepare its armies, blocade Germany and win over Italy.

"Her terrible sacrifices, heroically supported, give France precedence in authority in the councils of the allies."

SERBIAN RETREAT A FEARFUL STRUGGLE OVER MOUNTAINS

Goat Paths and Trails Only Roads for the Retiring Army ---Men Crawled on Hands and Knees

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Hardships encountered by the Serbian army in its flight through the mountains of Albania are described in a letter to the Temps sent from Scutari on December 11.

"This is the sixth capital Serbia has had during two months," says the writer. "After Nish it was Krallevo, then Raska, Mitrovitza, Priarend and finally Scutari.

"As a tourist I am acquainted with the Alps, the Carpathians and the Pyrenees, but I never have seen such paths for roads running along the edges of terrible precipices and the sides of peaks in the clouds. The officials of the Serbian government rode little mountain ponies, but often they had to abandon their mounts and go on foot. I have seen their horses slip and fall into abysses. Sometimes one had to go on all fours. Some, to avoid vertigo, had to be guided with closed eyes.

"Then there was snow, which caused fresh suffering. Roads were worn through the snow a yard deep. Albanian guerrillas were taking pot shots at us from behind rocks high up or from opposite sides of the canyons.

"The army could not bring its guns and convoys through such country. When we began to enter it we had to destroy automobiles, waggons, vehicles and every sort of gun. Officers and soldiers wept as they demolished their guns, those pieces of steel which they called their 'French friends,' the ordnance having been made at Creusot. The men had become attached to them and many artillerists served the same gun four years. Some officers refused to destroy their pieces, saying they preferred to use their last bit of strength in trying to save them; and some of them have succeeded and actually have brought their guns across.

"After all these sufferings from cold, hunger and fatigue, many soldiers being barefoot, we are here.

"Altogether there have arrived by various routes six thousand women and children. The tragedy of the situation is that the army has almost nothing to eat. The soldiers had no bread for four days, but small quantities of flour were kept for the women and children."

REPORTERS RIGHTS IN COURT

Judge Points Out They Have as Much Right to Report a Case as Lawyer Has to Appear in It

CLEVELAND, Jan. 8.—"A reporter for a newspaper has just as much right to come into court to report a case as a lawyer has to appear in it."

This was the ruling of Common Pleas Judge Manuel Levine of Cleveland, when Harry Crawford's attorney for the Cleveland Railway Company, asked that the jury be dismissed and a damage case discontinued following publication of stories of the trial in the city papers.

Well said, judge! There have been too many attempts lately to curtail the rights of "The Fourth Estate."

THOUSANDS OF BABIES DIE BEFORE ONE YEAR

It is estimated that thousands of babies die in this country before the age of one year, and it is stated that one-half of these deaths are needless if all mothers were strong and infants were breast-fed.

Expectant mothers should thoughtfully strive to increase their strength with the strength-building fats in Scott's Emulsion which improves the blood, suppresses nervousness, aids the quality of milk, and feeds the very life cells.

Physicians prescribe Scott's Emulsion; it is doubly important during nursing. No drugs. Every druggist has it. Always insist on Scott's—the white food-medicine. No advanced prices.

German Works At Various Points

Along the Front Effectively Bombarded to the South of Arras --German Trenches Destroyed North of the Aisne

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The British official report from the western front last night says: "We exploded a mine near the LaBassee canal yesterday morning. Unimportant artillery engagements occurred at various points."

PARIS, Jan. 10.—The official statement last night says the German works at various points along the front have been effectively bombarded, to the south of Arras. An armoured enemy cupola was destroyed. North of the Aisne German trenches were destroyed, also two blockhouses east of St. Mihiel. At the Dardanelles our heavy artillery bombarded Turkish batteries on the coast of Asia. No change in the east.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 10.—(Official).—On the middle Strips we captured enemy positions here and there and 17 officers with over a thousand men. Desperate attempts to drive us out of Czartoysk failed, as did the attempts to stop our offensive north-east of Czernowitz.

DECORATE FRENCH SOLDIERS IN PARIS

Special to The Examiner.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Four companies of infantry paraded and formed a square in the great quadrangle of the Invalides Thursday, arms were presented and trumpets sounded as General Camille Cousin in the name of the French government bestowed crosses of the Legion of Honour, Cross of War and Military Medals upon upward of one hundred soldiers. Each decoration was given to the recipient for some unusual act of gallantry.

Standing at one side were widows, orphans, fathers and mothers of soldiers who had fallen and whose deeds were recognized by declaration after their death. The crosses and medals were presented to the kinspeople of these soldiers. General Cousin addressed words of consolation to each and affectionately embraced the children.

Turks in Berlin Want Free Tunis

Demonstration Under German Patronage For Independence of Protectorate and Algeria

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—"A great Arab demonstration for the independence of Tunis and Algeria was held in Berlin," says the Overseas News Agency.

"Sheik Saleh, a descendant of Mohammed from Tunis, in an eloquent speech sketched the history of Northern Africa, and declared that now the moment had come for the races there to ask for justice and the right to live their own lives in an independent state. His sentiments were enthusiastically approved by the meeting.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"Of course he stole the silk, Mawruss," said Abe the next morning, as they discussed the affair. "Otherwise why should he try to murder Barney's brother? Ain't it?"

"Maybe Barney's brother bit him first, Abe," Morris suggested.

"Barney's brother is a policeman, Mawruss," Abe went on; "and you know as well as I do, Mawruss, that a policeman is a loafer. But Rifkin comes from decent, respectable people in the old country, and his father is a rabbi. Ain't it? So why should Rifkin fight like a policeman fights? A feller which he acts like a policeman is a thief, too, I bet yer."

Morris lit a cigar and puffed away with a sour expression on his face.

"I guess, Abe," he said, "we'd better forget all about this here silk and get down to business."

"Forget about it, Mawruss?" Abe repeated. "Forget nothing! I suppose, Mawruss, $300 ain't nothing to you, Mawruss. I suppose you pick $300 up in the street, Mawruss. No, siree, Mawruss, I ain't no policeman, and I ain't no rabbi's son, neither, Mawruss. But I guess I got a little gumption, too, and I'll get back that silk if I have to take Rifkin's brother myself and shake the silk out of him."

The exterior of Aaron Rifkin's store little betrayed the prosperity of the business transacted within, for entrance was had through a narrow slit between a soda water stand and a fish stall. Above this aperture, however, hung an elaborate sign, on which appeared in gilt letters the English word "Remnants," spelled phonetically in straggling Hebrew characters. If this had not been sufficient to guide Abe's footsteps squarely in the entrance stood a replica of Pincus Rifkin, with flowing beard and apologetic smile complete.

Abe elbowed his way past Pincus' brother into the dark store and made straight for the counter.

"Nu," said Aaron, "what can I do for you?"

"Some silk I want to see it," Abe replied.

"Sillik?" Aaron murmured. "What for sillik you would like?"

"Black silk," said Abe.

Aaron went behind the counter and pulled down a roll of silk.

"Here is black silk," he said; "good black sillik."

"How much is there here?" Abe asked.

"Dreissig yard," said Aaron.

"Thirty yards, hey?" Abe rejoined. "What you done with the rest?"

"The rest?" Aaron exclaimed. "What d'ye mean—the rest? There ain't no rest. That's all there is of it."

Abe picked up the silk and put it under his arm.

"Half a loaf of bread," he said, "is better as no bread at all," and he turned and walked calmly out of the store.

"Hey, mister!" Aaron yelled frantically, but Abe kept steadily on, and he had reached the corner of Eldridge street before Aaron could scramble over the counter.

"Policeman!" Aaron howled. "Police—more!"

At once the cry was taken up by a hundred voices until it was borne to Max Greenberg, who was spanking himself in front of the public school a block away. He secured a fresh grip on his club, and, taking pushcarts two at a jump, bounded toward the corner of Eldridge street.

At this juncture Abe committed a breach of judgment. Had he proceeded down the street as deliberately as he had quitted Aaron's store, no one would have suspected him to be the quarry of the ensuing chase. The impulse to run was too strong, however, and he took to his heels just as Max Greenberg bore into sight. The next moment he tripped over a rejected head of cabbage, and his nemesis, in the person of Max, was literally upon him.

If Max's aim had been poor on the previous day, there were at least no errors of marksmanship on this occasion, and when Abe was arraigned before the desk sergeant in the Eldridge street police station, one of his eyes was completely closed, while the other was reduced to a mere slit.

"Comes this here loafer into mein store," said Aaron, "and says he wants to see some sillik, and before I could stop him at all, he quick takes the sillik, and runs away from mein store."

"What d'ye want to take his silk for?" the sergeant asked Abe.

"Not his silk," said Abe. "My silk! His brother Pincus stole it from my factory already, and gives it to him. Six pieces black silk worth $300."

"Black sillik!" Aaron exclaimed. "Why, I ain't got not one piece black sillik in mein store. The store was dark, and this here loafer thinks it was black sillik. It ain't no such thing. It's blue sillik!"

"Blue silk!" Abe cried. "That's a fine swindler. Why, actually the feller told me it was black silk."

"Swindler, hey?" the sergeant commented. "That's certainly tough on you. He cheated you into stealing blue silk instead of black silk. Next time you steal black silk you want to see that it's in the daylight, so that you won't get stuck. Take him back, officer."

"Hold on dere, sergeant," Max broke in. "I know sumpin about dis case meself. I t'ink dere's some mixup here. Me brudder works for dis gentleman."

For the first time since his arrest Abe turned and recognized his captor.

"So," he said bitterly. "So I am paying for you and"—

"Ubop it!" Max commanded out of the corner of his mouth. "And so, sergeant, I t'ink dis here case now ought to be straightened out. I didn't get on to who dis party was at first, but now dat I get a good look at him I"—

"Take 'em both into the back room," the sergeant interrupted, "and come out here yourself. I want to talk to you."

Max grabbed accuser and accused by the arm and led them none too gently into the back room, where he thrust them into adjacent chairs.

"Don't nider of youse bat an eyelash till I come back, see?" he said in parting and returned to the front room.

Stomach Was Bad.

Could Eat Hardly Anything.

When the stomach gets out of order the whole system seems to become affected in one way or an other. The breath becomes foul, the tongue furred, the appetite becomes disturbed, nausea and vomiting occur, there is a rising and souring of food caused by the acidity of the stomach, and the stomach and bowels become distended causing flatulency. Unless these symptoms are met with immediately, dyspepsia or some other serious trouble is liable to follow as a consequence.

That grand old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that there is not another medicine on the market to-day that can compare with it for the cure of all disturbances of the stomach.

Miss Lillian E. Phillips, Plumwescop, N.B., writes: "My stomach was so bad I was in pain and misery. I could eat hardly anything. I had been treated by skillful doctors for it, but they did me no good. I was giving up in despair when I happened to hear of Burdock Blood Bitters. You can't think how fast it helped me, for I had only taken two bottles before I was better. I will recommend your medicine very highly to all my friends and sufferers."

Burdock Blood Bitters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Aaron was the next to break the silence.

"Blue silk!" Abe cried. "That's a fine swindler."

seen your sillik, and mein brother, Pincus, neither, he ain't never seen your sillik."

Abe made no reply. He was gingerly exploring the new and enlarged outline of his nose with the tips of his fingers.

"Also I don't know you, Mr. Potash, when you come by mein store; otherwise you are welcome to take the sillik. Any time, Mr. Potash, you should want anything in mein store you are welcome to all which I got there, ninety days, net, or two off, thirty days. Any time at all, Mr. Potash, just tell mein brother, Pincus, and he will tell me."

"Tell your brother Pincus!" Abe exclaimed. "Wait till I get back to my store, and I'll tell him something he won't want to hear at all. Out he goes, also Barney Greenberg!"

"Wot's dat about Barney Greenberg?" cried Max, suddenly re-entering.

"That's what I said," Abe mumbled sulkily. "Barney Greenberg too. He gets fired along with Pincus Rifkin. You could take it from me."

"Oh, no, he don't!" said Max. "Oh, no, he don't! Stealin' a bolt of blue silk wot costs $26 is grand larceny, and it rests wid me whether or not you go up for dis. See?"

Abe stared at him in stolid misery.

"Wake up!" Max cried, poking him in the ribs with his billy. "D'yer understand de proposition?"

Abe nodded slowly.

"Den come on, both of youse," said Max, and once more the trio faced the sergeant.

He was now flanked by a stout, peak browed person, whose most salient features were a curled mustache and a diamond breastpin. In consideration of a ten dollar bill from Abe the peak browed person furnished bail in the penalty of $500 to insure Mr. Potash's appearance in the Essex Market police court that afternoon to answer to the charge of violating a corporation ordinance.

"And now get out of here, all of you," said the sergeant after the transaction was complete.

Abe lost no time in making for the door, but Aaron lingered.

"Mein sillik," he said, with a conciliating smile. "Please, mister!"

"What silk?" cried the sergeant. "I ain't seen no silk."

"Blue sillik," said Aaron, showing no disposition to leave.

"Officer," thundered the sergeant, "put this man out!"

Max grabbed the shrinking Aaron by the collar and rushed him to the door. Then with one mighty kick he propelled him to the gutter.

"Give dat to your brudder Pincus," he called after him, "and tell him 'twas from me!"

Several days elapsed before the cloak and suit establishment of Potash & Perlmutter assumed its normal hive-like activity. Barney Greenberg again held sway over the twenty-odd operators, with the perfect discipline that is engendered of one's brother being a policeman, for the whole story of Abe's adventure on the east side had leaked out, and not a man of all Potash & Perlmutter's employees but knew that Abe's discolored eyes resulted from the prowess of Barney's brother, the policeman.

As for Abe, after he paid a fine of $50 in the police court, he went home to bed and stayed there for two days. During the next week the skin around his eyes varied chameleon-like in tones of purple, plum color and green, until it gradually faded to a smoky brown, which bade fair to last for months.

Morris viewed these badges of his partner's misfortune with marked disapproval.

"Ain't I told you, Abe," he said for the twentieth time, "you should forget about that silk and get down to business? We not only lost the silk, but you lost two days from the store, and $10 you had to pay that loafer what bailed you out. Also you pay $50 by the court for nothing, and now Rifkin's brother says you should pay him $25 for his silk which you took and which he ain't never got from the station house yet."

"I'll pay him $25, Mawruss!" Abe replied with ironic emphasis. "Wait till I get a chance at that sucker. I'll fix him, that thief!"

Morris shrugged impatiently.

"Schmoo-es, Abe!" he broke in. "You ain't got no proof that he stole the silk."

"I'm surprised to hear you, Mawruss, you should talk that way," said Abe, "after all the trouble what I got in. If he ain't took that silk, who did took it? I suppose I took it, Mawruss, or maybe I gave it away as a present—what?"

Miss Cohen, the bookkeeper, poked her head into the show room doorway.

"Murray, the packing box man, wants to see you," she said.

"That's another robber for you, Mawruss," said Abe. "Two weeks ago already I sold him a dozen empty packing cases from the cutting room while you and Barney was out to lunch, and he ain't sent us a check yet. I suppose he comes around now to claim deductions. Tell him to come in, Miss Cohen."

Two minutes later a short red faced man entered, bearing a large parcel wrapped in brown paper.

"Good morning, gentlemen," he said. Then for the first time his eye rested on Abe's discolored face. "Well, well," he went on, "I see you was to a weddin' lately. I been to some rousin' old weddin's when I was a lad. Many a good crack I got at a weddin' myself. Although maybe it was a wake you was at?"

"I don't know what you're talking about," Abe growled, "but if you mean I got a couple blue eyes I may as well tell you I got 'em for not minding my own business, Murray. And anyhow, Murray, what's the matter you ain't sent us a check for them packing boxes already?"

"It's like this, Mr. Potash," Murray explained, starting to unpack the parcel: "I kept them packing boxes for my honesty. You sold me them boxes for empty packing cases, but one of 'em had some goods in the bottom of it, and here they are."

He tore away the brown paper wrapping from the parcel and disclosed the missing silk in all its glossy perfection, six bolts of it, and fifty yards in each bolt.

WOMAN SUFFERAGE.

Its War Time Aspect.

London, Eng. The women of England are doing their duty. They are taking care of the wounded, or if they cannot assist in work of that kind they are adding their savings to promote the good work. They are knitting and sewing for the soldiers at the front. The suffragists have given so little trouble to the government that it will undoubtedly soften the hearts of those in Parliament, since the "militants" have turned all their energies to aid the fighting men of England, and so suffrage may soon come after this terrible war is over.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings, and have been cured of woman's ills by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This temperance medicine, though started nearly half a century ago, sells most widely to-day, because it is made without alcohol or narcotics. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid, and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce. It is prepared from nature's roots and herbs and does not contain a particle of alcohol or any narcotic. It's not a secret prescription for its ingredients are printed on wrapper.

Many a woman is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down and worn out for no reason that she can think of. In ninety-nine per cent. of these cases it is the womanly organism that requires attention; the weak back, dizzy spells and black circles about the eyes, are only symptoms. Go to the source of trouble. When that is corrected the other symptoms disappear.

St. Thomas, Ont.—"I wish to say for the benefit of other women who suffer that I recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a great help. I have personally recommended the same to many who in turn have been helped a great deal by its use."—Mrs. F. J. Souness, 19 Oliver St., St. Thomas, Ont.

"Now, what d'ye think of that, Mawruss?" Abe gasped at last.

"Think!" Morris cried. "Think? I think you'd better tell Miss Cohen to charge you up with a cab ride for Barney's brother, $50 for the fine and the bail, $25 for Aaron Rifkin and $6 for them packing cases what Murray here keeps for his honesty."

He handed Murray a couple of cigars.

"When a man's a sucker, Abe," he concluded, "he's got to pay for it himself!"

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Richmond, Va., Jan. 9.—Pastor Russell gave one of his peculiarly interesting addresses here today. His text was, "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." (John 15:7.) He said in part:

This is a very remarkable promise, and is limited to certain people under certain conditions. It does not say that anybody may ask what he will. The class that may so ask are those who abide in Christ. Before anyone can abide in Christ, he must come into Christ. No one can be said to abide in Him who has not come into Him as a member of His Body, the Church. More and more the Lord's people are learning that a solemn transaction takes place when one becomes a member of Christ. To say, "I have companied with Christian people for several years, and I go to church every Sunday," would not constitute one's being in Christ, nor would simply saying, "I joined this or that denomination when a child" or at any later age. None of these steps would necessarily bring one into Christ.

When we look over into Europe and see present conditions there, we have an illustration of what it is to be merely a church member. We see that, in centuries past, people got a wrong idea into their minds—that the Church was to convert the world, so as to keep all mankind from going to eternal torment. This error was first held by the Roman Catholic Church, and was largely retained by the Protestants, who later came out from the Catholic Church, and to whom much of her errors adhered. It is very difficult to get entirely out of error all at once.

Let us consider the facts. St. Augustine, one of the Church Fathers, was the one who especially advanced the theory that whoever died without having been baptized in water would go to eternal torment. His ideas were generally accepted, and as a result infant baptism was practised. The Bishops had gotten the thought that they had the right to make doctrines and creeds for the Church. Another wrong idea that had crept into the Church was the doctrine that whoever died outside of membership in the church organization would go to endless torture; but that church members would at death go to Purgatory for a longer or shorter time for purgation—a condition far better than that of a Hell of endless woe. As surely as anyone was baptized into the Church and buried in consecrated ground, so surely would he escape Hell and be safe in Purgatory.

This being the general thought, strenuous efforts were made by all church members to get all of their families and friends into the Church; for they did not care to have their loved ones go to eternal torment. Under the influence of this great error nearly everybody was drawn into the church organization, just as we see it over in Europe to-day.

Wrong Conceptions Are Injurious

All wish to be right. Nobody desires to be wrong. But in the increasing light of our day we perceive that our forefathers had become sadly confused respecting the true teachings of the Bible. However, we do not blame them; for the Scriptures place the responsibility for the confusion upon the Devil, who introduced "doctrines of demons" during the Dark Ages.—2 Corinthians 4:4; 1 Timothy 4:1; Matthew 13:37-41.

We all see what these warring nations that are supposed to be 95 per cent Christian are doing. Each side is jealous of the prosperity of the other. Yet both sides claim to be almost all Christian. The Italians, however, claim to be 100 per cent. Christian. Everybody in Italy is a Christian. But, judging by the conduct of some of the Italians whom we see here in America, who would know that they are all Christians.

This wrong conception, this telling people that they are Christians when they are not Christians, this telling them that they are in the Church of Christ when they are not, surely leads to hypocrisy. The churches that have promulgated these wrong theories do not like to tell the people the truth, that they are not in the Church of Christ, that no one can get into the true Church except in the way that our Lord Jesus Himself directed. Indeed, they are all confused. We remember that the Apostle Paul says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." (Romans 8:9.) Our Lord Jesus declares, "By their fruits ye shall know them." (Matthew 7:20.) Look at the fruits in Great Britain, in Germany, in France, in Italy, in Austria! Do we see the fruits of the Spirit of Christ there?

Christ's Spirit vs. Satan's Spirit.

What are the fruits of the Spirit of Christ? Hear St. Paul: "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control." (Galatians 5:22,23.) Hear also St. Peter: "Giving all diligence, all to your faith fortitude, and to fortitude knowledge, and to knowledge self-control, and to self-control patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly-kindness, and to brotherly-kindness love." (2 Peter 1: 5-8.) We see very little of these fruits in Europe to-day—only in a few of God's true saints. The great majority of the people do not manifest them. We believe that in all nations there are true saints of God, yet as a whole no nation is saintly.

The Apostle Paul also tells us the characteristics of the opposite spirit. He says: "The works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: Hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, envy, murder," etc. He did not add bomb-throwing, asphyxiation by poisonous gases, and other modern devices for killing and mangling our fellowmen; but all this is included with murder and other devilishness. (Galatians 5:19-21.) No savages ever fought more viciously than do these people who are deceived into thinking that they are Christians. They are not Christians at all. If ever we have had that idea, the sooner we get it out of our heads the better. The Bible is entirely contrary to all that they are doing.

The Body of Christ a Company.

Our text presupposes that those addressed have come into Christ. The appropriate question is, How may we be sure that we have come into Christ? One might have much knowledge of Present Truth and yet not be a member of the Body of Christ. This Body of Christ is composed of saints, those who are really following Jesus in the narrow way. It is a company, a body, in the same sense that Congress is a body. There are many members in the Body of Congress all of whom are under a head. So with the Church. The Body of Christ, the Church, is composed of many members, over whom God has appointed a Head.

The Head of the Church is our Lord Jesus Christ. (Ephesians 1: 22, 23.) He came first; and since then His members have been gradually united to Him throughout this Age. The Body of Christ is now almost completed. The Heavenly Father has done the calling and the electing of this class. But each individual who is called must make his own calling and election sure. The word Christ means Anointed. Long before the foundation of the world God had purposed the Christ—Jesus the Head and the Church the Body. The Apostle tells us that even our Lord Jesus took not this honor unto Himself, but that He was called of God.—Hebrews 5:4-6.

King David was called of God to an earthly kingship. He was a type of Christ. There was also an earthly priest, Aaron, anointed of God. He was a type of Christ as a sacrificing Priest. God has appointed Christ to a still higher Kingship, and a still higher Priesthood. In His glorified and exalted condition He is "a Priest after the Order of Melchizedek." This Melchizedek was a grand character who lived in Abraham's day. He was king and priest at the same time. Long, long ago God appointed Jesus to be the Head of the Priesthood that was typified by Melchizedek.—Psalm 110:4; Hebrews 7:11-17.

When Jesus presented Himself in consecration to God at Jordan and was there begotten of the Holy Spirit, it was for Him to make His calling and election sure to the Headship of that Priesthood. He said, "I delight to do Thy will, O My God!" He gave His life to the doing of the Father's will. He finished His course grandly, faithfully. The Apostle, after telling us of our Lord's faithfulness even unto the death of the cross, says, "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name." (Philippians 2: 8-11.) Our Lord is now the great Prophet, Priest, and King, after the Order of Melchizedek.

Rigid Conditions of Membership.

According to the Master's own statement it was necessary that He be found faithful; otherwise He would have forfeited His life. Moreover, He was to be the Head of the Church, which is the Body of Christ. Of the Christ Body, the Apostle says that God, who foreknew Jesus, foreknew the Church also. He who foreknew Jesus as His Anointed, foreknew that there would be a Body of a limited number of members anointed in Him. That number is given in Revelation as 144,000. This we believe to be a literal number.

Each one of this class has been drawn of the Father through the Truth. God has called them in the sense that He has sent forth His Message speaking peace through Jesus Christ. If we have heard this Message and have responded to it, this constitutes our Call. Nobody has been forced. As that Message of Truth has come, some have been greatly attracted, others have been slightly attracted, and others have not been attracted at all. For 1900 years God has been drawing the Magnet of Truth up and down the earth, to find that particular class which has been drawn and held by the Truth. Just as soon as that work is completed, another work will be inaugurated.

The Lord permits the storms of life to blow upon this class which now responds to God's Message. If these experiences blow any individual of that class off from the Magnet, he is not of the kind for whom God is now looking. He is looking for those who will stick to the Truth despite any pressure that may be brought against them. He permits trials and difficulties for the developing and proving of those who have responded to the Call. These testings will blow off all who do not love the Lord and His service above all things else. He purposes to separate those who are of this true character from all others. He seeks those who are loyal of heart, and only those.

God Himself is the One who has the attraction. It is not that we first loved Him, but that He first loved us. (1 John 1:19.) It is the Love of God, the Love of Christ, that binds us to this Magnet. God's wonderful Wisdom, Love, Mercy, and Power have indeed been a Magnet to our souls. The more we know Him, the more are we attracted to Him. There is something about the Divine character that is so wonderful that nothing else can compare with it. We are glad to leave all things also for His sake.

New Creatures in Christ.

We hear God's Message, speaking peace through Christ, telling us that we may have forgiveness of sins, telling us that God is now selecting a special class of people from the world for the purpose of blessing all the families of the earth. This is the Message that reaches our hearts. Then we take the Apostle's advice, and present our body a living sacrifice, our reasonable service. (Romans 12:1.) No one has come into the family of God who has not done this. No one has become a member of the Church of Christ until he has taken this step.

Our Lord Jesus thus presented Himself to God. He said, "I came not to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." In one respect, however, there was a difference in His case. He was holy, perfect; therefore He needed no Advocate with the Father. But the members of His Body need the imputation of His merit to cover the blemishes which they have by nature. His merit is like a covering robe. So we have an Advocate with the Father, and it is His advocacy which makes us acceptable to God. Thus we become united to Christ as joint-sacrificers with Himself.

As we are received, God gives us the begetting of the Holy Spirit. This constitutes us New Creatures. Just as an earthly begetting starts an earthly being, so this spirit-begetting starts us as spirit beings. Thenceforth the flesh is of the human nature, a child of Adam, and the New Creature is the germ of a spirit being, begotten in the fleshly body. This new nature is to grow and develop until finally it is brought to the birth, in the First Resurrection.

God's Will Their Delight.

It is not that our flesh is different or that our brains are different from what they were before; but that with this new mind and this new will our purposes and our aspirations are entirely different. We are to be members of the Body of Christ and are to follow the will of our Head in every particular. And so during all the days of our life thenceforth, we should be thinking, "What is the Lord's will concerning me?"

Those who become New Creatures in Christ are no longer to follow their own wills. Whether they eat or drink or whatsoever they do, they are to do all to the glory of God. The New Creature is to be guided by the will of the Lord and not by his own inclinations. But he is not to remain a babe. A babe cannot understand at first what its parents are saying to it; but a healthy babe will grow and learn very quickly. If you watch a little babe, you will observe that it looks at its parents to see whether it may or may not do a certain thing. So the child of God should always be looking to see what our Father wishes him to do. Thus we become dear children, as the Apostle says, children whom God especially loves.

Now, then, we have before our minds the class of whom our Lord speaks in our text. Those who abide in Him are those who have been begotten of the Spirit, and who are walking in the narrow way. These constitute the Church of the living God, Jesus being their Head, their Forerunner, and their Redeemer.

Conditions of Abiding in Christ.

"If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," is the Master's promise to His faithful followers. We abide in Him by continuing as we began. The Apostle says: "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice." This applies to us not only when we began our Christian course, but every day until the end. We have suggested that every morning we make a fresh presentation of ourselves to the Lord, not as making a new sacrifice, but as confirming the one already made, saying in effect, "My little offering is still here; and I am hoping that it may be used of Thee to-day in some manner, that I may have some opportunity of laying down my life for the brethren and for the Truth, that I may glorify Thee."

This is the way to abide in Him—by keeping our contract. Daily we are to grow in knowledge, that we may continually have better opportunity to make something out of the day. Each day, perhaps, there are fresh privileges of sacrifice.

If we would have the Master's words abiding in us, we must study the Bible. This is the only way to know what God has said to us. The Lord calls the Bible a Storehouse. The Master represents Himself as the great Chef, and Servant of God's Household, who "brings forth things new and old." God provides for His own more and more information on what relates to His purposes, the fulfilment of prophecies, etc. As time goes by, we are getting a better understanding of the Bible, since the day when we said from the heart, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Dear brethren, let us first make sure that we are in Christ. Then let us abide in Him; let us never even think of getting out of relationship to Him. Study the Word, to know what He has promised and what He has not promised. Use all the privileges which God has granted to His saints. Whoever faithfully does this may ask what he will and rest assured that he will receive it. But those who are thus abiding in Him will ask chiefly for spiritual blessings. They will ask continually for the Holy Spirit; for the Word declares that the Father is pleased to have His children ask for this gift (Luke 11:13.) This holy influence will enable us to develop the fruits of the Holy Spirit—meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love. Thus let us daily grow in His love and grace.

GERMAN FOOD LAW TANGLED

Court Rules That Cities May Not Fix Prices on Imported Goods.

HANOVER, Germany, Jan. 7.—In passing up a petty case of the owner of a delicatessen shop who was charged with violation of the municipal minimum price regulations, the Supreme Court has rendered a decision which may become of the utmost significance for the entire empire. The defendant has been found guilty in a lower court of selling Brunswick sausage at a higher price than the maximum for Hanover. She appealed on the grounds that the City of Hanover had no right to fix prices of goods brought to Hanover from an outside point. The Supreme Court sustained this contention.

The court holds that a municipality may establish maximum prices for local products only. Every city lives almost entirely on imported products, and the custom has been to establish maximum prices suitable to the peculiar needs of each case.

The difficulties in the way of drawing up national laws applicable to all cases will be very great. Until the necessary legislation is enacted there probably will be great confusion everywhere as a result of the court's decision, as maximum prices for a majority of articles of food have been established by all municipalities.

"Like a Lunatic Asylum," Aged Man Says of Belgrade

Karl F. Nowak sends to the Kolnische Zeitung from Belgrade an interesting and enlightening word picture of events just preceding the capture of that city by the Teutonic troops, including several incidents which have not as yet been made public, in the American newspapers. He also mentions the fact that King Peter in a frenzy of rage, defied the whole German-Austrian army, and only retired after having been wounded by shrapnel.

"It was of a melancholy autumn afternoon that my Hungarian friend and I reached Belgrade. We wandered through the old section of city and viewed the havoc that the recent bombardment had wrought.

"As we walked my companion, who had been a musician in one of the gardens of the city delivered himself of a monologue, describing the gay life in this fascinating city up to the very moment almost of the bombardment. Everybody was happy, everywhere was music and laughter; in the cafes not a seat was to be had. And now the city was like a tomb.

"Just then we arrived opposite the old park, near the banks of the Donau.

"'This awful silence gets on my nerves,' I said. 'Have you heard any laughter in this city to-day?'

"There in the park sat one lonely silent figure—an old man. He looked as if he were a hundred years old. With his cane he was drawing figures in the sand, and he was totally indifferent to our approach. Perhaps he will talk with us.

"We asked him if we could occupy part of the bench, and he nodded assent.

"'I trust you are not suspicious of us?' The old man shook his head, and, as if awakening from a dream, he said:—

"'The bombardment was terrible. This place was hell.'

"'Are you a Serb?' I asked.

"'No I am an Austrian.'

"'And did the Serbs permit you Austrian residents to remain here after their evacuation?'

"'Not all. Only those Austrians who had lived here more than thirty years, like myself, were allowed to remain. The rest were taken with the Serbian army as prisoners. Gendarmes went from house to house and dragged them along. Many were old and feeble, the majority broke down after the first hour of marching and these died of starvation or cold. There beyond the hill you can see their bodies.

"'And such plundering? From morning until night the gendarmes went through every store and shop, even of their own people, and took everything they found.

"'You see, it all came so unexpectedly. We were convinced the Russians soon would renew their offensive in Poland, drive back the Germans and then march triumphantly on to Vienna and Budapest. Everything here went on nicely, but there was an awful fear of spies. In front of us here is the Prince Michael Strasse, the street of the millionaires. When one of their occupants wanted to go to Salonica on business he had to transfer his house and his fortune to the government before he was permitted to leave in order to make sure of his return. Every civilian was under suspicion.'

"'Did King Peter pass much time here?'

"'Only recently, and he managed to take all his valuables with him in automobiles before the city was actually captured.'

"'Was he popular with the people?'

"'Well, at any rate he was not unpopular. He went about a great deal in the shops buying things. But toward the last he seemed to have lost his head. He quarrelled with his officers and got on the nerves of General Schiwkowitsch, our commandant. The day the bombardment began he dashed up the Kalimegdon shouting like a wild man that he had discovered something which would put the Austrian artillery out of business. He wanted to catch the shells in his hand just as a ball-player catches the ball. He was like a maniac. Just then a shell exploded nearby and a piece of shrapnel wounded him in the back of the head. The officers were really glad this happened, for they managed finally to get him away.'

"The old man began to laugh; it was as if he had just awakened to the humor of the situation. We, however, remained silent, as we saw nothing funny in the incident.

"'Yes, he continued, amid laughs, it was like a lunatic asylum. These Serbs are such children. Let me tell you a funny thing that happened not very long ago.'

"Again he was almost overcome with laughter as he pointed to a statue that stood in the square to the right.

"'That is Obradwatsch. He was a poet, a Serbian poet. He was born just across the Danou, over there with the other Serbs, but he never wrote a word in German and never had any knowledge of the German language. His poems are said to be written in the purest Serbian. His poems are in all the Serbian school books. Do you see what he has in his right hand? It's a high hat, isn't it?'

"We acknowledged that it was.

"'Well, listen. For two years money was collected to erect this statue. It is the work of a prominent Serbian sculptor. The statue was put in place and the day selected for its dedication. A great crowd was present and everything was nicely until some one shouted frantically, calling attention to the hat. The crowd was stunned by the discovery. No Serb ever wore such a hat, for it is the headgear of the despised Austrian. Who dared put up this statue, and in Belgrade, too? The people forgot all about the war and everything, else. Who ever heard of a Serbian poet wearing a high hat? The people spat on the statue and threw stones at it. A riot was imminent and troops had to be summoned to keep order. Dynamite was brought to wreck the statue and the Austrian Consul building nearby. It was all like a lunatic asylum.

"The old man rose and walked toward the Michael Strasse. He turned presently and shaking with laughter said:—

"'Yes, gentlemen, it was a lunatic asylum.'"

Eczema Was Cured Twelve Years Ago

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain, and too often a lamentable failure. With Dr. Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the sores, and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the sores replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood rich but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr. W. H. Roberts, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly from the itching. I had a doctor treat me for four months without relief, and I was getting worse all the time. A second doctor gave some relief for a time, but made no cure. I tried several advertised treatments, but without relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. This ointment cured me in a month. That was twelve years ago, and I have never had a sign of the old trouble since.

Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box."

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. W. H. Roberts, and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct." —(Signed) Alex. Horne, Justice of the Peace.

AIMS TO ABOLISH WORD "AIN'T"

Word Relic of Childhood, Says Western Organization.

An organization that is to wage war upon such verbal monstrosities as 'ain't' has been born in Kansas, and no doubt will spread over the land. Iowa needs it. Keokuk should have one. The Dubuque Telegraph-Herald has the following on this subject:

Kansas which produced Sockless Simpson, Carrie Nation and William Allen White to lead the nation into truer channels of life, has now evolved a society which will fight for the purity of the English language, as its long-whiskered citizen once fought for the purity of the home on the Prohibition ticket. Kansas has given birth to the Anti-ain't Association, a society whose object is admirably set forth in its alliterative title, and promises to dazzle the world with Kansas culture, as manifested by opposition to America's greatest grammatical error, an error which custom and long usage have almost justified into correctness.

There are perhaps not 100 men and women in Iowa who have not at some time been guilty of using 'ain't' when they should have said 'isn't' or 'aren't'. The number of Americans who daily use 'ain't' with reckless disregard to the shattering of conventions and good English would probably fall too much short of 100,000,000 while those whose respect for language leads them to forbear such an abhorrent practice will be found chiefly in those seats of learning which have become famous for their rectitude of conversation through good fortune in being the birthplace of master poets and essayists.

It is no easier to say 'ain't' than to say 'isn't' or 'aren't' or the other correct forms for which 'ain't' is so frequently substituted. Good diction, like good manners, is a matter of custom and of practice, and one who lets himself comfortably relax from either soon finds himself slackly committing errors at the most embarrassing moments.

"Ain't" is a solecism of childhood, easily acquired, but, like all childish mannerisms and tricks of speech, exceedingly difficult to be rid of when maturity bids correctness. To permit the child to say 'ain't' is to do irremediable harm, for, in direct proportion, the adult will find difficulty in eradicating the error, if, indeed it is ever possible to do so.

For the Anti-ain't Association to confine its endeavors to eliminating 'ain't' from the vocabulary of the grown-ups will be a useless discharge of energy. The pernicious seed of childhood has grown to the greatest dandelion of maturity which it is impossible to uproot.

ALWAYS SOMEBODY ELSE.

We are Not Given to Denouncing Our Own Extravagances.

The extravagance of other people always has been a good worry to the rest of us. We feel that if other people would take our advice and do with out the things we can't do without they would not only be better off themselves but we could devote the time we now spend remonstrating with them to indulging our own pleasures.

We do not take the satisfaction in our new car we had expected because the family around the corner has bought one. We know they can't afford it. We think they would have been more sensible if they had painted their house instead. We wonder, too, how they can reconcile it with their station to be seen at the theatre. The very sight of them there, to say nothing of their enjoyment, makes the show a disappointment to us.

If these are our feelings toward those who can make even a show of keeping up with us how much more aggravated they are toward the actually needy! With them we can give our indignation full play. We like to lecture them. We like to tell them what we would do if we were in their position. We like to tell them they have only themselves to blame for the situation they are in, and that if they had our gumption they would get out of it. If the object of our charity (and advice) is a man whose wages barely suffice for the needs of his family we like to point out to him the wisdom of thrift. If we give him a coat we like him to tell him it is a better coat than we had when we started out to make our fortune. If his wife buys sugar by the pound we like to tell her how much more economical it is to buy it by the barrel.

But where we really shine is when we take a pencil and figure out for him how a dollar saved grows into a hundred dollars in a few years. We like to stun him with compound interest. We take his tobacco and by a few hasty figures turn it into a house and lot. We take his Sunday roast beef, reduce it to a soup bone, and turn the difference into a farm. We take Johnny's ticket to the picture show and send him to college.

Of course, we don't deny that we get some satisfaction out of it. While it means worry and annoyance, (especially when they don't follow our advice, as frequently happens,) there are compensations, and, anyway, it is our duty. The realization of that would be compensating enough even if there wasn't the added comfort or comparing the lot of the poor with ours and recognizing in the contrast the gratifying discernment of Providence in picking us for the deserved position we hold.—Kansas City Star.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' COAT.

By Anabel Worthington.

With the revival of the one piece dress we have also seen the coming in of the separate coat. We had it last winter.

The illustration shows one of the best liked forms of this popular garment. It is loose, with the fronts and lower side sections in one piece, the upper parts of the sides being set in as if they were an extra piecing or a version of the large armhole. The lap seam intensifies this effect. The back of the coat is in one piece, but it may be seamed in the centre if desired.

The closing of the coat is in front and it is so arranged that the coat may be buttoned closely a little to the left of the centre, with a high, straight collar effect, or it may be left open a little, with low, turnover collar and small revers. In making the coat no change is necessary in order to give these two styles to the neck: it is merely a matter of buttoning down the material when the garment is put on or of buttoning it snugly to the throat.

The sleeves are regulation. They extend to the wrist and have a fancy strap cuff, which may be omitted if desired.

The pattern provides for cutting off this coat midway between waist and hem if a shorter length is preferred.

The coat pattern, No. 7360, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires for long coat 2⅞ yards of 54 inch material.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

WHEN MOTHER CALLS.

When mother calls—you must come in!
And how that call, through all the din
Amid the childhood memories high,
Is ringing still within your ears!
You thought it was very awful then
To leave the game and leave the fun
And just because your mother called
To have to say goodbye and run.
When mother calls—you wish that now
Her voice could call you as it did
Way back in that old dream somehow,
Amid the childhood memories hid.
You chaffed because you thought it soon,
To have to come, 'twas early yet.
And so you left the game in tune
To some relustant spell of fret.
When mother calls—so different seems
The memory of it now to you;
How beautiful she was in dreams
That decked her there in sun and dew!
But you were hateful, and at times
You closed your ears and winked your eye,
And made belief you did not hear,
And make her stand and call and cry.
You wouldn't keep here waiting there
As once you did. You'd hear her now
And leap to flyalong the air,
And lean and kiss her dear old brow,
When mother calls—ah, lad of life,
Don't keep her waiting there to call!
Put down the tumult and the strife,
And go before the shadows fall!
When mother calls—come quick, come sweet
With smiling lips and dancing feet,
With all the childhood spirit true,
To all the love she bears for you
For some time, mid far on events,
You'll be glad you heard her cry,
And had the love and had the sense
To put your play and playmates by.
—The Benztown Bard.

TEUTONS SOON SHORT MEN

Entrance of Bulgaria into Enemy Camp Did Little to Solve This Problem—Germans Taking Stock.

The Rome Secolo publishes an interview with a well-known Scandinavian writer who has just concluded a minute study of the German situation, which he will shortly publish in book form. Here are the principal replies of this writer to the Secolo's questions:

"What, then, is the feeling in Germany?"

"If I were to tell you that the public spirit of Germany is depressed I should be stating what is not true. The only visible facts are such as to satisfy and delude the people. The war is being waged with vigour on all the fronts, with the result that it entails great sacrifices; but, on the whole, the losses are borne with stoicism, the privation with fortitude, and the changes with admirable patriotic sentiment. Despite this, there is in the German public spirit a vague sense of disquietude. It is said, 'Yes, the war is going on well, but we do not attain conclusive results.' They also say, 'Our enemies are beaten but not subdued, and they seem all agreed to continue the war.'"

No Separate Peace.

"The German people are taking stock of money, men and cereals. The papers are full of calculations, figures, forecasts, advice, etc. Many delusions have been abandoned. There is no longer any hope of separate peace with one enemy or another; of a Russian revolution; or of a rebellion of the British Colonies. The war will have to be finished with the cannon. But when? If there were any certainty of it finishing in a few months the disquietude would be less and they would wait calmly, for another year, and everyone would be resigned for that period.

"But afterward? If the war should last until 1917? The question of men is a very serious one in Germany. She commenced war with 8,000,000 men who could be mobilised, but she has lost 150,000 a month or about 2,-5000,000. Continuing in that way up to Dec. 1, 1916, Germany will have lost nearly 3,000,000 including the boys of the 1916 and 1917 classes.

Lack of Men.

"Where then, can the men be found? Austria which has suffered enormous losses in prisoners, has nothing left to hope for; the Bulgarians are only sufficient for the Balkans; the Turks cannot be transported to Germany if it is desired to attempt operations against Egypt. The danger of this progressive diminution of the German forces is all the more grave when the strength of the allies is constantly increasing and Maximilian Harden has estimated that Russia will have at her disposal in the spring from 12,000,000 to 15,-000,000 men.

"And the others? France only has utilized her reserves of men, but England will have 3,000,000 of them. Italy will have a large reserve."

Speaking of provisions, the Scandinavian author remarked:

There is really a shortage in Germany, and now even a shortage of potatoes. That is the gravest danger for Germany.

TAKE "CASCARETS" IF HEADACHY, BILIOUS AND CONSTIPATED

Best for Liver and Bowels, Bad Breath, Bad Colds, Sour Stomach

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headaches, biliousness, coated tongue, head and nose clogged up with a cold—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet, breath right, complexion rosy and your liver and bowels regular for months.

STUDENTS' STRIKE ENDS.

High School Pupils of San Juan, Porto Rico, Return to Studies.

After being on strike for almost two months the High School students at Arecibo have returned to their books.

The strike started on October 29th, following the reported robbery of one of the students. The students became offended when they were compelled to undergo a search by a detective. The strike was ended only after Commissioner of Education, Paul G Miller, told the parents of the students that unless they returned to school at once the High school would be removed from Arecibo to some other city.

The students returned under principal Maurice H. Esser, a Colgate college graduate, whose removal they had demanded. The strike was ended this week.

LATIN AMERICAN DRINK WAR

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—South America has begun a campaign against alcohol and tobacco, which has gained such headway that, according to Mrs. Eduardo Monteverde, a delegate to the Women's Conference of the Pan-American Scientific Congress in Washington, the movement will sweep the Southern Hemisphere.

Mrs. Monteverde said yesterday at the Hotel Astor that it started in her own country, Uruguay, and is spreading in to Argentina and Chile. Unlike other temperance or abstinence crusades, it seeks to do nothing directly with the present generation, but is devoting itself to teaching children the baneful effects of alcohol upon the human system.

The delegate from Uruguay has a family as well as a patriotic concern in the matter, for she is the mother of eleven children, six of whom are boys. Their ages run from 5 to 21 years. Her oldest son is a student in the University of Montevideo, where his father is Professor of Mathematics.

The league which she represents is affiliating with the World's Christian Temperance Union, and it was organized by Miss Hardynia K. Norville, of Englishwoman, who are sent to South America to enlist the sympathies of women.

Mrs. Monteverde says the evils of drink are not at all great in South America, but that owing to the coming recently of many foreigners it was felt by leaders that it would be well to prevent the growth of drinking habits.

"After all," said she, "is it not so that all over the world the taking of strong liquors is greatly decreasing? In the City of New York, I find that there are very few who order wines and liquors compared with what I had expected to find. Everywhere it seems to be the custom to have bottles of water. Our league is also opposed to the use of tobacco. You think that strange? Ah, you think we of Latin America smoke many cigarettes? We do so less and less and women do not in my country use them at all. I must confess that it gives me a shock to see women smoke, and yet I have seen them smoke in fashionable places in this city.

"In Uruguay, we are looking far into the future in the matter of temperance. Among the laboring classes there is drinking, and the evil effects are noted. The favorite intoxicating dring in Uruguay is distilled from a plant, cana, and is called by its name. It is much adulterated as it is served to the people and when mixed with other ingredients its effect is very bad.

"Our attention was brought to the temperance cause by the devoted work of Miss Norville a most eloquent and gifted woman. She impressed the lessons of temperance by organizing entertainments which attracted the deep interest of high officials. Their wives took up the matter and formed a committee. Professor Monteverde and I are Methodists and we belong to a church which was established in Montevideo fifty years ago. All creeds are included in the league—both Catholics and Protestants. Dr. Brum, Minister of the Interior, and Dr. Espalta, Minister of Public Instruction, have given to it every encouragement.

"So it happens that there are now many thousands of boys and girls in my country who have joined juvenile leagues and have pledged themselves to abstain from both alcohol and tobacco. In the school there are lectures and demonstrations showing how bad are the effects of strong drink on the human system, and what degenerative changes come from its use. The instruction begins when the children are very young indeed, and is based upon medical science.

"I have had the opportunity to confer with several American women here who are devoted to the temperance movement, and to show what interest we of South America haven taken in abstinence I have brought many photographs showing our committee, the school children we have enrolled, and some beautiful photographs of our young women who have taken part in entertainments and tableaux arranged to interest the people.

Mrs. Monteverde said she would be the sole representative of the cause at Washington, but she was confident that in another year there would be leagues in every Latin-American country.

The official name of her organization is "Liga Uruguaya contra el Alcholismo," and its motto is "Agiter, Educar, Organizar." Its President is Bernardina Munoz de la Maria; the Vice President, Carita C. Quintela, the Treasurer, Manuela de H. de Saterain, and the Secretary, Della C. de Etchepare.

MANY HALF CRAZED AS RESULT OF ORDEAL THEY PASSED THROUGH

PARIS, Jan. 7.—After an all-night race to escape a submarine the French steamship Karnak landed her 230 passengers at Marseilles yesterday morning. Many were half crazed as a result of the ordeal of fear through which they had passed. The Karnak also landed seventeen passengers and thirteen members of the crew of the British liner Abelia and the crew of the British steamer Middleton, both of which were sunk in the Mediterranean by submarines. There was some loss of life on the Abelia. Both the Abelia and Middleton are reported to have been sunk without warning.

Officers of the Karnak tell a thrilling story of a mad dash through the Mediterranean, in which the choppy seas alone saved the big steamer. The submarine, which was of the latest type and fully 250 feet long, was fully as speedy as the zigzagging Karnak. The big waves bothered her, however, and prevented her successfully launching a torpedo against the fleeing passenger ship.

The Karnak was steaming for Marseilles from Alexandria and Malta when she sighted several small boats far at sea. They contained survivors of the Middleton and Abelia.

Scarcely had she gained her way after picking up the drifting survivors when a submarine was sighted approaching her, according to stories told by officers and passengers on their arrival at Marseilles.

It was then afternoon. The Karnak's captain ordered full speed and began to lay a zig-zag course. The sea was rough and the vessel's bow split the waves in her dash to escape the under-sea enemy.

"The submarine followed close on our tracks," said one of the ship's officers, "but the heavy seas seemed to bother her. Her speed was almost as great as ours, and she hung on doggedly. She was a big boat. We could see her shooting along just on the surface. Sometimes she was almost hidden by the seas breaking over her."

Just rescued after hours of anguish in the open boats, the survivors of the Middleton and Abelia were terror-stricken at the new menace. They huddled in the smoking-room, where the Karnak's passengers also were gathered. Each person aboard wore a lifebelt.

Some of the braver spirits ventured to the stern, there to watch the race with death.

Darkness fell, but still the submarine clung to the Karnak's wake.

Running without lights the big steamship desperately tried to elude in the inky blackness of night the great U boat which was trying to sink her. But the submarine kept on. A phosphorous trail in the darkness marked her wake.

Throughout the night the more than 300 persons in the cabin tried to keep up their nerve and spirits. For some, however, the effort was too great, and they broke into hysterical weeping. Others, worn out, dozed off, resting in their lifebelts.

"Finally about dawn," said an officer, "we managed to shake off the submarine. Then we struck a straight course in Marseilles.

"Only the choppy seas and our commander's zig-zag course prevented the submarine from taking a shot at us."

The Middleton was a 2,508 ton ship hailing from Hull. She was built in 1908.

The Abedlia was a new vessel built in 1914, and propelled by an oil motor. She registered 3,650 tons and her home port was London.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Colour and Lustre to Hair

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray, streaked and looks dry, wispy and scraggy, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundredfold.

Don't bother to prepare the tonic; you can get from any drug store a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," ready to use. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural colour, thickness and lustre of your hair and remove dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy, lustrous and abundant.

BRITISH TROOPS DEFEAT TURKS IN MESOPOTAMIA

PRISONERS AND GUNS WERE CAPTURED

British Relief Force Defeats Turks After Several Days of Fighting

Marching to the Assistance of Forces at Kutelmara New Army Wins Victory Over the Enemy--Constantinople Despatches Say That 10,000 British Troops Have Been Surrounded at Kutelmara and That Turks Are Attacking the Main Defences of the City.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The British inflicted a severe defeat on the Turks in Mesopotamia, it was officially announced in the House of Commons this afternoon. The Turks have been forced to retreat in heavy fighting, it was stated, losing 700 prisoners and some guns. The engagement occurred, it was stated, while the British forces were marching to the relief of other British troops besieged at Kutelamara. This was the first official intimation that the British at Kutelamara were in danger.

Constantinople despatches transmitted through Berlin to-day reported that the Turks have cut off and surrounded 10,000 British troops at Kutelamara. The official British statement, while not directly contradictory, casts some doubt on the Turkish claim, which was not official.

The battle lasted for several days. A large Turkish force attacked advancing Britishers, but were forced to retire. Whether relief forces succeeded in reaching Kutelamara was not stated. It was officially announced that General John Nixon, the commander-in-chief of the Mesopotamian campaign, has retired because of ill-health.

OTTAWA, Jan. 10.—The coming session of Parliament bids fair to be the most momentous session ever held in the Dominion. The tremendous committments made necessary by Canada's participation in the war and by the doubling of the Canadian forces, coupled with the fact that London's money market has been indefinitely closed to Canada creates a situation more difficult than any which Parliament has been called upon to solve for many a year. The amount of money which Canada must raise during the coming fiscal year is more than treble the amount ever raised in any one year before.

Ways and means therefore of providing the sinews of war will be the most important business of the session, and one of the first to be considered.

It is certain that the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the Throne will be lengthy this session. The Public Accounts Committee, it is expected, will get down to business early in the session, as there are some very important investigations to investigate.

Albert Sevigny, M.P. for Dorchester, will be appointed Speaker on Wednesday in place of T. S. Sproule, now in the Senate, and the formal opening of Parliament will take place on Thursday. The address in reply to the speech from the Throne will be moved and seconded by two medical men. Dr. Thompson, M.P. for the Yukon, will move the address, and Dr. Paquet, M.P. for L'Islet, will second it.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—General Sir Percy Lake, former Inspector General of the Canadian forces, succeeds General Nixon in command of the British forces in Mesopotamia.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Preceding attacks with heavy bombardment of asphyxiating gas shells, the Germans launched a violent offensive in Champagne region yesterday. Hot fire from the French guns riddled the German lines and brought the offensive movement to a halt before daybreak to-day.

The enemy only gained a momentary footing at two points, but were driven out again by our counter attack, except in two small portions of advanced trenches, said the official statement.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Describing the evacuation of Gallipoli to the House of Commons this afternoon, Premier Asquith declared: "This and the earlier retirement from Suvla Bay, also accomplished without loss of life, are without parallel in military and naval history."

OTTAWA, Jan. 10.—It is improbable that Sir Robert Borden will be able to take his place in the Commons on Wednesday, as he has not quite recovered from an attack of La Grippe.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Within a week the country can expect the formal announcement from the State Department that the Lusitania case, now nearly a year old, has been settled. That the main contentions of the principles of international law and humanity in warfare on which the United States based its original protests have been conceded by Germany is known.

A fifteen-minute conference of a "confidential nature" was held by Secretary Lansing and Ambassador Bernstorff at the request of the former to-day. In view of Germany's recent written agreement to abide by the United States declarations on how submarine warfare should be conducted as it affects neutral ships and neutral passengers on neutral or belligerent vessels, the German Ambassador himself frankly hinted he believed the American Government and people will be pleased at the outcome of the situation, which threatened to draw this country into the European war.

BERLIN, Via Sayville, Jan. 10.—German troops capured several hundred yards of French trenches in the Champagne region, northwest of Massiges, the War Office claims to-day, taking 423 prisoners, including several French officers.

AMSTERDAM, Jan. 10.—Fire destroyed the wheel workshops of the Krupp gun plant at Essen, according to advices received here to-day, and also damaged other buildings.

FELL EXHAUSTED IN MONAGHAN AFTER WALK FROM TORONTO

Robert Hudson Found By Roadside Near Town Hall Late Last Night and Cared For By Reeve McIntosh

CRAWLED ALONG ROAD

Benumbered by exposure and exhausted by lack of food on his six days' tramp from Toronto where he said he resided at 221 Logan Avenue, Robert Hudson was found unconscious last night about ten o'clock in North Monaghan about one mile east of the town hall on what is known as the low road.

His prostrate body freightened Mr. Bert Sanderson's horse as he was driving home. Unable to attend to the man, himself Mr. Sanderson immediately called up Reeve McIntosh who had retired for the night. Mr. McIntosh and his son hurried along the road, and presently had Hudson back at their home where with the aid of Mrs. McIntosh they worked for a long time to revive the man. He was not totally unconscious but in a state of delerium doubtless the result of his experience.

Hands Badly Torn.

Hudson was mitless and in the last stage of his progress when he was unable to walk further and had crawled along the broken, icy road, both his wrists and palms had been severely cut. Blood had congealed about these wounds and many applications of warm water were required to cleanse his hands. His legs were stiff and numb and he could scarcely eat.

Hudson said he had left Toronto on Tuesday morning to walk to Peterboro where he intended to engage with a lumbering party. He had spent six days on the road and had still to cover 4½ miles, but the pitiful feature of his story is that when he tottered and fell to the ground and vainly tried to crawl along the road be shunned appealing to the farmers because further west they had refused him food. This does not refer to North Monaghan township but to those adjoining on the w t. Hudson told of having applied at some houses for food, but was turned away so often that he bent his ebbing strength in an effort to reach Peterboro.

He wore an overcoat and was otherwise decently dressed, and apparently lacked only mitts. To Mr. McIntosh he gave his name and address also stated that he was 39 years old.

This morning the Reeve brought him in to Nicholls Hospital. His feet were swoolen and they could scarcely get his boots on. He was showing other effects of his experience and stated to the family that had he not received their attention that he would undoubtedly have "cashed in his checks."

The Sportsmen's Patriotic Association has offered to raise a battalion in Toronto under Mr. R. H. Greer, of that city.

Captain Mabee, of the Toronto Highlanders, has requested command of a battalion.

A telegram has been received by the Minister of Militia from Vancouver stating that from 15,000 to 20,000 desirable men can be recruited there.

STEADY RECRUITING FOR 93rd BATTALION IN CITY AND COUNTY

Havelock Recruits Got Warm Welcome at Armouries This Morning---New Regimental Badges Have Arrived---School of Training For Every Overseas Battalion --To-day's Military News.

Recruiting for the 93rd Battalion is progressing steadily both here and in the County and by to-night the Battalion will have reached the 550 mark. A fresh campaign, to stimulate recruiting is being inaugurated, a feature of which will be a visit from Major-General Sir Sam Hughes. The 93rd has detachments at Havelock, Norwood, Lakefield and Apsley now, in addition to the new companies and the staff here.

A pleasing incident occurred this morning, when ten recruits from the Havelock detachment arrived at the Armouries to secure their uniforms and equipment. As the boys in khaki saw their new comrades they greeted them with a round of cheering that rattled the windows. The Havelock contingent appreciated the warmness of the welcome.

This question is probably a difficult one to overcome at the present moment, but care should be exercised that too much is not served to any individual at one time, there is a plentiful supply and it is considered that if a normal helping was served for the first time then if any man wished to have his plate replenished it is a small matter to send to the kitchen.

Unnecessary waste ocurring from carelessness will not be tolerated.

It has been brought to the notice of the Commanding Officer that the practice of loitering in the streets is still being done. Owing to the illness of Bandmaster Walter Hughes the banquet arranged by the band of the 93rd for to-night has been indefinitely postponed.

Lieut. Clarence Henry of Peterborough, who since September, 1914, has been with the Canadian Engineers at Halifax, has been appointed to the 109th Lindsay Overseas Battalion. He is the second Peterborough Officer to join the 109th.

Pioneer Sergt. H. Castle of the 39th Battalion, Belleville, is home on leave.

The new regimental cap and collar badges for the 93rd Battalion were issued to-day. The badges were selected by a committee of the officers and are unique in design and handsome in appearance. The Maple Leaf and Crown are the basis of the badge. The number, 93rd, is in the centre, surrounded by the words 'Peterboro' and Overseas Battalion, while underneath is the word 'Canada.'

Sergt. Frank Traynor of the 93rd Battalion is in Havelock on training duty in connection with the Havelock detachment of the 93rd.

The following team will represent the 93rd Battalion in their Intermediate O.H.A. game at Campbellford, to-night:

MAYOR J. J. DUFFUS DELIVERS HIS INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Outlines Policy for the Year 1916 —Standing Committees Selected —Co-operation is Asked For— A Star Chamber Caucus—New Committee Formed.

QUESTION OF FINANCES

The inaugural meeting of the 1916 City Council was held this morning in the presence of three citizens. The latter occupied seats in the gallery, from where they viewed the proceedings with manifest interest. Mayor J. J. Duffus took his seat on the raised dias for the first time. With him was Ex-Mayor William Buller. The latter, at the close of the proceedings, shook hands with each member of the Council, and wished them success throughout the year. Mayor Duffus welcomed the new members of the Council, after which he produced his inaugural address. The latter contained the following:

Policy Outlined.

Gentlemen.—Permit me to welcome you to the first meeting of our City Council for the year 1916. I am glad to see so many of the members of last year's Council present, and congratulate the aldermen who were returned again by the electors. I also, for myself and on your behalf, welcome Alderman Duncan, an experienced civic legislator, back to the Council, and congratulate and welcome Alderman Galbraith, who takes his seat as an alderman for the first time.

We begin another year's work in stirring and trying times. Our Government has sent out a call for still more men to offer themselves for the service of Canada and the Empire in the great struggle in Europe, a struggle that must be continued until our Empire and her allies are completely victorious. I know that the call will meet with hearty response, for the loyalty and patriotism of the Canadian people, their deep conviction of the absolute righteousness of the cause for which we fight, and the knowledge that cause must prevail in the interests of the welfare of our civilization and of the human race, will cause the men of Canada to come forward in sufficient numebrs and ready for my service which their King and country will require of them.

This Council will have a duty to perform, in conjunction with the Governments, in looking after the interests of the soldiers who return to Peterborough, and in giving guidance and assistance where they are needed, and an organization should be completed adequate for this purpose.

Sewage Disposal.

One of the matters that will demand our immediate attention is the sewage disposal works. This is a work regarding which we have no option. Higher authority, which we must obey, has ordered us to provide purification works, and through unavoidable delays we have been longer than we should have been in carrying out the order. The work on the outfall sewer is progressing, and the Board of Works must give earnest attention at once to the location for and construction of the disposal works.

The house holders in a portion of the city have been waiting for some time for sewers, as it was necessary or advisable to wait until the new outfall sewer was in operation before sewers were laid on their streets. The people have been patient, as they understood the difficulty, but they should not be left without this service any longer than is necessary.

Surface Water Drainage.

Some consideration has been given to surface water drainage, and the

SIX KILLED IN EXPLOSION IN A POWDER PLANT

Terrible Accident in Factory of the Du Pont Powder Company, Near Wilmington, Deleware

COUNTRYSIDE SHOOK

Examiner Special:

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 10. — Six are known to be dead, forty-two are reported missing, and many injured, following a terrific explosion early to-day in No. 1 Plant of the Du Pont Powder Company's Carney Point Plant at Penn's Grove, N.J., across the river from here.

The explosion occurred at 12:30, a few minutes after the night shift went on duty. The terrific blast shook the countryside for miles around, and interrupted all wire connection with the powder town.

The early night shift had just embarked on the ferryboat Long Beach, when the blending tower of the plant went up in the air. The boat was only a few hundred feet out in the Delaware river on its way to Wilmington. The men on board were knocked off their feet, windows were shattered, and all lights extinguished by the blast. Many of the men were almost paralyzed with fear when the ferry boat docked. All they could do was mutter incoherently, and could not throw any light on the number of killed or injured.

A few who mastered their emotion declared they heard three explosions, the first, which was followed by two lesser ones, they said, was like a thousand 42 centimetre guns fired simultaneously.

A Plea For a Large Meeting

Dr. G. Stewart Cameron Points Out Desirability of Attending Health Association Gathering

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir:—Permit me through your paper to draw the attention of the members of the Peterboro Health Association to the adjourned annual meeting in the council chamber at 8 p.m., Wednesday, Jan. 12th.

Owing to the press of affairs in general the association is having a hard struggle to meet the obligatories assured in more prosperous times.

If the 400 members, and citizens generally who are interested just knew how encouraging a good meeting is to the officers upon whose shoulders rests the bulk of the work of trying to meet all the demands made upon the association, I am quite sure they would come out in goodly numbers and while by their presence, lending support to the cause they would at the same time learn something of the work being carried on.

May I ask the members or would-be members to mark the date and make sure of giving us an hour on Wednesday evening?

Yours faithfully,
G. STEWART CAMERON.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, JAN. 7, 1916

THE MAYOR'S ADDRESS.

One must give unreserved commendation to the inaugural address of Mayor Duffus at the opening meeting of the council this morning. It is comprehensive, moderate and well considered. It presents, with sufficient emphasis, the problems that will demand the best consideration, best judgment and wisest action of the mayor and aldermen during the coming year. Of course, in such an address covering so much ground and touching so many topics, it could not be expected that a definite solution of each individual problem should be suggested. The work to be done during the coming year is also too comprehensive to be made the subject of a general policy of action without conference and consideration.

Mayor Duffus, however, touches the edge of a general solution of civic problems, when, in a closing paragraph he insists upon the necessity of cooperation. This applies, of course specifically to the members of the aldermanic board. And it seems indicated that an early opportunity should be taken by the mayor and aldermen to have a conference or series of conferences, in which the problems adverted to in the mayor's address would receive intelligent discussion and attention. By promptly and as thoroughly as possible threshing out these problems and providing means and ways of meeting them, the ground work of an intelligent programme of action could be laid, and the relative bearing of these problems upon each other and upon the general civic situation would be determined Thus would be laid the ground work of a systematic course of action that would not only assure correspondingly effective administration and execution, but permit of the application of the spirit and work of aldermanic cooperation, for which the mayor makes so timely and effective a plea.

It is to be remembered that not only cooperation among members of the council, but of the general body of ratepayers, is desirable. The people will be in a position to give this moral and at times practical cooperation if they are kept in amicable and friendly terms with the governing body; and this can be done by the city fathers taking the people into their confidence and keeping them reasonably informed upon the condition of public interests and the progress of events. By cooperation among its members and by the active sympathy of an informed body of constituents, the work of civic government can be greatly facilitated.

THE IMPOSSIBLE AND THE POSSIBLE.

At this distance and at momentary glances, we can't understand and appreciate the Asquith ministry and what of the impossible it has done. We see from time to time, little surface flurries that look like incipient revolution, but they amount to nothing and the ministry pursues the even tenor of its way. Before the war storm broke the Asquith government had won its spurs. It had grasped and dealt with perplexing domestic problems that had their root in the abuses or habits and customs of centuries—it had conquered conviction and overcome prejudice. Since the war broke out the Asquith government—to continue the title under the coalition form—has literally worked wonders. We have heard a little petty political criticism; but with all this the government has gone resolutely, if not serenely, on its way. Great Britain entered the war in a state of ludicrous unpreparedness—her only sound and really arm was the naval arm, with which she has effected establishment of the dominance of the British navy in all the seas of the world. She has swept enemy shipping and enemy commerce from the face of the deep and made British supremacy of the sea a practical fact, not a mere poetic fiction. In military matters the Asquith government has done what could not be done in or by any other nation in the world. It has increased the corporal's guard with which it entered the war to a magnificent multitude of four million clothed and equipped soldiers. And every one of these soldiers has slipped voluntarily into the ranks, without the aid of military conscription or military decree. It is due to the Asquith government that Great Britain is to-day, the dominant military consideration of the world, as she has been and is the overwhelming naval power. Then while the government has had the navy seizing and holding all the seven seas, while it has been raising the greatest army in its or the world's history, it has been financing its allies' armies, and putting Russia and other states on their financial feet. We may pin-prick the Asquith government, and find a few motes in the sunbeams of its notable achievements, but we must admit that it has accomplished the impossible; we must admit that the Empire and the world needs the government. It has during the war had moments of weakness or of hesitation in the face of unprecedented problems, but in the main it ha stood four square to all the winds that blew and held the fate of the Empire in the most colossal crisis of its history steady and true. The world and the Empire owe it an immense debt. In the past two fateful years—the past half dozen years, indeed—it has achieved the impossible in many ways. Now that it has only the possible to achieve—to win the victory that is in sight—for which we command the essential conditions—we can still give it our confidence.

Mayor J. J. Duffus Delivers His, etc.

Council should take this subject up and lay out a comprehen-ive system. So far this work has been confined almost entirely to the streets which have been paved, but in order to protect the roadways, as well as for the convenience of the ratepayers, more drains should be constructed. Consideration should be given to the question of how the drains will be paid for, whether by the local improvement method or otherwise, and with a system laid out and approved of, the work should be carried on as circumstances will permit.

In connection with the care of the streets, the question of the extension of the system of oiling the roadways should be taken up and decided.

The Paving Question.

Considerable paving of streets has been done in the last few years. We have good payments on the business streets and on some of the streets leading out of the city, but such pavements, while of the proper class for the business streets, to my mind are more expensive than are necessary for residential streets. Time and study should be given to decide upon a class of roadway that will be the most suitable and best for the residential streets and that can be constructed by our own workmen.

I am convinced that there should be another bridge over the Otonabee river to connect more closely the western and eastern parts of the city and to serve the business and other interests, and I hope that this will be kept in mind in order that it may be dealt with as soon as the financial conditions will justify taking up such work.

Public Ownership.

An important matter for this city is that of a permanent supply of power. We have made good progress in municipally owned public utilities, but until the people own power as well as the electric distributing system we should not be at all satisfied. There are two methods in this province by which the people may acquire and operate a power plant. One is by the municipality owning and operating it directly and the other is by doing so through the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. There are sentimental and other consideraitons which influence one in the direction of direct ownership. At the same time we must remember that this city several years ago entered into a contract with the Ontario Commission for power and without its aid could not have secured either the power or the distributing plant. The comparative economy of the operation of a plant of a size suitable for one city and by one city, and of a much larger plant operated by the Commission for a whole district, must be given consideration, and also that the Ontario Commission supported us in every way in the progress we have made and that without its aid we would not have accomplished what we have done. We owe much to that Commission and should not forget that we do. Whether through the Ontario Commission as trustee for the people, or otherwise, no time should be lost unnecessarily in securing publicly owned power. I do not mean that time has been unnecessarily lost, but we should support all efforts in that direction and take the initiative in it if it is found advisable to do so.

There is one part of the city that is entirely without sewage and largely without fire protection. I refer to the northern portion of the East Ward. This should be given prompt consideration and the best means of supplying these deficiencies devised.

The question of improved street lighting has been held over until the Utilities Commission is in a position to take up with advantage and in a manner that will not lead to loss later on. In the meantime more street lighting was installed last year and I believe is appreciated, but I hope that the whole matter may soon be dealt with comprehensively and adequately.

The Exhibition.

The defeat of the proposed by-law to authorise the purchase of the grounds now used for Exhibition purposes, did nott, I am satisfied, mean that the people of the city do not appreciate the advantages of a good Exhibition and of suitable grounds and buildings for that purpose, but it did mean that they do not wish these grounds. Under these circumstances we should co-operate with the Directors of the Exhibition to secure grounds acceptable to the ratepayers in order that the Exhibition may be placed on a satisfactory basis.

The construction of hydro-electric radial railways, of which ex-Mayor Buller is an ardent advocate, should be kept in view. Through the Trent Valley District Association resolutions for municipalities in this district have been sent to the Ontario Commission asking for reports on proposed lines, and the Commission should be assisted in every way in procuring the necessary information, while at the same time consideration should be given to the advisability of procuring reports upon other lines.

It has been the policy of this city for many years to facilitate the establishment of manufacturing industries here, in which it has been very successful, and this policy will be continued with vigilance and vigor.

Question of Finances.

The question of finances is one that must receive very careful attention. This has been necessary the world over. The city is fortunate in being in a sound financial condition and this satisfactory condition must be maintained. Last spring we were faced with a demand for work which was pressing, but which gradually eased off until later in the summer labour conditions were greatly improved. While it will no doubt be necessary for the Council to take up some permanent works, no more should be done than is necessary if the present circumstances continue, and then only such works as will provide a maxim amount of labour for the money expended. In our ordinary civic affairs, too, we should be most careful, so that we may keep the expenditure and tax rate as low as possible, consistent with good service.

In fact, so long as the war lasts (and may God grant that it will end soon) economy should be the watchword and practice of every public body and of every public body and of every individual, and our resources should be husbanded and applied to the one supreme purpose of winning a victory that will establish peace on a firm foundation.

Co-operation Needed.

I would like to add another watchword for our guidance, and that is co-operation. As members of this Council, in organizing for the business of the year and in carrying on that business, we should lay aside personal desires or personal preferences and keep in view the one point that we are here to act in everything for the public good. The personal element should be lost in the idea of public service. In our relations with the other public bodies co-operation should be, and no doubt will be, our object With some of these, as with the Utilities Commission, our relations will be close, and by working together we should be able to accomplish much in the public interest. The co-operation should also include every citizen, for the ratepayers are the owners of this large business of which the Council and the other public bodies are the directors or trustees, and I will be very glad, as I know the other members of the Council and of the Utilities Commission and the other public bodies will be, to receive suggestions from any citizen who has one to offer. It is not necessary for a citizen to publicly find fault if he has a complaint to make, and public fault finding often has a bad effect in giving those unacquainted with the facts a wrong impression, for we will always be ready to hear complaints regarding what has been done or left undone and to apply a remedy when possible.

Good Public Spirit.

A good public spirit is a valuable asset for a community, and this spirit of citizenship can be brought to its highest development only by all citizens, whether they are native born Canadians or have come from another country or continent, considering themselves and being recognized as citizens with all the responsibilities and privileges that citizenship implies.

I hope I have not wearied you. I desire only a word more. As members of this Council let us transact the business that comes before us promptly and expeditiously, giving every subject the consideration and deliberation that it requires, but not unnecessarily prolonging discussion, so that the number of meetings may not be more than necessary and that those meetings will not be unduly long, maintaining harmony even when we differ in opinion, with becoming dignity as representatives of the people at all times.

Standing Committees.

The Council then resolved itself into a committee of the whole and adjourned to the committee room, where the following standing committees were selected:

Board of Works — Ald. McIntyre, chairman; Aldermen Weir, Saunders, Duncan, Stratton and Galbraith.

Fire, Water and Light.—Ald. Evans, chairman; Aldermen Duncan, Edgar, Saunders, Stratton and Galbraith.

Manufacturers—Ald. Weir, Chairman; Aldermen McIntyre, Langford, Stratton, Duncan and Dobbin.

Finance.—Ald. Stratton, chairman; Aldermen McIntyre, Evans, Weir and Saunders.

Property. — Ald. Saunders, chairman; Aldermen Edgar, Langford, Galbraith, Evans and Duncan.

Legal, Reception and Legislation—Ald. Dobbin, chairman; Aldermen Edgar, Galbraith, Stratton, Duncan, and Langford.

Railways, Parks and Boulevards. — Ald. Edgar, chairman; Aldermen Stratton, Weir, Evans, McIntyre and Dobbin.

This years' Board of Works Committee is composed of six members, and the Mayor, instead of the whole Council, as formerly. The Mayor is a member of all Committees of the Council.

Ald. G. H. Duncan said he had been given to understand that a meeting had been held in the office of Ald. Edgar, and the standing committees slated. "This kind of work has been going on for years," said Ald. Duncan. "I objected to it when I was in the Council before, and I object to it now. We are put here to do our duty, and how are we going to do it if hole-in-the-corner meetings are held?"

"What we desire the most, is efficiency and harmony," said Mayor Duffus, in attempt to subdue the rising storm. To this Ald. Langford voiced his affirmation.

Ald. Edgar—"It is true that some of the boys came around to see me and moreover, Ald Duncan advised me to get them together, and whatever was done would be satisfactory to him."

"That is a lie," interposed Ald. Duncan. The latter explained that he was going up George Street one day when he was approached by Ald. Edgar, who is alleged to have said—"I would like the Fire, Water and Light Committee. Would you like the Board of Works." Ald. Duncan replied that he was not particular whether or not he had a committee.

New Committee.

Ald. Duncan contended that the standing committees were named at the meeting held in Ald. Edgar's office, and that an attempt was being made to form a new committee to be known as "Railways, Parks and Boulevards" so as to give a man a chairmanship.

"My opinion," said Mayor Duffus, "is that we should try to get along with as few and as small committees as possible, consistent with good work."

Despite this the resolution creating the above named committee was carried.

"I think we are going to be burdened with committees," remarked Ald. Stratton, when it looked as though the committee known as the "Legal, Reception, Legislation and Joint with County" would be subdivided and at least two committees created. That part known as the "Joint with County" was assigned to the Board of Works. It deals principally with bridges.

COMPARATIVE COMPULSORY SERVICE DERIDED BY GERMANY

The British Government's modified compulsion bill, which has been passed by a vote of 402 to 105 in the House of Commons, provides for the compulsory enlistment of all bachelors between the ages of 18 and 41, and of all widowers of the same age who have no persons dependent upon them. It exempts Irishmen, who don't need compulsion to induce them to fight, and Quakers, and others who have conscientious scruples about fighting. Munition makers and others in the service of the Government, and those who are supporting relatives, are also exempt. The medical examinations will no doubt exempt a good many more. Naturally the bill has met with a good deal of opposition from people who regard compulsion as non-British, and also from soreheads who are against the government, no matter who is in power; and from journalists with their own little axes to grind. It had, however, the hearty support of the big men of both the great political parties, and it was regarded, and has been long regarded, by Lord Kitchener as indispensable to British victory.

Best, and most convincing of all, the bill had the endorsation involved in the unanimous and most savage condemnation of the German press and people. There could scarcely be a surer indication that the measure is calculated to be of great benefit to Great Britain than the virulent rage into which it has thrown the Germans. Imitation is said to be the sincerest flatery, but the imitation of Germany by Britain seems to be a source of irritation to the Germans. The Vossische Zeitung finds in the British adoption of compulsory service a clutching at the last straw in an attempt to encourage the other Allies. The Cologne Gazette is afraid that the old England is already lost and that the new England will bleed to death in the course of creation. Major Moraht, military expert of the Berliner Tageblatt, said if England passed the new law she would be in the painful position of having taken her reinforcements out of the available supply of men who are engaged in the most important work of organization behind the front. In fact, the whole German press is acutely distressed at the thought of the trouble Great Britain is going to incur through the adoption of even a modified form of the compulsory service system which it holds to be so admirably adapted to German needs.

It is impossible to please some people. The wise men of Berlin disapproved of the British policy of building dreadnoughts, and the Germans who thought that building dreadnoughts was such a capital thing for Germany promptly marked their disapproval of Britain's activity in naval construction by withdrawing their own ships to the safe waters of the Kiel Canal, from which

A Place of Vantage.

Cleaving firmly to the rock," they incessantly hurl defiance to the world in general and the British Navy in particular. The German blockade of British ports having most ingloriously failed they denounce the right little tight little island's most effective blockade of Germany's ports as a blunder and a crime. The German submarines having been driven ignominiously out of the War Zone "Made in Germany" into the Mediterranean they stigmatize submarine slaughter (of Germans) as murder. Even the Anglo-French loan made in the United States is the object of German scorn, contempt and loathing—especially loathing. Not even the singing of the "Song of Hate" can now bring comfort to their troubled souls. It has been called off and replaced by the "Chant of the German Sword." The Berne correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette gives a translation which shows that the Chant, while German in spirit, is decidedly Turkish in style. It might have been taken from the Koran. Here are a few specimen phrases;

"It is no duty of mine to be either just or compassionate" (Mahomet, to do him justice, would never have said that); "it suffices that I am sanctified by my exalted mission. I have slaughtered the old and the sorrowing; I have struck off the breasts of woman; and I have run through the bodies of children who gazed at me with the eyes of the wounded lion. It is meet and right that I should cry aloud my pride, for am I not the flaming messenger of the Lord Almighty.—When Germany the divine is happy, then the rest of the world basks in smiles; but when Germany suffers, God in person is rent with anguish, and wrathful and avenging. He turns all the waters into rivers of blood."

The Chant is very Koranesque and very German, and looks like the kind of fool thing a German would like to sing when about half drunk.—Montreal Herald.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BIG DOINGS AT BROCK STREET RINK WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Lindsay Juniors Will Be Here With 200 or 300 Rooters to Do Battle With the Electric Colts in the First Junior O. H. A. Game—Record Crowd for the Season Will Be Out to See the Junior Classic.

The game that the fans have been looking forward to is coming Wednesday night, when the Peterborough Electric Juniors will clash with their ancient rivals from Lindsay in a Junior O.H.A. game at Brock Street Rink. This is the first O.H.A. game for the Electric Colts this season and for five of them the first O. H. A. game in their career, but the youngsters have had already won their spurs in two hard-fought games against Campbellford and the 93rd Battalion Intermediate O.H.A. teams, both of which they defeated, and their gameness and cleverness has already won for them a place in the hearts of the fans, such a place as was held a few years ago by the celebrated Bear Cats, who, with a team practically new to O.H.A. hockey, battled their way into the semi-finals. The result will be seen on Wednesday night in one of the biggest opening night crowds that has seen a junior game in Peterborough. That it will be a grand battle goes without saying. Lindsay has a clever, sturdy team, with four of last year's semi-finalists as a nucleus, and their 6—1 defeat of Belleville, always formidable adversaries in a junior game shows that this year's Scugog outfit is one that will bear watching all the way. However, the local kids are not at all alarmed by Lindsays' reputation. With two Intermediate scalps tied to their belts they are confident of impressing upon the Lindsay aggregation the fact that no run-away game can be expected. The Lindsay fans are very sweet on their pets, and are running an excursion to Peterborough on a special G.T.R. train. Cap. Simpson's boys will be down with two or three hundred rooters, and there will be some tall noise in old Brock Street Rink Wednesday night when the Scugog seven go into action against the Electric youngsters—the "Cats," as Billy Breen calls them, in an affectionate abbreviation for "wild cats."

Presence of Federal League Was Severe Blow to Baseball

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 8.—Barney Dreyfus, owner of the Pittsburg National League Club, writing in The Yale Daily News, admits that the past season was a precarious one for the National League, but he now looks forward to a revival of interest in baseball because of the settlement of the war conditions brought on by the Federal League. Nearly every club in organized baseball, he says, was obliged to increase its salary list owing to the discontent of players, and in the case of the Pittsburg Club alone this amounted to $44,000 in excess of the payment in normal times. Some of the clubs had a salary list of $115,000. The Federal League, he believes, took $8,000,000 away from the National and American Leagues.

"The abolishment of the Federal League means a better standard of baseball in the minor leagues. Many of the 'big league' players will be forced by greater competition to drop back to the minor leagues, and by this same competition the baseball of the two 'big leagues' will be benefited. Ballplayers will now have to work for us instead of our working for them. During last season the Federal League took away from the National and the American Leagues about $3,000,000.

"The 1915 Pittsburg Club's salary list was some $44,000 in excess of that paid the players on the 1910 club. This is true; salaries were considerably affected by the existence of a third league. On top of this came the dissatisfaction of the public with the conditions which prevailed and with it the resultant falling off in attendance. Some clubs in the National League supported a salary list of $115,000 during 1915. The cost of operating the Pittsburg Ball Club last season was approximately $1,400 for each of the 154 days of the playing season.

"Much has been said of the impending danger (to the player) of lower salaries. If some of the things we hear are to be credited we might be excused for believing that the major leaguer will soon be called upon to work for hod-carriers' wages.

"This time will never come. While the day of wartime pay is over, and while some of the hold-ups will have to come down to their real level, the rank and file of players will continue to be well paid. The good ball player is an artist in his line. The man who is good enough to forge his way from the minors to the big leagues will never be forced to work for day wages. In baseball it is just the same as in any other walk of life. The man who excels is able to command a salary. The other fellow is paid the wages.

"During 1914 there was noted an apathy among the followers of baseball that augured ill for the game. This, I firmly believe, was due to the bickerings and the quarrelings indulged in by reason of the organization of the Federal League and the resultant jumping of certain players.

"In 1915 this apathy was ever more marked. Additional players deserted their clubs, suits and threats of other suits were offered for the delectation of the public; much 'hot air' was in circulation—and the fans could hardly be blamed when they became disgusted.

"The peace settlement effected recently is certain to bring about a renewal of interest—of enthusiasm—and I, for one, believe that baseball is due to enjoy one of its most prosperous years in 1916.

"The past season in the National League was a precarious one. Fortunately the eight clubs were fairly evenly matched and there was a race from start to finish. This, to my way of thinking, is all that saved the club owners, for had there been anything like a runaway the attendances would not have been even as large as they were.

"Doubtless there will be a number of good players thrown on the market. In this connection the thought has occurred to me that it might be well to take thought of the immediate future of the several clubs in the two leagues.

"My idea would be to give the second division clubs — that is, the clubs which finished in the second division last season—first choice. The fact that Pittsburg was out of the first division might cause some persons to impute selfish motives to me; but despite this fact I believe that to strengthen the clubs which trailed last season—Pittsburg, St. Louis, Cincinnati, and New York—would have a beneficial effect.

"It won't do for any one club to take all the good players that are to be rendered available. A runaway race in either league next season would undoubtedly do harm to baseball. The public wants a contest with every club having a fair chance, not a walkover.

"As regards the opportunities for college players to break into big league baseball, I consider that they have to learn the game all over. The methods employed in professional baseball are different from those in collegt baseball. The characteristics of college players are excellent fielding but very poor batting.

"In spite of all that has been said against college men playing summer baseball I think that a player will learn more in one summer of baseball than in two or three seasons of college baseball."

93rd Playing At Campbellford

Soldier Team is Visiting the Eastern Town To-night For First O. H. A. Game

The 93rd Battalion Intermediate O. H. A. team open their O.H.A. season to-night, when the boys in khaki will play at Campbellford. It was the intention to run an excursion to the Eastern town, but owing to the fact that the 93rd Band had arranged a banquet to-night and also on account of the limited accomodation for spectators in the Campbellford rink, the idea was dropped. The soldiers' team left on the 1.30 G.T.R. train this afternoon, confident of opening their season with a victory. Their first home game is scheduled for next Friday night, when they meet Cobourg at Michael's at Brock Street Rink.

HOCKEY

There should be a good attendance at the meeting in the Y.M.C.A. to-night for the organization of a City Hockey League. Such an organization does invaluable work in bringing to light youngsters of ability. Nearly every player on this year's Junior O.H.A. team is a graduate of the Junior City League or the Church League.

The Juniors will practice to-morrow night from 7 to 8. The following players are requested to be on hand sharp at 7 o'clock. C. Montgomery, Sorvis, Legros, Cherritt, Graham, Hamilton, Rose, F. Montgomery, Bartley, L. Kennaley.

The following intermediates are requested to turn out. Eakins, O. Kenneally, Kelly, McMartin, Phelan, and others who want practice.

Before putting new gloves on warm them and powder the hands well. Don't put them on hurriedly.

"BRITANNIA'S CALL TO HER SONS"—This striking cartoon drawn for the London Chronicle by a famous Dutch artist is very appropriate to the moment in Canada. Britannia is embracing a young soldier with the exhortation "Free son of Canada, do your duty to your Home Land."

COBOURG TEAM HERE TO-NIGHT FOR A GAME WITH THE ELECTRICS

In spite of the soft weather there is a good sheet of ice ready at Brock St., Rink for to-night's intermediate O. H. A. game, when the Cobourg St. Michael's will make their first appearance of the season in Peterboro, clashing with the Electric intermediates. A red hot game may be expected as the teams are old rivals and the feasco at Cobourg last week has not helped to smooth out matters much. The Cobourg team has a victory over Campbellford on the latter's ice to their credit, while the Electrics have beaten Campbellford here so that on paper the two teams look evenly matched. To-night's game should be well worth seeing. Claude Montgomery the clever little goal keeper of the Electric juniors will guard the nets for the intermediates to-night. Following is the line-up.

Goal—C. Montgomery.
Defence—Spratt.
Cover Point—Coughlin
Rover—Evans.
Centre—W. Hamilton.
Right Wing—McMartin.

Annual Meeting of Automobile Association

The annual meeting of the Automobile Association will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers to-night at 8 o'clock.

During the past year the Association has not received the support that it merited. This is no doubt due to the feeling that in the past the Association has made no adequate return for the fee paid. Of the fee of five dollars, two dollars are sent to the Ontario Motor League. The League in return sends to each member the Motor Magazine and uses the remaining dollar in its general fund.

The three dollars remain in the local treasury, and during the past year this was used in raking the stones from the roads in the vicinity of the city.

The connection with the Ontario Motor League has this year helped several local autoists in legal matters, has reduced insurance premiums until now we have a standard policy at an equitable rate and although it has not been able to prevent an increase in the license tax, has at least secured the promise that the money so raised will be spent in road improvement.

Through the efforts of the League road signs have been erected on all the leading roads of the province. The Ontario Motor League has under its consideration the question of interchange of licenses with the bordering states and at its annual meeting next week has a speaker from New York State who will urge reciprocity in licenses between that State and Ontario. This should help the tourist trade in our city.

The Association should have your support for only by means of union can the autoists secure any influence with those who regulate the laws concerning motor vehicles.

Come out to the meeting to-night at the Bank of Montreal and give your views concerning the work of the Association.

PITCHER "KING" COLE DEAD.

Yankee Boxman, Once Famous as a Cub, Dies in Michigan.

BAY CITY, Mich., Jan 8.—Leonard J. ("King") Cole, pitcher on the New York American League baseball team, and formerly with the Chicago National League Club, died at his home here on Thursday. He had been seriously ill for several weeks.

"King" Cole had a career of varied fortunes in baseball. Discovered by a scout of the Chicago National League club while playing with the Bay City team in the South Michigan League in 1900, Cole joined the Cubs the following year and became a baseball sensation. He practically pitched Frank Chance's great team into the National League championship, winning twenty games and losing only four. This was the best year Cole had in any League. He remained with the Chicagos until 1913, when he was sent to the Columbus team in the American Association.

Frank Chance always considered Cole a great pitcher, when he was in condition, and when the Peerless Leader came here to manage the Yankees one of his first official acts was to bring Cole back from the minors. He received a two-year contract from Frank Farrell, then owner of the Yankees. The contract expired at the end of the 1915 season.

Cole did not attain much success while with the Yankees, and was incapacitated almost the entire 1915 season. He was operated upon shortly after the start of the season, and was in poor condition all year.

A new method of cleaning clothes is suggested: Dip the clothes' brush in the yolk of an egg, so that the bristles are quite wet. Allow it to dry, and then use. This treatment has, it is said, the effect to make the brushing specially effective.

"Could You Believe It?"

"Man, Sandy, what thin legs you've got," said the minister as he met Sandy coming through a field.

"Weel, sir, if you had come through the trouble I've come through you wid have thin legs tae."

"I'm sorry to hear that, Sandy, but what trouble have you come through?"

"Weel, sir, when I wis a bit laddie I had tae wear by faither's boots, an' they were so big for me I had tae stuff straw in the taes. Weel, sir, yin day the calves o' ma legs came doon an' ate up the straw, an' they've never gane back since."

OTTAWA, Jan. 9.—Plans for the military training schools to be established in Canada were announced to-night by Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Milita. Schools will be established, one to every overseas battalion, for preliminary work as advanced as non-commissioned officers training. One or more training schools will also be established in each district for more advanced work. It is intended to receive new candidates on Tuesday of each week. Every man in a battalion is eligible to take the N.C.O's training and secure an N.C.O's certificate.

OTTAWA, Jan. 9.—Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, to-night made a statement in criticism of those employers of labor who have been keeping their men back from enlisting. After referring to the agitation begun among interested persons to keep their workmen, engaged in Canadian workmen engaged in Canadian factories, banking institutions and commercial establishments, as the case might be, from the front, the Minister stated: "I am of the opinion that all institutions, even munition factories, should release everyone desirous of, or fitted to become an overseas volunteer. I believe that the Canadian Government should summarily release every man in the same position. I think that young farmers should also be allowed to go, and in this connection the suggestion has been made to me by a prominent cleric that the clergymen of Canada and others who cannot serve might well play their part in assisting such young men to go, even if such assistance should involve helping out with the crops of gathering the harvest.

"It is estimated that there are upwards of 25,000 young men capable of bearing arms, and anxious to do so, in the banks and other commercial institutions of Canada who are not being allowed to go," said the Minister. "This condition should not exist. Why should not women replace these young men while the war is on?"

The Minister stated to-night that even yet there seemed to be some misunderstanding as to how to enlist. All that is necessary is for a prospective recruit to apply to any officer in an overseas battalion, whose duty it is to see that the candidate is attached to any Canadian militia regiment, and then to an overseas corps for training. Those eligible as officers should apply to the Minister of Militia, district officer or divisional officer.

If your foot slip you may recover your balance, but if your tongue slip you cannot recall your words.

"I have a dog that's nearly thirty inches high." "That's nothing. I have one that stands over four feet."

Collector: "Why haven't you paid your gas bill?" Consumer: "The light was so very poor I could not see to read the account."

"Why are laundry women the most forgiving beings on earth?" "Because the more cuffs you give them the more they do for you."

Farmer's Wife: "Are you the same man who ate my apple pastry last week?" Labourer—"No, mum, I'll never be the same man again."

GRANDPA'S FIRST SMOKE.

That Was in the Days of the Cinnamon See-gar.

"Some of you young gentlemen," said Dr. Oldfish, "may readily recall the day on which, defying all parental warnings and appeals, you smoked your first cigarette, and perhaps even now you marvel at the amazing audacity attending that event, in which a few whiffs of the nicotian weed mingled with the funky odour of burning paper.

"In the youth of your grandfathers the cigarette was unknown in these Western wilds. We had never seen it. We had read of it associated with the beetle-browed, swarthy, stealthy Spanish villain, who, dagger in hand, was about to stab the hero, when—presto! the beautiful signora came to the rescue and the villain was foiled, foiled!

"Grandfather's first smoke was a cigar—no, see-gar—and well does he remember the day, the very hour. Grandfather defied parental admonition, not openly as Ajax defied the lightning, but skulking behind a neighbour's woodpile with half a dozen confederates in crime. The young fellows have never enjoyed the luxury of a cinnamon see-gar. You have no idea of the amount of pleasure, heaped up and running over, contained in one of those ancient twofers—and the full measure of atonement contained in the same wrinkly wrapper.

"The seasoned smoker of that early time considered the addition of a drop of essence of cinnamon, sometimes furnished gratuitously by the druggist at the nearby corner, as a superfluity. It was, he held, like gilding refined gold or painting the lily. Yet he admitted, drawing this admission from past experience, that a little drap of cinnamon might help some to a beginner.'

"The cinnamon see-gar is about to be lighted. The end has been bitten off with a shudder as the boy's white teeth catch the fragments of the weed. How the wind blows! Hold your hat over the match, John, or it will go out. Is the see-gar lighted? Puff, puff, puff. Oh, it's going famously. You catch the pungent taste of the cinnamon on the tongue. The smoke is filled with it. The sweet incense rises to the skies.

"Delightful exhileration, followed by intoxication; then a strange, bewildering agitation—but why enter upon the painful details of the experiences that follow? No, you don't want any supper that evening and not much breakfast next morning. The sweet odour of the cinnamon has departed. Nothing remains but a bad taste in the mouth and a sickening smell of dead, very dead, cinnamon in your clothes, in your hair, everywhere.

"Yes, the world has moved on since that day. Whatever the effect may be of the boy's first smoke on the parents, the first cigarette does not make him sick. He is as immune from qualms of stomach and of conscience as the seasoned offender.

The two motor cars had almost collided and one of the drivers was expressing his opinion of the other with great freedom.

"What's the matter with you?" demanded the other. "What are you making all this fuss about? We haven't hurt you or your car. You can't bring an action against us, you know."

"I know I can't sir—I know I can't!" shouted the truculent one. "That's just my point!"—Ladies' Home Journal.

ON A VISIT HERE FROM BANFF, ALTA.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Reid in the City Renewing Acquaintances

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Reid and daughter of Banff, Alta., are in the city for a month. Mrs. Reid's father, Mr. John Tilroop, Homewood Avenue, is not well at the present time, and Mr. and Mrs. Reid are home to see him.

Mr. Reid states that Banff this year had the greatest number of travellers pass through it in its existence. This possibly was owing to the fact that tourists going or coming from the San Francisco Exhibition would drop off at Banff, one way. Banff is about the only town that is known not to be conducted by a Board of Aldermen and Mayor. All business of a local nature is directed from Ottawa and the system has proved eminently satisfactory.

ALL SERVICEABLE GUNS AND HOWITZERS WERE GOT AWAY

Gallipoli Peninsula Completely Evacuated by British and French Forces —Tip Was Cleared Saturday

LONDON, January 10.—The campaign at the Dardanelles has been abandoned. The positions at the tip of the Gallipoli Peninsula, which we retained when the British troops left Suvla Bay and Anzac Cove on November 19, have now been evacuated ed. Not a British or a French soldier now remains on the Peninsula, where more than 100,000 men were killed or wounded since April last in futile attempts to force the Turkish lines.

The evacuation of the last allied positions were affected, according to the official announcement, with the loss of one British soldier wounded, the French suffering no casualties. This appears to have been an even more remarkable exploit than the withdrawal from the Suvla Bay and Anzac positions, where the losses incurred were "insignificant." On the earlier occasion, the statement said, the operations were carried out without the Turks being aware of the movement, although the allied troops had been in closest touch with the enemy. The withdrawal of so large a force from the tip of the Peninsula under the guns of the Turkish batteries on both sides of Strait would seem to indicate that the Turks again were outwitted.

Renewed activity of various kinds noted by the Turkish official communications in the past few days has presumably been in the nature of preparations for the final act of the Dardanelles tragedy. To-night's official statement, covering the period from Thursday to Saturday, records increasing effectiveness of the reinforced Turkish batteries, which have been drawing in and concentrating on the allies' remaining positions.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT.

The official communication issued this evening says:

"General Sir Charles Monro reports the complete evacuation of Gallipoli has been successfully carried out.

"All the guns and howitzers were got away, with the exception of 17 worn-out guns, which were blown up by us before leaving.

"Our casualties amounted to one member of the British rank and file wounded.

"There were no casualties among the French.

"General Monro states that the accomplishment of this difficult task was due to Generals Birdwood and Davies, and invaluable assistance rendered in an operation of the highest difficulty by Admiral De Roebuck and the Royal navy."

SAY THEY DID IT.

The British as a result of a violent battle have completely evacuated Sedul Bahr, with great losses, says a despatch from Constantinople. Not a single man remained behind. The despatch adds that newspaper reports from the Dardanelles say that the Turkish troops have completely driven the French and the British from Seddul Bahr and that Gallipoli Peninsula "is now completely clear of the enemy."

"A semi-official report from Constantinople, according to an Amsterdam despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company, claims "the capture by the Turks of a great enemy camp and nine guns and the sinking of an enemy vessel with troops near Seddul Bahr."

The Turkish official story of the bombardment preceding the evacuation, reads as follows:

"On the Dardanelles front Thursday night there was rather brisk bomb fighting on our right and left wings. On Friday your artillery for some hours at intervals violently shelled hostile trenches opposite our left wing causing heavy damage. In the centre our artillery and our bombs destroyed some hostile trenches, and bomb and mortar positions. On our left wing there was a feeble artillery duel. Two cruisers, a monitor and 4 torpedo craft assisted the enemy's land batteries.

"At 2 o'clock in the afternoon our shells caused an outbreak of fire in the enemy's camp near Teke Burnu.

"On the night of Thursday our batteries in the Narrows effectively shelled the enemy's camp near Seddul Bahr, and on Friday the enemy's batteries in the region of Teke Burnu. The enemy's Seddul Bahr batteries and a cruiser and a monitor anchored near Teke Burnu replied unsuccessfully. On Saturday our Anatolian batteries effectively shelled the harbors at Seddul Bahr and Teke Burnu."

"The Pulpit As Seen From the Pew"

The Association decided to present a trophy for competition in the Junior Church Hockey League.

DEATH IS WEARY.

"I am weary," said Death, "I am weary,
For never since time began
Have I labored with toil so unceasing
In the harvest field of man,
Till my sickle's brightness is dim and dull
In all its length and span.

"I am weary," said Death, "I am weary,
And my heart is filled with ruth
That I cut not the golden grain of Age.
But the greening grain of Youth,
And the heavy sheaves are all drenched with blood—
With blood and with tears forsooth

"I am weary," said Death, "I am weary,
Oh! when shall there be surcease
From the toil of this terrible harvest?
When, when shall the world have peace,
And War, the relentless taskmaster,
From my labour give release?"

PRESENTATION TO MISS ANNIE GARVEY

By a Number of Her Friends in Douro, on Eve of Her Departure For Toronto

A pleasant evening was spent at the home of Miss Annie Garvey, Douro, on Monday last, when a number of her friends assembled to say farewell on the eve of her departure for Toronto, where she intends to take up her duties as nurse in training. During the evening she was presented with a handsome fitted club bag, accompanied by the following address, read by her cousin, Miss Garvey:

Dear Annie.—It is with deep regret that we have learned of your intended departure from our midst. During your life here, you have indeed proved a friend to many, by your kind and generous ways. Now you are about to devote you attention to a new field of labour, one which we all know to result in one of the most efficient and charitable of professions. Here again you illustrate your good will and kindly feelings towards others. Where possibly you will sacrifice many little enjoyments of life in order to minister to the wants of the poor suffering.

Although by your departure we lose one of our kind and sociable friends, still be hope it will be the beginning of a prosperous and happy future for

We all join in wishing you success in your new labours and ask you to accept this little gift as a memento of your old comrades.

Signed in behalf of the friends here assembled:

Emma O'Brien.
Margaret Fitzgerald.
Mrs. D. J. O'Grady.

Miss Garvey was taken completely by surprise but expressed her heartfelt thanks to all present and although she was sorry to be leaving Douro, was glad to know she had so many warm friends.

Refreshments were served after which the remainedr of the evening was spent in music, singing and dancing.

Her many friends unite in wishing her every success in her new undertaking.

Charlotte Street Church To Be Turned Over To St. James'

South End Congregation Will Remove and Rebuild the Edifice to Suit Their Growing Necessities—Announcement Was Made at the Continuation of the Dedicatory Services in Connection With the Opening of Trinity Church—Rev. J. W. Aikens, D.D., of Toronto, Was the Speaker.

The old Charlotte Street Methodist Church, together with the furnishings, have been donated to the congregation of St. James' Methodist Church, and will at some future date, be removed and rebuilt to suit the needs of the congregation to the south. This announcement was made at the services held yesterday in Trinity Methodist Church. One week ago the Rev. B. Breatrex, of St. James' Methodist Church, addressed the trustee board relative to the growing necessities of his charge, and requested assistance from the board in the form of the old Charlotte Street Church, recently vacated by the congregation of Trinity Church. This was agreed upon and a resolution to that effect was read yesterday morning to the congregation of Trinity Church. Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Trinity Church, asked the congregation to signify their approval of the act by standing up, which they did in a manner that left no doubt as to its meaning. Rev. Mr. Wilson pointed out that the Charlotte Street Church has been in the service of the Lord for over fifty years, and now that it was to be turned over to St. James' Church, it would continue in the good work.

The Sermon.

Rev. J. W. Aikens, D.D., of the Metropolitan Church, Toronto, was the speaker at both the morning and evening services. His text at the morning service was taken from Matthew 3:3—"Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight."

"If God is to do anything for us we must prepare a way for Him," said the speaker. "His ways are made known to us through our obedience and faith to Him. Until we obey the Lord we need not expect and further revelation. God's ways are right and equal. Our ways are wrong. How can we expect God to change his ways to accommodate our ways when His are right and ours are wrong. Don't think you can command the admiration of God on account of this beautiful church. God is looking on more beautiful buildings than this all the time. What He wants to know is —'Can I use this church to redeem sinners?'"

Too Much Form.

"If hell and sin wasn't a fact you wouldn't need this church," said the Rev. Mr. Aikens. "The church is suffering from too much form and convention. There are not enough spiritual adventures. When I visit different churches throughout the country, I am told not to say Amen—'It isn't good form, not to say the Lord's prayer'—The choir will chant it, and many other similar admonitions. It makes me sick. Such people might say it wasn't good form to follow Christ. He was born in a manger. That was bad. He associated with republicans and sinners. That wasn't good form. He died on the cross between two thieves. That was awful."

The speaker spoke of the dangers of an "exclusive" church. "John Wesley," he said, "had no church. He preached from the tail end of a waggon."

"THE FIRST NECESSITY OF THE HOUR IS TO WIN THIS WAR"

Powerful Sermon on Conscription by the Rev. Mr. Peever at the George Street Church Last Night

"Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." Matt. xxii., 21. Such was the text chosen by the Rev. Mr. Peever to illustrate his sermon entitled: "Conscription or Voluntary Service for the Empire: Which will it be?" Seldom has Mr. Peever been heard to better effect than in his thought-inspiring sermon last night, breathing, as it did, loyalty to the Empire; and his words fell upon the ears of his hearers with double force when it was remembered that his son is now wearing the King's uniform. Only those can speak from the heart whose heart cords have been touched.

"The first necessity of the hour," said he, "is to win this war"; and the purport of his stirring address was: If we cannot win this war by voluntary service then it must be won by conscription.

He had not chosen this subject, he said, to incite curiosity. It is one of the sternest facts that faces us today, and it is right that we very early form some thought on this question.

In first Samuel, the eighth chapter, we have a full application of the principle of conscription. Samuel tells the people when they selected a king that he (the king) would exercise great power over them: that he would take the finest of the people to serve him; that he would take their harvests and their vineyards, and that without pay: that he would take one-tenth of their flocks, one-tenth of their seed. Such was the earliest form of conscription. And more than that, he set them to make munitions of war, and chariots for his army.

This is the conscription of one man, and it may be the will of a man very autocratic. After the reign of Solomon the people asked to be relieved of the burden.

There is, however, a form of conscription according to the will of the people through their chosen representatives.

Taxation is conscription in money. A decree of a City Council granting one mill on the dollar for patriotic purposes is a conscription. We say that it is a right thing to do, that it is perfectly legitimate. Conscription, or the setting aside of certain blocks of land in the North-West for the service of the state, as school lands, is another form of the same principle. Succession duties on the estates of rich men is still another; all recognized by the will of the people through their chosen representatives.

When the Government wanted to protect the public against the corn ring it bought up a hundred million bushels of wheat: conscription for a great purpose.

It was recognized in feudal times, and all through history this principle has been observed. It is recognized even by democratic governments to-day.

If our young men were living in France, Germany or Austria, they would receive a message from the State on their coming of age, to report at a certain city, there to spend two or three years of their life in training for the service of the State.

In Great Britain we have never had conscription. We have always depended on voluntary service for the requirements of army and navy. All through the centuries we have been able to maintain our proud position, man the high seas and sustain a small standing army, from those who were willing to serve their country. Voluntary service has ever been the pride of Great Britain. How we sing of Britons being free! How we glory in the strength of the Empire!

Since the war began we have been compelled to compare our strength with that of other nations. We are being tested as never before. Men are asking: Have we had the proper principle that would enable us to roll up a sufficient army to meet the odds against us?

Truly we have been proud of our system of voluntary service. By this wonderful principle our explorers, our discoverers and pioneers have gone forth, north, east, south, west, giving their lives to extend our territory from pole to pole.

Other nations could not understand our Empire. Great Britain, they thought, had reached a period of decay; when compared with France and organized Germany they imagined our voluntary system would not bind us together. On the contrary, this very principle of voluntary service has been a bond of unity bringing us together as never before: free nations united to a free motherland.

There is another aspect of the question, however. If the conscription of our young manhood is necessary to-day it does not mean that we have made a mistake in the past. In this awful struggle, if we are compelled to think of conscription it does not necessarily prove that our Empire is based on the wrong principle.

Conscription was introduced into Europe by Napoleon. It is the offspring of militarism. In medical science we have to destroy poison by inoculating another poison more virulent. If conscription is the child of militarism it may be necessary to conscript the young manhood of our nation to destroy militarism.

The first necessity of the hour is to win this war. This hard stern fact is patent to-day: if we are to exist as a free people the first great requisite is to win. Before this all objections must pass away.

Objections of sentiment must be laid aside. If we believe that Prussian militarism will take away our liberties then we must lay aside sentiment.

Academic objections must be met. Young men have a future to make: must they lose their opportunity. This must not stand in the way. Our young manhood must be ready to defend their homes and loved ones.

Objections of precedent. This is a strong argument, or some try to make it so. In reality it is no argument at all. It is not recognized in science or any other realm. This truth must be met, this question must be faced.

Our great duty is to win this war for righteousness, freedom and justice.

Conscription and voluntary service —how our minds have changed! Nine months ago it would not have entered our thoughts. Now the Parliament of Great Britain has assented three to one. There is nothing before Great Britain but to conscript her manhood to save herself. Various other methods have been tried: persuasion, registration, the grouping system of Lord Derby. The awfulness of the present crisis must be met.

Some may ask: "Why should I go to Flanders, or to the Dardanelles, to give up my life?" A Canadian statesman has recently said that the defence of Canada is taking place in Belgium and in the Dardanelles.

What if the war goes against us? What if Great Britain's flag drops into the dust? What if her navies on the seas go down? Our enemies will come over and fetter us with militarism, with conscription, take our lands, and our children, and sacrifice them to the god of war.

There is no alternative. If freedom is to be maintained, the manhood of the world may have to lay down their lives to bring in the reign of the Prince of Peace.

—Paul Penman.

A CLEVER LANDLORD

There is a man in this town,
And he is wondrous wise—
He certainly has got it on
A lot of other guys.
For while his tenants shiver
And suffer from the storm,
He sits in his own flat downstairs,
All cosy-like and warm.
For when he built the place, you see,
He made his own flat best;
With radiators twice as long
As any of the rest.

Canadian Contributions To Overseas Tobacco Fund Total $85,000

A statement has just been received from the Headquarters of the Over-Seas Club giving a summary of subscriptions to the Tobacco Fund for the fourteen months ending 30th November. It will be seen that practically all parts of the world are represented, and Canadians will notice with interest that the work resulting from Canada's Tobacco Fund as organized by the Over-Seas Club, puts Canada at the head of the list. The fact that Canadian contributions up to date exceed $85,000, representing a total of 248,680 packages of Tobacco and Cigarettes, is worthy of note. It speaks of the generosity of the public, but if these figures are compared with the number of men at the front, it will readily be seen how totally inadequate they are to meet the needs of the case.

Smoking to the boys at the front is virtually a necessity and there are but few non-smokers. The total number of 343,680 packages divided between the 80,000 Canadians now at the front does not supply a very large number of packages of Tobacco per man, when spread over a period of fourteen months. If other efforts in this direction are added, even then the supply is totally inadequate, as is proved abundantly by the letters we are constantly receiving.

The list we give below has been supplied by Mr. Francis R. Jones, the Organizing Secretary of Canada's Tobacco Fund, who will be glad to receive at the Windsor Hotel, Montreal, or at 318 Stair Building, Toronto, the names and addresses of any who are willing to assist by taking collecting books, collecting boxes, etc.

It is interesting to notice that the contributions of the Overseas Dominions to provide Tobacco for the Overseas troops has been supplemented by nearly $58,000, contributed by the School Children of the United Kingdom on Empire Day, and who have been raising another fund even larger in amount during the Christmas season. This is a large sum to be contributed in pennies and only shows what can be done by the combined efforts of school children.

Mr. Jones is endeavouring to arrange a similar movement throughout the schools in Canada and has already received generous assurances of support from many parts of the Dominion.

Contributions to November 30th.

Canada	$ 95,920
Australia and New Zealand	58,960
United States	48,025
Africa	44,470
Asia	35,200
Europe	26,955
South America	22,705
Central America	6,225
	$329,450
Empire Day contribution by School Children of United Kingdom	54,740
	$384,170
Less money returned	280
Total	$383,780

which equals approximately 107½ Tons of Tobacco and 77 million Cigarettes.

It should be remembered that all the organization expenses are borne by the Headquarters of the Over-Seas Club in London, and that all the Tobacco supplied to the Canadian Troops is manufactured in Canada by the Tuckett Tobacco Company of Hamilton and the Imperial Tobacco Company of Canada.

Organizing Secretary.

WEAK FROM GRIPPE

Home Missionary Tells How She Restored Her Strength.

"I am a Home Missionary, was weak and run-down after a hard spell of LaGrippe. I had headaches, indigestion and pains in my chest, and was tired all the time. A friend asked me to try Vinol and the result is I am free from those troubles and I feel well and strong and able to go to work again." Mrs. Hattie Johnson, Towanda, Pa.

The reason Vinol was so successful in building up Mrs. Johnson's health is because it is a constitutional remedy which contains peptonate of iron, to enrich and revitalize the blood, the nourishing properties of beef peptone and the healing medicinal extractives of fresh, healthy cods' livers, all combined in a delicious native tonic wine, without oil.

We wish every person in Peterborough who is suffering from a weakened, run-down, devitalized condition, would try our Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit them.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter, and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicines. I was formerly entirely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

All centuries until the nineteenth belonged to man. The nineteenth century was woman's. The twentieth century is the children's century, as well as the thought century.

How You May Reduce Your Weight

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition, especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form, and take one with each meal.

Oil of orilene increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orilene in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Canada.

A woman who had had four stalwart soldiers billeted on her endeavored to use as little butcher-meat as possible. Day after day these were served up at dinner-time a scanty meal, the chief item of which was tea.

"Ah," she said one day pointing to a tea-leaf floating in one of the cups, "there's to be a visitor to-day!"

"Well, madam," said one of the hungry four, "let us hope that it's the butcher!"—London Tit-Bits.

H.M.S. King Edward VII Lost After Striking Mine

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The British battleship King Edward VII. has been sunk after striking a mine. The entire crew were saved. The Admiralty announcement says: "H.M.S. King Edward VII. has struck a mine. Owing to the heavy sea she had to be abandoned and sank shortly afterwards. The ship's company was taken off without any loss of life. Only two men were injured."

The Official Press Bureau statement makes no mention of the area where the Kink Edward struck a mine. It is believed, however, she was on patrol duty in the North Sea.

The eight British battleships of the King Edward are 16,350 tons each and carry a complement of about 775 officers and crew. The King Edward was completed in March, 1905, at a cost exceeding $5,000,000. She had a speed of nearly 20 knots and was 453 feet long, 73 feet beam and 26¾ feet draught. She caried four 12-inch guns, four 9.2-inch and ten 6-inch and 18-inch torpedo tubes.

The King Edward is the second largest battleship lost by Great Britain since the beginning of the war. Next to the Dreadnought Audacious, which was of 24,000 tons displacement the King Edward is the largest in maximum tonnage, the third being the Formidable of 15,000 tons.

FRIGHTFUL STORY TOLD BY LIFEBOAT

ROME, Jan. 10.—An Italian sailing ship arirved at Angino Saturday afternoon, towing one of the Ancona's life boats, which she picked up off Gaeta on December 4. The life-boat was riddley by bullets and damaged by shell fire, and contained female garments, which had been used in stopping the leaks. There were hairpins and stockings and four Italian bank notes.

There also were splinters of shells, which evidently had caused the canzing of the lifeboat when loaded with survivors; mostly women, as the garments used in stopping the holes showed. It was attacked by the submarine which sank the Ancona or some other underwater craft. The lifeboat is now being examined by naval experts with the object of ascertaining whether the splinters are of shells of German or of Austrian manufacture.

Expedition Against Egypt Held Up For the Present

ROME, Jan. 10.—The Turco-German expedition against Egypt is held in abeyance owing to the refusal of Djemal Pasha, to attack the Suez Canal without a German vanguard of 25,000 picked troops.

The completion of the railroad out of Jerusalem is not being pushed nearer than within 50 miles from the Suez Canal; its continuation is extremely difficult, hence the construction is equally slow.

There is also doubt concerning the loyalty of the Arab irregulars destined to co-operate with the expedition. Syrian troops have been sent to the Dardanelles and to Armenia because their detention was feared by the Turks and Germans.

For these reasons it is considered here unlikely that an attack on the Suez Canal will be attempted before spring.

Prof. Otto, of Vinegraeve, who was sent to Jerusalem to search for available supplies of drinkable water on the road to Suez has, according to Berlin advices, reported the discovery of great resources east of Mt. Sinai. The whole surrounding territory, now a desert, he states, could be fertilized if German and Austrian engineers were hurried on with adequate machinery; and the Turkih armies ensured against the terrible fear of thirst in the projected attack upon Egypt.

Presentation To Fr. McGuire

The parishioners of St. Luke's church, Downeyville, bade an affectionate and impressive farewell on Sunday to their beloved pastor, Rev Father McGuire, who leaves this week to become pastor of St. Martin's church, Ennismore. The occasion was one that will long be remembered, illustrating as it did the happy relations existing between priest and people.

The farewell was said at the close of High Mass the parishioner's expressions of regret coupled with esteem and love being embodied in three addresses which were read during the morning. Mrs. John McGuire, on behalf of the ladies of St. Luke's church read a beautifully worded address, which was accompanied by a purse of gold presented by Mrs. Patrick N. Winn. The men of the congregation also presented an address, read by Mr. Thomas Lucas, and this, too, was accompanied by a purse of money, presented by Mr. William O'Brien. Miss Ethel Harrington, on behalf of the choir, read an address, and that organization presented the departing clergyman with a handsome picture of the church.

Rev. Father McGuire was completely overcome by the demonstration of esteem and good will, and was visibly affected several times in the course of his remarks. He referred to the happy relationship that always existed between priest and people and the great assistance rendered him in the administration of his duties as their pastor. Although he was transferred to another parish, he would always look back with pleasure and joy to the years he had spent in Downeyville and prayed that God's choicest blessings would be showered upon the good people of St. Luke's church.

Rev. Father McGuire leaves for Ennismore on Thursday. His successor at Downeyville will be Rev. Father Galvin of Norwood.

Rev. Father McGuire was appointed parish priest of Downeyville eleven years ago, being transferred from Hastings parish. His pastorate at Downeyville has been much blessed, and he leaves behind him results that will stand as monuments to his priestly administrations. During his pastorate the church, presbytery and the church property generally has been greatly improved and have been admired by many visitors to the parish —the whole comparing favourably to the best in the diocese. In the cause of education Rev. Father McGuire was always a zealous worker, and the results of his labours are seen in the three parish schools which have attained records second to none in the country.

In his spiritual duties he was ever zealous in looking after the moral well-being of his people, who are noted for their fervour in discharging their religious duties.

The Post joins with the people of the district in wishing Rev. Father McGuire many years of priestly activity in his new field of labour.

Thin People Gained Weight Quickly

By Following this Simple Suggestion

Thin men and women who would like to increase their weight with 10 or 15 pounds of healthy "stay there" fat should try eating a little Sargol with their meals for a while and note results. Here is a good test worth trying. First weigh yourself and measure yourself. Then take Sargol—one tablet with every meal—for two weeks. Then weigh and measure again. It isn't a question of how you look or feel or what your friends say and think. The scales and the tape measure will tell their own story, and many thin men and women we believe can easily add from five to eight pounds in the first fourteen days by following this simple direction. And best of all, the new flesh stays put.

Sargol does not of itself make fat, but mixing with your food it aims to turn the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepare it in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily accept. Much of this nourishment now passes from your body as waste. But Sargol works to stop the waste and do it quickly and to make the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop pounds and pounds of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is safe, pleasant, efficient and inexpensive. All the leading druggists in this vicinity sell it in large boxes—forty tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back as found in each large box.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.50 to the National Laboratories, 71 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid.

British Forces Marching On Kutelamara Within 17 Miles of Beleaguered Garrison

Must Fight Their Way Eastward Through Turkish Army, Believed to Outnumber Them Two to One---Believed Decisive Battle Already Has Been Fought.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—British forces marching to the relief of Kutel-Amara are within seventeen miles of a beleaguered garrison, according to best information available here to-day. They must fight their way eastward through the Turkish army, believed to outnumber them two to one. No news of the fate of Kutel-Amara garrison has reached London since the arrival of official despatches covering Saturday night's fighting, and it is believed possible a decisive battle already has been fought. Not since the Boers surrounded a British force at Ladysmith has the British army faced a similar peril. For that reason news of progress of the relief expedition is being awaited with greatest anxiety. The latest despatches indicated that forces under Gen. Aylmer and Gen. Campbell were at grips with the Turks in the bend of the Tigris east of Kutel-Amara. Weather conditions it is stated are impeding the British advance. Kutel-Amara undoubtedly is provisioned sufficiently to withstand a long siege, they said, having been used as a base for the campaign against Bagdad. The town itself is well fortified. Defenses were first built by the Turks who intended that Kutel-Amara's fortresses should check the British advance into Mesopotamia. The British improved these works when they took the town. It is believed they are impregnable to an assault by light artillery the Turks have drawn down the river from Bagdad.

Russians Well Supplied With Ammunition Take Line After Line of Trenches

London Correspondent Pays Tribute to the Remarkable Recuperative Powers the Russians Have Displayed in the Formation of Magnificent Troops Now Assembled Along the Austro-German Front.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Times' Petrograd correspondent, who is at Russian headquarters, says he learns that the Russian blow in Galicia and Bessarabia was projected with great secrecy as a strategic means for helping the Entente Allies in the Balkans, but that, as in previous movements of the same kind, the Germans got wind of it and began immediately to withdraw their troops from the Danube.

"The recent conference in Sofia, in which Field Marshal von Mackensen urged the Bulgarians to continue their march on Salonika," says the correspondent, "should be interpreted in the light of this withdrawal. The Germans were doubtful whether the Bulgars would pursue the adventure once Field Marshal von Mackensen's troops wer gone, but they were obliged to withdrew them as the Russian offensive could not be gainsaid."

The correspondent pays tribute to the remarkable recuperative power the Russians have displayed "in the formation of the magnificent forces now assembled along the Austro-German front."

They are, he says, well supplied with ammunition, "in contrast to the position a year ago, when they were reduced to one shell a day per gun."

It would be premature, the correspondent adds, to draw hard and fast conclusions on the result of the present movement, and many a feint and parry is likely to be witnessed beofre Generals Ivanoff and von Mackensen and Archduke Joseph Ferdinand come to decisive blows.

A slight frost, the correspondent concludes, has improved the roads without stopping entrenching operations, and the Russians are capturing line after line of Teutonic trenches.

REV. FATHER FITZPATRICK GIVEN PURSE AND GOLD-HEADED CANE

By Congregation of St. Martin's Church---Going to Calgary

That Rev. Father Fitzpatrick was much beloved by his parishioners in Ennismore parish, which he is leaving, after a pastorate of fourteen years, for Calgary, to which diocese he has been appointed, is evidenced by the addresses and presentations made him on Sunday. The congregation of St. Martin's presented him with a purse of gold and a gold-headed cane, and the choir and altar boys with a set of gold beads, accompanied by the following address:

Rev. M. F. Fitzpatrick, P.P.,

Ennismore, Ont.

Dear Rev. Father,

The arrival of a priest in a parish and his departure from it are two events that always find a prominent place in its history. However, their importance is only a derivative one. In duration, they are short, in the emotion they immediately arouse, they are fleeting. But, considered in connection with the interval that separates them, ah, then it is that we realize why these dates are underlined in the history of every parish. On the arrival ,hopes and expectations are aroused; the future occupies the mind. At the departure comes the severing of those bonds that years of labour and priestly ministrations and mutual sacrifices helped to fashion, those ties that held fast together the rearts of priest and people. How quickly that interval sometimes passes. The priest arrives in the parish and finds golden opportunities for good awaiting him. Then we see him at work, instructing the young and the old, absolving the sinner, consoling the afflicted, visiting the sick, and burying the dead. Everywhere in the parish his influence is felt, and the people grateful for his ministrations soon learn to love their pastor. Then the news goes forth that he is to leave them and his place is to be filled with another.

Such, dear Father, is in brief the history of every parish, and ours, we now realize, forms no exception. Our sorrow over the departure of your predecessor was still deep in our souls when you came to take charge of this parish fourteen years ago. You threw yourself at once with whole-hearted zeal into your pastoral task. Your energy never abated while you were guiding our spiritual destinies, and, whatever defects we may still possess would indeed be lacking, did we on all occasions conform to the sound advice that you were ever prepared to impart. Our grateful memories will treasure up the record of your labours and their results long after you have taken up your abode in your new and distant field of labour. Oh, how short your stay in our midst appears now to have been. It is past, and we already speak of your new and distant field of labour.

"And such is human life; so gliding on,
It glimmers like a meteor, and is gone."

We beg to assure you, dear Rev. Father, that in all the parish young and old consider themselves your debtors. Your fourteen years of labour here have produced striking results. The beauty of our church's interior and the trim appearance of the house and surrounding property are strong evidences of the interest you took in the material upbuilding of the parish. But the works for which you will be best remembered are the erection of the Parish Hall, the founding of our High School, and the opening of a new cemetery. These are works whose effects will be lasting, and they were carried to completion only by great sacrifices on your part. Thanks to your efforts, we now enjoy advantages such as are to be found in few rural districts in the province.

We are indeed grateful to you, dear Rev Father, for the work you have done for the material and spiritual upbuilding of the parish, and to-day, when we are bidding you farewell, we assure you that your departure causes us deep sorrow. There may be a shade of selfishness on our part in this sorrow, for we trust the change may be, beneficial to your health; but we know, nevertheless, that our sorrow is genuine. For many, this parting is final. When you return to visit the parish, as we trust you will, many faces that are now before you will undoubtedly be missing. But the memory of your pastorate will be preserved by those who remain, and we confidently assure you of a hearty and grateful reception whenever you will seize the opportunity to visit us.

In conslusion, we beg you to accept this purse as a slight token of the esteem in which you are held by your parishioners of Ennismore. May God shower His richest blessings on you in your distant field of labour, and may He grant you many long tinue the good work for the performance of which you are so well fitted.

LUNG TROUBLE

Was never cured by dosing the stomach. The two organs are not connected. If they were, food swallowed would choke you. For lung and bronchial troubles you must breathe the cure; and you can't breathe cough syrups, tonics and syrupy compounds! Peps provide the rational treatment for coughs, colds, bronchitis and lung trouble. Peps are tablets made up of Pine extracts and medicinal essences, which when put into the mouth turn into healing vapors. These are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes—not swallowed down to the stomach, which is not ailing.

On the face of it, now, does this not sound more reasonable than drugging the stomach? Try one box of Peps. A trial will cost you only 50c., and the good you will reap—well, health cannot be expressed in money terms. Be sure of the article when ordering from druggist or store. Just four letters

Farmers' Institute Meetings at 4th Line of Smith Township

Practical and Helpful Addresses by Two Farmers Who Discussed Affairs of Everyday Interest in the Management of Farms---Review of their Discourses

The Farmers' Institute meetings held yesterday afternoon and evening in the Temperance Hall on the Fourth Line of Smith were not quite as largely attended as usual, due to the weather.

Mr. J. A. McGregor, the president of the Institute, occupied the chair, at both meetings, and Mr. Allan B. Mann, secretary, was also present.

The speakers from the Department were Mr. J. F. Ferguson, Osgoodd Station, Carleton County, and Mr. A. E. Westbrook, of Oakland, Brant County, both practical farmers. In their addresses, they touched upon topics of general farm interest, and also discussed the beautifying of the home and the provision of comforts and conveniences which make farm life more attractive.

Hog Raising.

Mr. Westbrook's afternoon subject considered the raising of hogs, which he discussed in a general way. Many times the farmer keeps brood sows and feeds hogs either at a loss or without any revenue from them. The speaker declined to specify the breed of hogs to be handled. His advice was to take the breed which the individual farmer liked the best. It would be advisable to raise your own pigs rather than buy them. The selection of a brood sow was an important question. Choose a sow which can give suck to twelve to fourteen pigs. Length is an important quality; not from the ears to the snout, but in the opposite direction. Mr. Westbrook advocated the single type rather than mixing breeds. Hogs should get plenty of exercise, have room to root and run and wallow in mire. Always provide a sow or pig with dry and clean place for sleeping. It was advisable to have a sow that is quiet. The speaker dealt with the care of the young brood, the provision of a comfortable pen. With young pigs in their first feed it is better to give them food, three times a day, but after a time it is sufficient to feed them twice a day.

Keep them as dry as possible and clean. The hog is not as dirty an animal as it is given credit for. When they run wild they will wallow in the mire for, the purpose of ridding themselves of vermin. As a rule they appreciate a dry, clean place, although sometimes you find exceptions; but as a rule they keep their sleeping quarters clean. A finishing feed may consist of roots, with grain and grasses, alfalfa, clover, rape; these will help make cheap pork for the farmer. Mr. Westbrook insisted that the big point was not what they got out of the hogs, but what they put into them. One man may sell his hogs at 170 pounds and show more profit than another man will get from 200 pound hogs. The difference is obtained in the cost of feeding. Oat chop without the hulls is the best food for little pigs, shorts, bran and milk are also good. Alfalfa, hay, and roots are good for a brood sow in winter. The speaker discussed oil cake as a feed for hogs, stating that it was good for fattening; barley and corn are also excellent. With oil cake at $35 a ton, which is less than the present price, the speaker advised three quarts of oil meal for ten pigs at 120 pounds. It may be given with a little chop and swill and water poured on it.

Mr. Westbrook suggested plenty of charcoal, salt, and ashes as an extra food. It could be put in a separate box or sprinkled in the trough. He used the following formula of this kind of food: Two bushels of charcoal, one bushel of hardwood ashes, one and a half bushels of salt, and fifteen pounds of sulphur. It was not advisable to have too many pigs in a pen. In winter there should not be more than ten to a pen. In summen, when they were out all day, the conditions were different. If he had fifteen hogs, Mr. Westbrook said, he would provide two pens for them. His own preference was seven or eight pigs to a pen. They would do better and the general results would be better.

Mr. Ferguson's Address.

Mr. Ferguson dealt with the subject of farm economy. Because of the extensive pasturage offered to farmers, they will doubtless continue to pasture their stock. But the pasture crop is the leanest, and of the pasture crops timothy is the poorest of the grasses. Mr. Ferguson pointed out that this year farmers will have to depend upon pasturing more than ever since labour is likely to be very scarce, but under other conditions he showed the advantage of getting away from the idea of pasturage. At the same time there are farmers who provide permanent pasturage, seeding for that purpose and in rotation. For winter feed, roots will take the place of meal for feeding hogs and cattle. Rape is another good feed. For horses, Mr. Ferguson suggested straw, oats, and oil meal as a cheap winter feed. He believed that they would do well in the spring after a winter of this diet.

Be regular in feeding the stock if you wish to avoid veterinary fees. You used to hear a great deal about balanced rations, but there is more attention to succulency and palatability to-day. Mr. Ferguson urged the necessity of securing properly balanced rations, avoiding too much ensilage or too much of any particular food. Dairy farmers should feed their cattle well during winter. They are not buying enough concentrated foods, those high in protein. These may be divided into three classes—high proteins, such as cottonseed and oil cake; medium proteins are bran, oats and barley; low proteins are mostly corn meal.

Mr. Ferguson indicated how the protein food should be increased in proportion to the resulting increase in milk production, and continue in this way to the point where there is no response in production and the limit reached. Reasons why the average herd is not more productive may be due to mixed breeding, poor feeding, or some other cause. Stick to one breed and don't change from one to another, is the best advice. It may be that farmers are paying too much for mill feeds, but there are some feeds rich in protein which they should endeavour to raise on the farms. These are red clover, alfalfa, and sweet clover. Some objections formerly raised to sweet clover have recently disappeared. In regard to alfalfa, farmers met with failure because the seed was not of hardy strain. It may be some time before there is plenty of the hardy alfalfa, and until then there is not much hope for success. Mr. Ferguson suggested purchasing a quantity, even at $1.50 a pound, and cultivating it for seed purposes. In this way it should not be long until the farmer would have alfalfa seed for sale. Greater success might be obtained with red clover by heavier seeding.

A good seeding for permanent pasture was found in the following mixture: Alfalfa 5 pounds, alsike 2 pounds, white or Dutch clover 2 pounds, orchard grass 4 pounds, meadow fescue 4 pounds, tall oat grass 3 pounds, meadow foxtail 2 pounds, timothy 2 pounds—making a total of 24 pounds per acre. On cold, wet land replace the alfalfa with 4 poundy of red top. A good plan is to have two fields used two weeks turn about.

Farm Improvement.

Mr. Ferguson in his evening address discussed the prospect of future war debts. The time is not far distant when Canada's debt will be one billion dollars. Denmark's position a few years ago was somewhat similar to that confronting Canada: The Danish farmers were for every dollar's worth of goods bought paying $1.50 and $2.00. They adopted co-operation, and with the greatest success. Mr. Ferguson urged careful attention to the appearance of the farm and the rotation of crops. In regard to the treatment of grain, there were many farmers last year who neglected their grain had con-

Magistrate Issues Strict Instructions for Regulating Sale of Provisions by Means of Card System

BERLIN, Jan. 11.— Reports that spies hired by Germany's enemies have been purchasing large quantities of food in Germany and destroying eatables as part of the plan to "starve Germany out," gained wide circulation in Berlin to-day.

The authorities took prompt action. Magistrate Wilmersdorf, with jurisdiction over a part of the municipality of Berlin, announce drastic regulation of the food supply within his district in the future. To each family he will send a card entitling the holder to purchase food for his family. The card must be displayed on visiting groceries and bakeshops and shopkeepers who sell provisions without being first shown the food card will be fined.

Wilmersdorf gave no reason for his action, but it was understood information obtained by the authorities prompted it. It is reported similar steps will be taken by other magistrates.

HAIR COMING OUT?

Dandruff causes a feverish irritation of the scalp, the hair roots shrink, loosen and then the hair comes out fast. To stop falling hair at once and rid the scalp of every particle of dandruff, get a 25-cent bottle of Danderine at any drug store, pour a little in your hand and rub well into the scalp. After a few applications the hair stops coming out and you can't find any dandruff.

Help to Make Her Dream Come True

The agony of blood and tears which swept over Belgium has left nearly two millions of its people absolutely without food or money. Because they scorned to sell their national honor—because they dared to fight for the right, against odds that were overwhelming—because by their sacrifice they saved the day for us and our Allies—they are face to face with grim starvation.

The wives, mothers and children of King Albert's gallant soldiers, dream not of pleasures and luxuries, but of BREAD! They are helpless to provide it themselves and the Belgian Relief Commission, efficient though it is, can only procure it for them with cash supplied by the voluntary contributions of people like ourselves. The is provided almost entirely by the British Empire and the United States, and administered by a neutral "Commission for Relief in Belgium", co-operating with the "Belgian Public Food Supply Society".

This Commission has for months been the sole means of providing food for the Belgian people—for the Germans positively refuse to feed their victims. Some 5,000,000 are still able to pay for the food, while nearly 2,000,000, absolutely destitute, must be fed free.

For money to buy food for these Belgians, the Commission appeals to us all. If we do not furnish it—if we sit back in plenty and let our heroic Allies steal their sacrifice with their lives—we shall be eternally disgraced!

V.—THE ILL WIND

(Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.)

THE thin partition which separated the tailor shop of Morris Ginsburg from the tonsorial parlor of Annibale Lomonte served as a sounding board between the two establishments. All through the day, when Morris poised his goose in the pressing of his customers' frayed garments, he could hear Annibale midway in the joyous slapping of razor against strop.

As for Annibale, he had discarded an alarm clock when Morris took up sleeping quarters behind his store, for promptly at half past 7 each morning Morris bound his phylacteries on forehead and arm and grew vocal with prayer. His petition ascended with trills and roulades as though the recording angel were at the head of the tenement stair with straining ear to catch the devout sound.

In Annibale, however, it provoked only a smile. "Geesenburg-a," he would remark to his early customers with a nod of his head in the direction of the tailor shop, "een a-crata. He just for sing-a dat way every morning."

"Ah million, I ain't got it," Morris would reply.

Then Annibale would take a battered guitar from the corner and raise a stornello popolare in his thin Sicilian falsetto until the next customer arrived.

Simultaneously Ginsburg would turn to his assistant and spit out on the ground a form of biblical profanity.

"Tphooee," he would exclaim, "dot gentile makes me sick."

Nevertheless Annibale entertained a wholesome respect for Morris. When they stood, each at his open door on summer evenings, Annibale eyed not without envy the bulge in Ginsburg's left hand trousers pocket. He knew that it evidenced a roll of bills as big around as a hickory branch and that the outer wrapper was yellow, for ever and anon Morris pulled it from his pocket and counted it slowly over, drawing each bill toward him twixt a loving thumb and finger.

The operation finished, he returned it to its hiding place and scratched his straggling beard, calmly awaiting the inevitable question from Annibale. Many times he had gone through the program, and not once had the question failed of utterance.

"S-a-a-y," Annibale remarked, "you so reech a man, so much a mon', I just for like know, what's a matter you no get shave-a?"

Morris shrugged and smiled.

"You ask me ah question," he replied with the Talmudical singsong inflection, "vot is doch ah foolish question." He tapped Annibale playfully on the chest. "You tell me," he concluded, "und I'll tell you." And with another shrug he re-entered his store.

"E's a-crase," Annibale ejaculated to himself and sought the consolation of his battered guitar.

Or perhaps the colloquy took another form.

"I just for like know," Annibale would say as the roll was thrust back into Ginsburg's pocket, "how much a mon' you got?"

"Ah million, I ain't got it," Morris would reply, "aber I ain't egg-ect-ly bankrupt, y'understand."

Then he would turn to Annibale, and by the movements of his ragged beard it could be deduced that he smiled.

"Friends is friends," he would say oracularly, "und good friends is alma friends. Aber money—dot's der best-est friend, und don't you forget it."

The aphorism invariably left poor Annibale without retort. It struck home, for the jovial Lomonte was so enmeshed in the installment system that his financial survival was a weekly wonder even to himself.

His store fixtures, the diamond on his finger—a fine canary colored stone, almost flawless—the very clothes on his back, were purchased and owed for on the weekly payment plan, while the mere thought of the first of the month, with its rent and gas bill, bathed him in perspiration.

To his poverty stricken imagination, Ginsburg, with his roll of bills and his undivided one-twentieth interest in an adjacent tenement, represented the very pinnacle of financial soundness. In Palermo, this humble tailor might be a veritable prince he reflected; a veritable prince in Palermo—the bare utterance of the name impelled him toward his guitar. Soon his falsetto was uplifted in temporary forgetfulness of his plight.

"Ogni sera di sotto al mio balcone," he wailed, and rolled his eyes, while Ginsburg, on the other side of the partition, emitted a succession of "phooees" to the bolts of woolen that lined the walls of his store.

Had his neighbor been visible to Annibale through the scantling party wall, the sight might have afforded him more solace than his song; for this was no opulent landlord that laboriously scrawled figures on the back of an envelope.

The ownership of an undivided one-twentieth interest in a tenement house has its disadvantages. They—that is to say, the syndicate of twenty, had purchased real estate to sell at a quick profit and not as an investment, but an untimely slump in prices had frustrated their plans. Only two short weeks must elapse before a payment of $5,000 would fall due on the purchase money mortgage which the syndicate had executed to its seller.

In vain did Ginsburg cover the back of his envelope with intricate computation—the staggering deficit of a hundred odd dollars confronted; for what looked like a retiring competency to Annibale, represented the paltry sum of $125.

The distracted landowner glanced around the little store and mentally appraised the woolen piece goods on the shelves.

"Stickets," he hissed; "not a hundred dollar bill in der whole store, und dot gentile sings yet!"

The melody came in shrill gusts through the scantling partition. This time it was a popular Neapolitan song, and Annibale threw back his head as he trolled forth the romantic stave:

"Occhi nert, perche mi sorridete," he sang; "occhi nert, perche mi sorri"—The entrance of the mail carrier caught him midway in the refrain, where he paused to receive a letter inclosed in a blue envelope.

Annibale's schooling had been of such primitive order that he was unable to decipher script and could only read Roman capitals with some difficulty. He made out the postmark to be New York, but obviously this could not be the gas bill, for it was too early in the month, and, besides, the gas bill came in a white envelope. Once before he had received a letter other than the gas company's missive, which proved to contain an invitation to the grand ball of the Societa San Rocco di Savoia di Lucania.

What a sensation he had created in his hired dress suit, which fitted him as though he really owned it! It had been a most enjoyable occasion from every point of view. There had been excellent music and the usual quota of good looking girls, the whole ending with as pretty a free-for-all fight as he had ever witnessed—five casualties, with a mortality of 40 per cent.

Perhaps, he reflected, there was to be another dance. In that event he could utilize the diamond ring, which had a convertible setting, as a shirt stud. After all, youth is the time for enjoying oneself. Let Ginsburg have his bank roll and tenement house; he (Lomonte) would be merry while he could.

He, Lomonte, would show—he continued to reflect as he tore open the envelope—would show that prematurely aged Hebrew that he, Lomonte, was no—he withdrew the inclosed sheet—was no fossil. No, indeed, he—"Santa Rosalie!" he shrieked as he spread the unfolded paper on his knee.

Almost its entire surface was overlaid with the impression of a human hand in printer's ink, from beneath which there grinned a skull and cross bones neatly executed in carmine. It bore an Italian legend in capital letters, the import of which even Lomonte's agitation could not render difficult of apprehension:

Do you want to die? Then disobey our will. We demand $20. The first next Friday, at noon. The place, in front of the restaurant of the three Abruzzi, on Mott street. There one will say to you "Monte Pellegrino." Break of this to not man nor woman nor child.

LA MANO NERA.

Annibale stared into vacancy and repeated mechanically, "La Mano Nera" (the Black Hand)," while his throat grew parched and his heart thumped wildly in his breast. He took from a corner of paper from which he was

The maxixe and its manifold graces;
And dim in the past are the animal hops,
The fox, bear, and bunny-hug paces.
The clinkety-clank o' the clink-clank skates
Is the rhythm we now find enthralling;
Then ho! for the pastime which fashion dictates—
The voice of the skater is calling!

Come where the frosted arena is glowing
To myriad lights;
Follow the rest of the populace going
To newer delights:
The trot, the fandango,
The Argentine tango,
Abandon with chortles of glee;
For tempus advances
And dead are the dances—
Away to the rink with me!

The ballroom is dusty; the ghost of the dance
Is limping alone, broken-hearted;
He dips and he glides, but his dolorous prance
Is naughty to his glory departed;
The clinkety-clank o' the clink-clink skates,
Like the laugh of an impudent satyr,
Re-echoes, "He incet, a spoke of the fates—
The dancer, dethroned by the skater!"

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Strange Experience

Was It Coincidence or Supernatural?

By P. A. MITCHEL.

I am a doctor. One night I was called up to attend a woman who had suddenly been taken ill. My horse had gone lame the day before, so I was obliged to walk. I passed over the mile that separated me from the patient with her husband and was well satisfied to have his company, for, though a part of the way lay through a village, even this was unlighted. Not a person did we meet on the way, and scarcely a word could I draw from my companion, who was much distressed about his wife.

I asked him what he supposed to be his wife's ailment. This time I received a response, but not one that would help me in deciding upon any treatment. He told me that her trouble was mental; that she had worried herself into a breaking down of the system. They had but one child, a daughter, who, being grown, had left them. The mother not only grieved for the absent one, but had become convinced that she was in danger.

I asked the man if his wife had any reason to suspect such a condition, and he told me that so far as he knew she had not. But he added that she had given evidence of seeing beyond the limits of what could be discerned by the senses; that she had known without being informed of happenings many miles distant from her. Years before a son had left them for the sea. One night the mother awakened her husband and told him that their boy was struggling in the water, then that he was dead. A month later news came that the vessel in which the young man sailed had been wrecked. All this looked to me as if I would meet a hopeless case.

And as soon as I stepped into the sickroom and saw her I knew that she was in a critical condition. But the case was not hopeless, and I worked with all the ingenuity I possessed to save her. My efforts were in vain. An hour after my arrival she died.

It is questionable if any medical man ever gets used to losing a patient. At least I never get used to it. We are intrusted with the whole responsibility of the life of the invalid. When our efforts are successful we feel a pleasurable sensation; when the patient dies on our hands we are apt to feel that had we adopted another line of treatment the result might have been different.

I left the stricken household to walk home alone. Above, the stars were shining just as calmly, as silently as before I had entered the house where lay the invalid. I wondered if a power to bridge the vast distance between them and us had been given the disembodied spirit. The planet Jupiter stood high in the east. Had the woman been borne to a vision that could take in the planet's immensity? Could she move with the instantaneous rapidity of electricity, and was she already passing the far distant Neptune on into the great vacuum that separates our sun from other fixed stars?

I was passing through the village and at this moment was before the only church it contained. Suddenly the stillness was broken by a clang. I started as if a clap of thunder instead of a village clock had struck upon my sense of hearing. Stopping, I looked up to note whence the sound came, and some moments passed before I realized that what had startled me came from the striking of a metal clapper on a metal bell. I waited for the next stroke, but it did not come. The clock had struck one hour after midnight.

I passed on, but in a moment turned for a glance at the quaint little building, deserted except when services were held in it, while every other house in the village contained human beings. The church and spire being white, I could easily distinguish them in the gloom.

Is that a ray of light glimmering through the slats of the great arched window?

Impossible! The church is the last place in the village to be lighted at such an hour.

Nevertheless, there is a glimmer that can only come from an artificial light.

Had I been superstitious there would have been something uncanny in seeing light in a church when all the houses where people lived were dark. But with me the discovery had a contrary effect. The loneliness by which I had been surrounded was broken. There was light, and light at that time of night meant human beings. I felt that there were persons in the church, and I felt, too, their companionship.

I confess curiosity was the chief motive power that induced me to turn, retrace my steps, go up on to the little pillared porch before the tower and listen. I thought I could hear voices within. Turning the knob, I found the door unlocked, opened it and entered a vestibule. A screen stood between me and the body of the church, and, stepping to its side, the interior was revealed to me.

At the other end of the building were three persons. One of them faced me and was evidently waiting. The other two were a man and a woman. The man was talking earnestly to the woman, evidently trying to persuade her to do something, which I judged was to consent to a marriage then and there. Taking her by the hand, he attempted to draw her to stand before the other man, whom I surmised to be a clergyman. But she resisted.

In the clergyman I recognized a person who had long been familiar to me, and I knew he was not a clergyman. I could not understand the situation. In the olden time mock marriages were used to entrap innocent girls, but in these days we seldom hear of them. Nevertheless I suspected that these men were trying to practice a deception on this woman.

She turned away from them and started down the aisle. The man who was personating her caught her and drew her back, pouring pleading words into her ear. This time he tried a little force, urging her up before the supposed clergyman, whom I heard say harshly:

"I am tired of this vacillation. If you are going to marry this man let us proceed with the ceremony; if not let us go."

At the same time the would be groom changed his manner from persuasion to something resembling severity, and I could see that they were trying to influence the girl to do that which she felt she ought not to do. In this way she was induced to stand before the clergyman, and he began the marriage service. But he had spoken only a few words when she broke away from them and ran like a deer down the aisle. The groom ran after her, but she had got the start of him, and the distance was short. She ran into my arms. Whether it was the shock at finding a man where she had supposed there was no one or she believed she had been headed off in her flight I know not, but she gave a shriek.

"Fear nothing," I said to her. "I am a friend a protector."

This reassured her, and she clung to me.

The would be groom came up and looking at me angrily asked, "Who are you, and what are you doing here?"

"Who I am," I replied, "does not matter, and what I am doing here is self evident. Just at present I am keeping this girl from an imposition. I don't know who you are, but I do know that the man who is playing parson is a livery stable keeper from whom I have occasionally hired a horse."

Before I had finished the liveryman disappeared through a door back of the pulpit. The other stood, evidently uncertain what to do. The girl, who had received from me information which astonished her, turned upon the man from whom she had escaped like a fury. He took the dressing she gave him with bowed head. She finished in tears:

"If I have done wrong it has been through love of you."

"Don't you believe that story," I said to the girl. "A man who loves a woman does not try to draw her into a mock marriage."

I saw by the man's appearance, his manner and his dress that he was what we call high bred, and it was plain that he had no intention of marrying the girl. But I saw no advantage in discussing the matter further.

"Will you come with me?" I asked her.

"Or no?" said the other, with a pleading look.

There was evidence of the man's power over her, for she hesitated a moment, then put her arm through mine, and I led her away. Leaving the man in the church, we stepped out into the night.

There were the same stars in the heavens that I had seen but a few minutes before, but I looked up at them with a different feeling. Then there was mingled with the awe I felt in their solemn grandeur a sense of my human insignificance, uselessness. Now there was in me the consciousness that I had saved a fellow being from wreck.

There was another feeling. I could not get rid of an impression that the spirit of the woman I had seen pass from life to eternity might have had something to do with my having passed the church in time to save a soul, though I had failed in saving a life.

"Where shall I take you?" I asked the girl.

"Home."

Instead of going in the direction I would go she turned and walked the other way. As we proceeded she gave me her story in brief. She had been to the city studying art. There she had met the man from whom I had saved her. He had courted her, but she had suspected him. To get rid of his influence she had started for home. He had taken the same train and played his game so well that he persuaded her to go back with him as his wife. The rest I knew.

We were walking over the same road I had traversed in going to see my patient. Then I had had a companion, a man suffering from anxiety. Now my companion was a girl who had barely escaped a great evil. Somewhere down in me was a glimmering sensation that all these happenings were parts of a connected story. I looked up again at the stars, wondering if they knew what was but a faint impression to me.

The house where lay my last patient was on the road we were traversing. When we reached it the girl stopped.

"This is"—

I gasped.

"Home. I have come back to my father and mother."

For the first time in my life I shirked a professional duty. I should have prepared this girl for what she was to meet. I could not bring myself to do so. I took her hand, kissed it and with a "God bless you," sobbed rather than spoken, turned away.

She Coughed Day and Night.

Mrs. Fred. Fenits, Cedarville, Ont., writes: "I am sending you this letter telling what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. Ten years ago I had a terrible cold. For days I could not speak above a whisper. I coughed day and night. One evening I was so bad I went down to our storekeeper, and when I went in he said, 'You better get something done for that cold of yours.' I told him, as well as I could, that I had just come to get a bottle of the best cough medicine he had. He told me Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup was the best he had, and said for me to take a little of it before I left the store. I took some, and in fifteen minutes I could speak as well as ever. I think 'Dr. Wood's' is the very best on the market."

That persistent cough must be gotten rid of immediately, for if it hangs on to you it may develop into some serious lung trouble, such as bronchitis, pneumonia and perhaps consumption.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for twenty-five years. A remedy that cures when all others fail.

When you ask for "Dr. Wood's" see that you get what you ask for as there are many imitations on the market.

"Dr. Wood's" is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

Prentis only recently was liberated from the penitentiary, where he served a term of three years under the name of Brady for a similar offence committed near this city.

The War Loan and Our Resources

Sir George Foster's announcement that a war loan of $300,000,000 is to be raised in Canada, making $400,000,000 in all, suggests a consideration of the available wealth of Canada. The Round Table recently estimated this wealth at ten billions of dollars. It notes also that the figures of national wealth and income of Canada tally almost exactly with those of the United Kingdom at the close of the Napoleonic wars, when the national debt stood at the equivalent of four billion dollars.

Figures as to national wealth are sometimes regarded with scepticism, as being largely the result of guesswork. The same cannot be said of the deposits in the banks of Canada, which amount to about a billion dollars, or more than three times the amount of the proposed loan.

And it is not likely that the estimate of our national wealth is exaggerated. It must always be remembered that Canada is a young and growing country. Its population is not much greater than that of Belgium before the war, but its area is about as large as that of Europe, and its potential resources of fertile land, forests, mines and water powers, are probably not much less than those of Europe. Canada is likely to be much stronger at the end of the war than before. With greater realized wealth and expanded industries it is ceasing to be a debtor nation and becoming a creditor nation. The Round Table says that she may lend her surplus to Great Britain:

"She will, in doing so, benefit herself as well. She will be merely foregoing the immediate enjoyment of her profits and building up for herself a reserve abroad which will be very useful to her after the war."

Probably the last thing that Germany expected was that by plunging Europe into war it would be stimulating the development of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. A speaker in the Reichstag saw the point when he said that Europe was ruining itself by war and building up the United States; but he forgot to mention that the British Empire overseas was also being developed in the same way. If Europe is injured it is through Germany, and it is Germany that ought to pay the penalty.—Toronto Star.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Thos. Hamburger, 19 Rhyne Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using one bottle of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work and now feel better than I did for twenty years."

NO FREAK MILLINERY IN THIS YEAR'S STRAWS

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—If the orders taken by the straw hat manufacturers for the coming season are any indication, there will be fewer styles of the freakish variety shown next summer. The novel shapes do not materialize, of course, until close up to the time when business is being done over the counter, but the sentiment in the trade this year seems to be against extreme models. Owing to the fact that unsettled weather conditions made last summer more or less of an off period with the retailers orders for the coming season were late in being placed, but they are regarded as satisfactory by the manufacturers. The most popular model next summer will, according to the manufacturers, have a crown of 3 1-2 inches' depth, with a brim 2 1-2 inches wide. A slight advance will have to be asked in some cases, owing to the increased cost of the ribbon bands.

GENERAL STOPFORD'S NEW POST.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—General Stopford, who was recalled home after the withdrawal of the troops from the Suvla Bay region of the Gallipoli Peninsula, is now in the War Office acting as a representative of the new War Pensions Committee, the chairman of which is the Prince of Wales

HOW KING PETER INSPIRED HIS MEN

LONDON, Dec. 28.—Signor Fracearpli, the correspondent of the Corriere della Sera of Milan, writes the following account of King Peter's adventures:

King Peter was ill even before the war. It is because of his illness that the supreme command of the operations had to be intrusted to his son, Alexander, the heir to the throne. The King was undergoing medical treatment at Topola. As soon as he felt convinced that Bulgaria would attack Serbia, the old King, ill as he was, declared his intention to proceed immediately for the frontier against the Bulgars. The northern front had less attraction for him, but he wished to see face to face the aggressors of 1912, then fearfully punished—the "brother" of the first Balkan war. The physicians opposed him declaring it would be madness to go in his present state of health.

The King resisted at first; then he seemed resigned. "Very well," he answered the doctor. Two days later he left without telling the doctor. He arrived in Nish in a motor car, and went to find Pasitch in his bare study of the palace, and ask him permission to visit the front. Pasitch was amazed to see the King so ill and anxious, with eyes like burning coals, the face thin and drawn. And the question astonished him; why should the King ask for a permit? "I am a soldier," explained King Peter; "there is a Voivoda in command of our armies, hence I must ask for permission."

Then the King said: "Very well. It is in your power to refuse the permit to an old soldier. An old soldier is of little use. But I am also the King. Perhaps the King can still do some good among his soldiers. Give me two gendarmes." And he left for the Eastern front, where his soldiers were stemming the Bulgarians.

The King's Rifle.

Perhaps the old King was hoping for another miracle. Last December it was he who had put new courage in his soldiers when they were retiring before the dense masses Austria had poured across the Danube and the Save. He had to be carried to Lazarevatz, in the first line of Stefanovitch's army, where he went into the trench of the Second Regiment, the famous "Iron Regiment," helping himself along with a stick for a rifle and said to his soldiers: "My children I know that you are tired. We have fought like heroes. But our country is in danger. He who can resist no longer can go home again without fear of being punished. But the country is in danger, and I have come here with you to die for our country. Let those remain who wish to die with their King for Serbia." Then he lifted his rifle and fired. The words of the old King, who had left his bed of pain to fight in the trench, electrified the soldiers. They threw themselves forward without hesitation, and twelve days later not an Austrian was left on Serbian territory and Belgrade was retaken.

The Meeting With Putnik.

Now the King was hoping for a repetition on the miracle. Again he visited the first-line trenches, remaining with his soldiers for two hours, lifting laboriously the rifle to fire. But he appeared very sad on his return to Nish. The Ministers had already departed. He decided to return to Kralievo.

At Krusevatz he saw the car which was carrying the Generalissimo Putnik, the old never-beaten Voivoda, whom all Serbian soldiers call affectionately "Grandfather" Putnik was coming from Kraguyevatz, which the Germans were on the point of entering. And the old Voivoda, ill like the King, was untiring, had to abandon the palace. The two cars met and came to a stop. In those days Krusevatz was stricken by the fear carried like a contagion by the columns of refugees from Nish and from the North. The road was obstructed by the people, the peasants' carts, the oxen. Some one recognized the cars, and two names passed along the crowd—"The King, the Voivoda!" And suddenly that crowd was silenced as if by magic. They made a road for the cars to pass, lining the sides. The men lifted their caps, the women looked on with heavy, fascinating eyes. None said a word. Not a cry was uttered. The two motor cars moved on slowly, and it seemed as if a funeral procession were passing.

CHANCE CHOSEN NEW MANAGER OF TEAM ON COAST.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 8.—Frank Le Roy Chance, famous as the leader of the old Chicago Club machine and one-time leader of the Yankees, will manage the Los Angeles team of the Pacific Coast League for 1916, and perhaps for some years to come.

"Chance will take over Mr. Dar modyl's stock in the club and will be on the club directorate," said President John E. Powers. "Notwithstanding the fact that he will be part owner of the club, Chance will sign a contract as manager just as if he were an outsider."

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy is Home-Made

Easily Prepared in a Few Minutes. Cheap but Unequaled

Some people are constantly annoyed from one year's end to the other with a persistent bronchial cough, which is wholly unnecessary. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make you wonder what became of it.

Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour into a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking it at once. Gradually you surely will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflammation in a painful cough with remarkable rapidity. Ordinary coughs are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, winter coughs and bronchial asthma.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup mixture makes 16 ounces—enough to last a family a long time—at a cost of only 54 cents. Keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant. Easily prepared. Full directions with Pinex.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its ease, certainty and promptness in overcoming bad coughs, chest and throat colds.

Get the genuine. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

WILL ROOT OUT BOOTLEGGERS

Short Shrift for Illicit Liquor Sellers—Heavy Increasing Penalties Provided

Drug Stores Will Probably Prove Main Difficulty in Enforcing Law.

SEATTLE, Jan. 8.—The first cases of violation of the Prohibition law will be made strict examples of and after two or three convictions with maximum penalties have been imposed I think the bootlegging and blind-pigs will be pretty well stamped out," so said Chief Lang of the Seattle police force.

"Things were very quiet locally last night. I attributed this to the publicity received in the newspapers which were a big factor in this matter. In one interview I asked the people who had no business down town to stay home and they did so. Another factor assisting the police was the snow. The crowd was orderly. I don't believe at ten o'clock there were 50 saloons open. The amount of liquor purchased yesterday practically wiped out all the stock in Seattle.

"The great thing we'll have to contend with is the drug stores. They'll be the main dispensers of all liquors. The state law, of course, is very strict, requiring that all sales shall be on prescriptions and that a record shall be kept. What means I have I shall use for the purpose of discovering blind-pigs and violators among the drug stores and shall do my best to have the heavy increasing penalties imposed.

Will Make an Example.

"I have two cases which are going to be tried under the state law. One saloon keeper on First Avenue will not be released until the district attorney fixes his bail. He will be made an example of, if convicted, and I am absolutely certain of a conviction, for when Constable Phelps, who made the arrest entered the saloon he found two of my officers there, Constables Flattam and Tracey. Either they were there collecting evidence or they were there in violation of department rules. They will be called on to explain themselves, and if they broke the rules their heads will come off.

"We are going to be at considerable trouble for the next two months in getting these places cleaned up, but we are going about it with slow and sure persistence. I intend after the first few convictions to try cases under the city ordnance instead of the state law, so that the city, which loses the revenue from the licences, and does the work, will get the revenue from the penalties which are very heavy.

"I believe the Prohibition Act will benefit the workingmen, who instead of cashing their cheques over a bar, and spending half the proceeds for liquor, will take their cheques to the banks. What sort of congregating places are going to be substituted for the saloons I don't know yet, but the soft drink parlors, card rooms, pool rooms, etc., which are replacing many of the saloons, will undoubtedly prove popular with many. This is a problem which will work itself out in time. The local option dry laws which have been operating in Bellingham and other small cities will be greatly reinforced by the prohibition of manufacture and the limitation of importation."

An easy name to remember. A hard tea to forget.

Red Rose Tea "is good tea"

A POUND OF HONEY.

When you eat a spoonful of honey you have very little idea as to the amount of work and travel necessary to produce it. To make a pound of clover honey, bees must take the nectar from sixty-two thousand clover blossoms, and to do this requires two million seven hundred and fifty thousand visits to the blossoms by the bees.

In other words, in order to collect enough nectar to make one pound of honey a bee must go from hive to flower and back again two million, seven hundred and fifty thousand times. Then, when you think how far these bees sometimes fly in search of these clover fields, often one or two miles distant from the hive, you will begin to get a small idea of the number of miles one of the industrious little creatures must travel in order that you may have a pound of honey.

THE USUAL WAY.

There were two daughters in the house,
Their case was quite symbolic,
For Ruth was quiet as a mouse,
While Gladys loved to frolic.
The lively daughter settled down
And married Parson Borus;
The mouse-like maiden woke the town
By going in the chorus.

Totally Discouraged by Nervous Prostration

After Many Weeks of Doctoring a Friend Recommended Chases' Nerve Food and She Was Cured

There is nothing more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. Because of the exhausted condition of the nervous system, weakness and helplessness take possession of the body. The faculties of the mind as well as those of the body are affected and hope and courage disappear.

The patient, often appearing well, gets little sympathy, and few doctors understand diseases of the nerves well enough to treat nervous prostration intelligently. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is founded on the prescription of a great nerve specialist, and hence its wonderful success in curing ailments of this nature.

Mrs. Edith May Williams, Tilsonburg, Ont., R. R. 3, writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I suffered for years with my nerves, and at one time I was confined to my bed with nervous prostration for several weeks. I cannot just explain my feelings, but I was weak and helpless and so discouraged and despondent that I thought I would lose my mind. I doctored with several doctors and received but little benefit. At last I became very much discouraged and thought I would never get better. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and before I had finished the first box I knew that it was helping me. It took several boxes of the Nerve Food to make me well and I can truly say that it is a wonderful builder-up of the nervous system."

It is only wise to prevent such dreaded diseases as Nervous Prostration, Paralysis and Locomotor Ataxia by keeping the nervous system in good condition at all times. When you cannot sleep well, have headaches and indigestion, be warned of approaching dangers and restore the nervous system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

7393

The most simple of styles is always the most becoming to youth, and this season has brought us the "unit" dress, which is almost that of a child built upon longer lines. Women and girls of all ages have adopted it, and it is made in any and every fabric.

Our illustration shows one of these frocks for a miss. It has a deep yoke in front and back, with the closing in the front. The neck is high, with a stock collar and fancy tabs extending above his.

The lower portion of the dress is quite full and is joined to the yoke, much as that of a Mother Hubbard Wrapper might be. A tied belt holds in the material at the waist line and below it is a patch pocket which is substantial enough to be really useful. The sleeves are plain and full length, made in a single piece.

These dresses make charming frocks for dancing, but for this purpose it is generally the custom to cut out the neck in front and shorten the sleeves. The pattern is perforated for this purpose.

In making such frocks soft materials are best. Certain varieties of velveteen will be handsome, and serge, gabardine and the many crêpe fabrics are all suitable.

The dress pattern, No. 7393, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 4¼ yards of 44 inch material.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for, 25c.

The Kaiser's Dream

A New Paradise Lost

There's a story now going, tho' strange it may seem,
Of the great "Kaiser Bill" and his wonderful dream;
Being tired of the Allies he lay down in bed,
And among other dreams, he dreamt he was dead;
And in a fine coffin was lying in state,
With a guard of brave Belgians who mourned his fate.
But he wasn't long dead when he found, to his cost,
That his soul, like his solders, had gone to be lost.

In leaving the earth for heaven, he went straight;
And, arriving up there, he knocked at the gate.
But Saint Peter looks out and, with voice loud and clear, says:
Begone, Kaiser Bill, we don't want you here."
"Well," says the Kaiser, "that's really uncivil,
But I suppose, after that, I must go to the "d-e-v-i-l."
So he turned on his heel and off he did go,
At the top of his speed to the regions below.

But he wasn't long there when he was filled with dismay,
For while waiting outside, he heard Old Nick say, to his "Imps":
"Now look here, boys, I give you fair warning,
I'm expecting Kaiser Bill here in the morning;
But dont let him in, for me 'tis quite clear,
Hes' a very bad man, and we don't want him in here;
If he once gets in, there'll be no end of quarrels;
In fact, I'm afraid he'll spoil our good morals."

"Oh, Satan, my dear friend," the Kaiser then said,
"Excuse me for listening, while waiting outside;
If you don't admit me, where can I go?"
"Indeed," says the devil, "I really dont' know."
"Let me sit in a corner, no matter how hot."
"No," said the devil, "most certainly not.
We don't admit people just for their wealth—
Here's some matches and heres' some sulphur,
Make a 'hell' for yourself."

So he kicked Wilhelm out and vanished in smoke,
And just at that moment the Kaiser awoke.
He jumped out of bed in a shivering sweat,
And said: "Well, really that dream, I shall never forget—
That I wont' go to heaven, I know very well;
But it's really too bad to be Kicked out of h-e-l-l.

—Kathlyn Stenning.

Could Not Stand The Least Excitement.

Was So Weak and Run Down.

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak, and the nerves unstrung, it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties. The least little exertion or excitement leaves her in an exhausted condition, and not fit to do anything.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, you will be wise if you start to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

This remedy will act directly on the disordered heart making it beat strong and regular, and will also invigorate and strengthen the nerves so as to make them steady and firm.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Tilsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down, I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the original remedy for all heart and nerve troubles. Price 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Farmer's Institute Meetings, etc.

siderable smut, and there may be more next year if the conditions are favourable. Formalin is the material used to combat smut. By careful cleaning and selection of seed grain better and more attractive crops can be secured.

The importance of milk records was also touched upon. On his own farm Mr. Ferguson has been keeping these records eight years with a resulting increase of 3,000 pounds per cow. With farm bookkeeping begun in March or April the farmer will be able to keep a close touch upon the value of his property, and in short, his financial position. He will thereby know, whenever he wishes, the condition of his finances. To interest the young people in the farm, Mr. Ferguson spoke of the plan of giving the young people certain responsibilities, the care of poultry, the feeding of hogs, etc., and give them the profits. Special amusements should be provided. In Carleton district, debating clubs were found especially advantageous. Mr. Ferguson oppposed the idea of retiring to the cities. It had been stated that half of rural Ontario was for sale as the result of farmers intending to quit the country for the city.

Mr. Ferguson, in conclusion, reminded his audience of the duty devolving upon farmers of producing as heavily as possible of foodstuffs, thereby assisting to supply the Empire of its needs during the war.

"Our Country Home."

At the evening session Mr. Westbrook gave a very helpful address on the subject "Our Coupntry Home." He was loth to deal with this question after seeing and visiting some of the homes in Smith. Canada has a right to expect from her home builders the best of homes. This country is nearly as large as the Continent of Europe composed of countries as large as the republics and kingdoms of Europe. The Bible tells us of the eastern land that supplied wheat in days of famine. But to-day Canada could supply the world with grain if the other countries were stricken with famine. This is a great country, and Mr. Westbrook stated that he had never been as proud of it as during the past fifteen months. And among the great Canadians those who began life on the farm take a leading place. It was proper that the country homes should be worthy ones.

In the cities the appearance of the home depends largely upon the wealth of the owner; but in the country nature, well directed, will go a long way to beautify the home. It was not necessary to spend a great deal of money on a country home; it was inadvisable to go into debt for that purpose. But with a little effort the farm home may be easily beautified with lawns, trees, shrubs, etc. Some men say they haven't time for that sort of thing, but there are a few making money by simply buying run-down farms, fixing them up, and selling them at a profit.

Mr. Westbrook remarked that life did not consist of merely chasing the almighty dollar. He could prove its benefits to the family, even the financial benefits. But a home should not be fixed up fine that it is never used. Let the children into your rooms so they will become accustomed to them and regard them as part of their home. Use the best dishes and let the young people grow accustomed to them. And give the home as many of the conveniences as possible. Men will see to it that they get all the necessary machinery for outside use, but too often they overlook the home. Mother has too often to put up with the old chopping bowl when a dollar or two would provide a chopping machine. Have hard and soft water in the home, hot and cold if you can, with bath and other conveniences.

Mr. Westbrook emphasized the advantages of music and good reading in the home. Give the older children a chance to learn music. Make the necessary sacrifice for them and buy the piano while they, too, are young, and not wait until they have grown up and the later children get it. Give the children as much education as possible. Send them to Guelph if you can, or to the short courses. Another thing is companionship in the home—father and son, mother and daughter, and so on. Make the homes co-operative. Take the children into your confidence and give them a chance to make a little money. Don't have them always forced to ask for it.

There are noble opportunities in farming. Man is brought closer to nature, and thus closer to God. The farmer can plow and sow, but he cannot produce. He must depend upon the Creator, must work with Him. This is the peculiar advantage of the farmer and one that is not shared by most other workers.

A pleasing feature of the evening programme were several vocal numbers, a trio by Mr. J. A. McGregor, Mr. T. H. Graham, and Mr. A. B. Mann, and a duet by Mr. McGregor and Mr. Graham.

Mr. C. E. Moore spoke briefly about the affairs of the Farmers' Club in that section and of its co-operative purchasing. He made special mention of a meeting of the Club which is to be held in the near future.

The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

The visitors were very hospitably received at the homes of Mr. McGregor and Mr. Graham.

Admits Strength of the Navy

German Critic Then Wonders if British Fleet Will Fight.

"Will the British fleet take the offensive at last?" asks Captain Persius, naval correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt, who is trying to fathom the meaning of an alleged announcement that British shipbuilding yards from now on may again devote themselves to the building of merchant ships, according to F. W. Wile, late Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail. Persius concludes that "this means that the monopoly of dockyard construction facilities by the Admiralty has now been relaxed, and the reason is doubtless due to the completion of the many new units ordered for the fleet at the outbreak of war." Persius continues:

"There is no manner of doubt that English shipyards in the past sixteen months have tried to satisfy the requirements of the Navy with lightning speed. Despite the enormous strength of the British fleet even before the war, it was apparently not numerous enough for the English to meet the tasks which fell to it. Keel upon keel was laid down, in order to cope with every possible emergency. Even then the fleet (to date) has not been able to fulfil its chief task—that of destroying the forces of the enemy."

After enumerating what he considers a list of the British Navy's losses and additions during the war, Captain Persius says:

"If one compares the strength of the British fleet with what it was at the outbreak of war both the quantity—and, above all, the quality—will be found to have grown enormously. In imposing might the British fleet stand fast. Will it make use of this gigantic power in order to achieve the objects of its creation? This is to say, will it finally take the offensive or will it continue to prefer to protect itself and let time work for it?"

A Highlander with bagpipes entered the street and commenced his plaintive lay, at the same time marching up and down in time-honoured fashion.

"Why does he move about all the time he plays?" asked Johnny of his father.

"I don't know," answered the lad's father, wearily, "unless it is to prevent one getting the range with the inkpot."—Exchange.

Drug Proof?

If there ever was a human being who was not in some way susceptible to drugs he's never been heard of. Yet, in spite of the warnings of reputable physicians, many persons with whom tea and coffee disagree continue their use and take into their systems the drug, caffeine.

The 1½ to 3 grains of this drug, in the average cup of tea or coffee, taken regularly is often the cause of headaches, nervousness, biliousness, heart flutter and many other ailments.

60,000 Germans Participated In Fruitless Attack on French

Offensive On Sunday Although Vigorously Pushed Was Completely Nullified by the Brilliant Defence of French Soldiers and Their Subsequent Counter Attacks---Irish Opposition to the Conscription Bill Has Been Withdrawn.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PARIS, Jan. 11.—(French Official Communique).—At least sixty thousand Germans participated in the Sunday offensive movement against the French lines in the Champagne region, it was established to-day.

The War Office said: "Our artillery fire, together with the brilliant defences of our soldiers, and their subsequent counter attacks, have completely nullified the effects of the German attack," the War Office reported.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A mailed story from Athens says: One story which Lord Kitchener told in Athens made a particularly deep impression. No public account of the incident had ever been given. "When the manoeuvres of the great fleet were held about a month ago north of Scotland," said Lord Kitchener, "eight German submarines of the newest and strongest type went out with the purpose of getting to the fleet and playing havoc with the manoeuvres. One came to grief in our North Sea net. The others nosed through and approached the fleet, but could not reach it. But they could no longer find the way back. The gate in the net had been closed. Two were lost desperately trying to get through. The remaining three finally were forced to come to the surface and surrender themselves. We took them intact, crews, submarines and all."

"Suppose the Germans do conquer Egypt," Kitchener is credited with saying. "Suppose they extend their line throughout Turkey and hold the Euphrates Valley. Suppose they take India. What then? We shall get it all back when we defeat the Germans in France. The war is not going to be fought out in Egypt or India or the Balkans. It is going to be fought out in Germany."

LONDON, Jan. 11.—John Redmond, Irish leader, announced in the Commons this afternoon that the Irish opposition to the Government's Conscription Bill has been withdrawn.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Government's heaviest oratorical batteries opened in the Commons this afternoon in defence of the Conscription Bill. First Minister of Munitions Lloyd George, the virtual leader of the conscription fight in the Cabinet bill, will answer the criticisms of the Labour advocates. He will be followed by Arthur Henderson, the Labour representative in the Cabinet, who will explain why he and other Labour members of Parliament believe the adoption of compulsory measure necessary. The conscription measure came up for the second reading to-day with the understanding that the debate would continue for two days, the vote being taken either to-morrow night or Thursday.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The unexpected announcement that the Irish party had withdrawn its opposition to the Government's Conscription Bill made it appear certain this afternoon that the measure will pass the Commons on the second reading by an overwhelming majority.

Efforts will be made at to-morrow's conference with the Labour leaders to win the support of the entire Labour party in Parliament and obtain the passage of the bill by as nearly a unanimous vote as possible to show that Great Britain presents a united front against her enemies.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The British steamer Clan McFarlane was sunk by a submarine, it was announced here this afternoon.

The Clan McFarlane was owned by the Clan Line of Glasgow. She displaced 4,823 tons, and was built in 1898.

Thirteen persons perished when the steamer was torpedoed. Twenty-four others were rescued.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The rejection of the Government's Conscription Bill was moved in the House of Commons this afternoon by J. Anderson, an independent Labourite.

Amid wild cheers, Will Thorne, the Labour leader, who travelled through Canada recently, and was immensely popular with Canadian trades unionists, declared that Anderson did not represent the views of the Labour party in the House.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 11.—Theodore Roosevelt to-day wired to the Progressive National Committee sitting here, urging that all purely party considerations be cast aside, and a thorough-going preparedness to protect the rights of the United States against aggressors be insisted upon. He declared that the nation was facing a great crisis and had fallen far short of its duties for the past eighteen months, since the great European war began.

"We must do justice to our people at home. We must insist that they have justice when abroad. We must insist upon the most thorough-going preparedness to protect our rights against all possible attacks by an aggressor. Such preparedness is the best guarantee of honourable peace. We must ever remember that there cannot be such preparedness in things material unless there is also that preparedness of soul and of spirit, which alone renders a nation fit to perform its high and difficult duties and international life."

HAVRE, Jan. 11.—South of Frolinghien our artillery provoked heavy fire from the enemy, said an official statement from the Belgian War Office to-day. Artillery duels occurred around Ypres.

The Peterborough Examiner Has been Selected as One of

"Newspaperdom's Winning Dailies"

The Only Peterborough Newspaper so Honoured

WE FEEL sure that Peterborough advertisers will be interested in knowing that the "Peterborough Examiner" has been selected as one of Newspaperdom's "Winning Dailies"—and that the selection was made after studying the features which we believe entitled it to this distinction. The following reasons formed the basis of our judgment in the matter:

First—We selected the "Peterborough Examiner" as our "Winning Daily" in Peterborough because of the general excellence of the "Examiner" in news and editorial make-up and efficiency.

Second—Because it has the largest circulation and is supreme in advertising. Being an evening newspaper in a field where an evening daily is widely demanded, its circulation must necessarily represent the purchasing power of the people of Peterborough and the territory of which the city is essentially the ready market place.

Third—Because of the typographical appearance of the advertisements and the care which is evidently given in the matter of make-up and position.

Fourth—Because of the carefully planned and maintained circulation distribution facilities and continuous effort to have the "Examiner" placed in the hands of its readers at the earliest possible moment—and yet carrying the latest and most important news.

Fifth—Because the "Peterborough Examiner" is in all intents and purposes a read "home" newspaper, appealing directly not only to men but to the women of the household, who do eighty per cent. of the purchasing of family requirements.

Sixth—Because the "Examiner" is recognized by men and women in all paths of life as the standard, competent newspaper of its field.

Newspaperdom congratulates the management of the "Peterborough Examiner" upon the fact that the "Examiner" is justly entitled to the honour we have given it—of being one of Newspaperdom's "Winning Dailies." Less than two hundred newspapers in the United States have been given this classification, according to the acid test applied before making our final decision.

BRISK RECRUITING YESTERDAY FOR THE LOCAL BATTALION

Ten Recruits, Eight of Whom Were Residents of Peterborough Passed the Medical Examination Yesterday --More Guard Work For the Battalion--The Peterborough Machine Company Plant to Be Protected---Today's Military News.

Yesterday was a brisk one as regards recruiting for the 93rd Battalion, some twelve or fourteen recruits facing the medical examination, of which ten were accepted. Eight of the men were residents of Peterborough, which shows that the city is continuing to do its share towards filling up the battalion.

The following recruits passed yesterday at the armouries:

John A. Louden, 493 Bethune street.
Daniel A. Shorter, Havelock.
Jas. Hoperoft, 68 James street
William Thos. Jarvis, 253 Bethune street.
A. W. Lowes, 5 Hunter street east.
A. W. H. Doyle, 188 Reid street.
Henry Smith, 470 Patterson street.
W. J. Shipe, White House, Peterborough.
Thos. Brien, R. R. No. 1, Peterborough.
E. W. Smith, 100 Gladstone avenue.

Advice has been received of the following promotions of soldiers from Peterborough:

Private C. H. Castle, 80th Batt., to be Sergt.

Corp. F. A. Thomas, 21st Batt., to be Sergt.

The Lindsay Warder says: Capt. Frank Carew, it is stated, has received the appointment of junior major of the 109th Battalion. It is obvious that Major Carew is determined to get right into the firing line in the near future. In the event of a second battalion being raised Major Carew will probably be placed as officer in command.

TO-DAY'S ORDERS.

REGULAR MEETING OF THE CITY COUNCIL

PTE. F. W. NELSON

Of Peterborough, with the Machine Gun Section of the 2nd Canadian Pioneer Battalion.

Civic Legislators Transacted Considerable Business in Record Time—Honour for Ald. Langford—Local Branch of Belgian Relief Commission Will Be Formed.

ONE DEPUTATION

Commendable brevity and dispatch featured the first regular meeting of the 1916 City Council, which was held last evening. Ald. G. H. Duncan reminded the Council of its responsibilities in respect to the Board of Health, of which he is a member, while his understudy, also from the West Ward languished in the depths of his revolving chair, bathtub fashion, the top of the desk suggesting the waterline. Mayor Duffus manifested a serene indulgence towards those of his colleagues who threatened to become verbose, and by the judicious use of the gavel, succeeded in bringing a somewhat busy session to a successful conclusion at nine-fifty o'clock. This is a record for the Peterborough City Council as the bright lexicon at the city hall will show. During the evening a number of honours were passed out including one for Ald. William Langford. The latter was detailed for duty on the committee that is being formed by the Peterborough Progressive Club, with a view of creating a local branch of the Belgian Relief Commission. "It is pleasing to note that this Council has seen fit to honour me with this position. Small favours thankfully received, larger ones in proportion" observed the North Ward representative. This was one way of reminding the Council, or that section of the Council, which pre-arranged the slate for the standing committees of the success that had attended their efforts to avoid wishing the responsibilities of a committee on Ald. Langford.

A Deputation.

The Council was favoured with a deputation of ladies, headed by Mr. E. V. McElderry. The latter, who acted as spokesman for the party, said he was present on behalf of the Peterborough Progressive Club. This organization has been in existence for some time and its functions are similar to those performed by the Red Cross and other patriotic organizations. The Club has decided to extend their activities in the Belgian relief, and with that object in view, solicited the endorsation of the City Council. Unlike the majority of deputations no money was asked. The ladies merely wanted the good-will of the Council and a promise that one or more members of the Council would associate themselves with the new organization. The need was very great, especially as Belgium was confronted with another winter and the occupying power had refused to sup-

THE DUTY OF PETERBORO' WILL BE POINTED OUT

Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P. Urges a Big Attendance at the Meeting to Be Addressed by Sir Sam Hughes

THE NEED OF THE HOUR

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—At a meeting composed of the President of the Patriotic League of the City and County of Peterborough, Mr. A. E. Coulthard, the Commanding Officer of the 93rd Battalion, Lt.-Col. T. J. Johnston, Major Cameron, M.O., and the Federal member for West Peterborough, Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., it was decided to hold a meeting in the Armouries at Peterborough at the earnest suggestion of the Minister of Militia that Peterborough's battalion should be immediately recruited up to full strength and get to work to put itself in shape if it was to take part in the great task that lies before it. The battalion at the present time is recruited up to almost 600. The full number of a battalion is 1,188. This is the 11th of January. The battalion began on the same date with others that have long since been filled up and are moving on in immediate preparation for the front. Peterborough is behind. It is behind almost all the other places that have undertaken to get up battalions. This fact it is only necessary to bring to the attention of the people of this County to have it corrected. The committee delegated me to make arrangements for this meeting, and I am circularizing the County to that end. Clergymen are earnestly requested to take this matter up at their services on Sunday next and make it known to the people what is required of Peterborough and of Canada, and that we must not forget that Canada has got to provide for protection at home as well as for her share of the conflict abroad. I do not wish to be an alarmist but most of those who have given consideration to the question realize that Canada must have a large army in these troublous times at home if possibilities are to be provided for. Immediately after this war subsides we Canadians will resume our peaceful standing, but at the present time we must make every effort not only to back up our profession of loyalty to the cause of the Allies, but to make due and proper preparation for any eventuality, that might require strong protective measures on our borders at home. The recent explosions and burnings in the United States have occasioned much alarm there, and may well occasion alarm here. The statements contained in this circular are made wholly on my own authority. I urge you to make this meeting which will be addressed by the Minister of Militia, Major-General Sir Sam Hughes,

EXAMINER DOLLAR DAY DATE EARLY IN FEBRUARY

The Greatest of All Shopping Days to be Conducted in its Original Form

At a representative meeting of merchants held yesterday the subject under discussion was Examiner Dollar Day and a date was decided on early in February. All merchants who wish to participate, are asked to communicate with Mr. Callendar at the Examiner Office as early as possible, so that their names can be published in the first announcement, and so give them equal publicity with the rest.

THE REASON

Our business is growing so rapidly showing a steady increase month after month, is because our work is dependable, our glasses are irreproachable in quality, our prices are absolutely fair, and because we are prompt.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

The letter of Dr. Cameron, which appeared in last night's issue of the Examiner, involves an appeal of a far-reaching, inclusive and urgent character. It is inconceivable that, at a time when all our hearts are touched with unprecedented appeals to their sympathy; when all consciences are aroused to sensitiveness of duty in regard to our obligations to the call of altruism; when the interests life, comfort, health, and happiness of our fellow men are involved in our nation, that the announced annual meeting of the Health Association should not have been honoured with a quorum of attendance.

We can better appreciate and lay to heart the objects and work of this Association if we remember in these last weeks of prevalent ill health what a serious and saddening and difficult thing ill health is when it comes in a temporary, if distressing form, to us in homes with every comfort, and with all the ordinary appliances for simple medication warmth, rest, comfort, and dainty nourishing food. It is in homes where nearly all, if not all, of these things are lacking, and where the illness may be life-long, and prostrating, and where the bread ceases when the breadwinner is laid on his back—it is to such homes and in such cases that the Health Association provides with your help and mine, the only effective comforts—healing, medication, and tender and skillful nursing.

This is not a matter for argument but for action; not a matter of abstract sentimental sympathy, but for the healing hand, for the kindly treatment, for the simple comfort and the ready relief. The officers of the association are not alone called upon to do as they nobly do do, their noble duty, but the appeal is to all who "profess and call themselves Christians," to whom the loving spirit of the Gospel is more than an intellectual appeal. We should expect that not only the mass of the 400 members, but scores of others, besides, will be present at the adjourned annual meeting of the Peterborough Health Association on Wednesday evening, January 12th. The charity that piously prays—"be ye warmed and filled" and does no warming and filling—does not bear the sterling stamp.

A TIMELY APPEAL.

Archbishop Bruchesi, speaking at Laval University, Montreal, spoke n new truth, nor said anything to which all who think must not subscribe. He said:

"Canada being a part of the British Empire, it is the sacred duty of the Canadian people to assist Great Britain in her heroic defance of liberty. This was the position taken by the episcopacy of French Canada at the outbreak of the war, and this is the attitude our Bishops still maintain and will continue to maintain to the very end. The obligations we owe the British Crown are sacred obligations. It is the solemn duty of every Canadian citizen to the utmost limit of his force to stand side by side with the motherland in her heroic effort to crush the tyrant who wishes to trample small nations and States beneath his iron heel. What fate would be ours if the Germans obtained a foothold here? Were Great Britain defeated Germany would secure domination on the St. Lawrence." Raising himself to his full height Mgr. Bruchesi said: "French-Canadian countrymen, I for one do not want to be a German citizen," a sentiment that evoked loud cheers.

The archbishop's appeal gives prominence to one of the deep seated fundamentals of loyalty to the power under which we live, and enjoy the blessings that so plentifully attend the possession of liberty. His appeal is timely; because it comes at a time when a new demand is made upon our Canadian manhood; because it is needed as a corrective. We have heard partizan shrieks cast reflections upon the loyalty of the French Canadians who have, it is declared, not enlisted as freely as in the other provinces. If there is any force in such a charge, there is a reason for it. For the past five or six years the accursed cult of "Nationalism", that declares we owe Britain nothing, has been assiduously poisoning the minds of French Canadians, with the doctrine that Canada owes nothing to Britain—neither gratitude nor duty. This poison has perhaps more freely entered the minds of the French habitant, because the propagandists of disloyalty and unduty to Great Britain have received the endorsation of official association with the government of the country, though perhaps now the relation is less intimate. If such sentiments have taken root in the hearts and minds of the simple, unthinking habitants, the emphatic declaration of Monsignor Bruchesi shows it is not the sentiment of the highest and guiding thought of the province of Quebec. His speech should be scattered far and wide and it cannot but have a stimulating effect upon recruiting in Quebec. It should be read and heeded in Ontario, even in Peterborough, where there are many who, it is feared, have scant ideas of the obligation of every Canadian to fight for the empire, and in so doing fight for Canada for Canadian liberty and Canadian homes for humanity and all the blessings and benefits involved in the highest form of Christian civilization, as it is associated with British civilization and human freedom.

ENGLISH NAVY AND AMERICAN TRADE.

The other day when the British authorities seized the United States mail coming from Europe we were angry. We cried out loudly and rightly, perhaps, against this high-handed proceeding.

England has interfered with our sea rights to a certain extent, at certain points and in certain ways. But it cannot be denied that, on the whole, the British navy has rendered inestimable service to our commercial interests.

She has restricted our trade with Holland and Scandinavia, and our German trade is non est. But the big sea highways are open and our total volume of overseas trade has grown enormously. Our export returns are the biggest in the history of this country and at the present time the United States leads the world in exports.

This we could not possibly have done had the British navy not patrolled the seas and policed its waters.

It is fitting that we insist that the emergency measures adopted by Britain shall be revoked as soon as possible. But it is extremely imprudent and foolish to keep dogging a power without whose protection of the seas our commerce would have been reduced to a beggardly trifle.—Buffalo News.

C. A. BOGERT DENIES SIR SAM'S CRITICISM

Mr. Frederic Nicholls Says Canadian General Electric Employees Have Done Well

Mr. C. A. Bogert, general manager of the Dominion Bank, made the following statement in regard to the remarks credited to Sir Sam Hughes in an Ottawa despatch, viz., that there are 25,000 young men employed in the banks and financial institutions of Canada, who are anxious to enlist, but are being prevented from so doing. "There are no institutions in Canada," said Mr. Bogert, "which are doing more than are the Canadian banks to help their Empire in this crisis. Large numbers of clerks from all the banks in the Dominion have enlisted and are still doing so.

Mr. Frederic Nicholls, general-manager of the Canadian General Electric Co., Ltd., had no criticism to make to Sir Sam Hughes statement except in-so-far as his own company was concerned. "Speaking for the Canadian General Electric, I can say that we haven't interfered with any person desirous of enlisting. Hundreds of men have gone from our branches all over Canada; and one detachment, in particular, of 25 men have gone from here as the C. G. E. detachment of Engineers, these men being equipped and maintained in the field my our firm and at no expense to the Government. We certainly haven't attempted to hold any back. Personally, I have two sons, a son-in-law, and four nephews at the front. I don't think either that the manufactures of munitions are preventing men from enlisting. As regards the banks, I consider that they have responded nobly to the call."

A Record of German Progress

Achievements and Failures Listed by London Paper.

The results of the war so far are summarized by the Westminster Gazette under the headings, "What the Germans Have Succeeded in Achieving" and "What the Germans Have Failed to Achieve." The first items are as follow:

1. Conquest of Belgium, including Antwerp and Zeebrugge.
2. Occupation of the northern province of France, including Lille.
3. Occupation of Russian Poland, and the effective holding up of the Russian armies.
4. Destruction of Serbia and the establishment with the help of Bulgaria, of a through route to Constantinople.
5. Check to the British attempt to pierce the Dardanelles.

The enumeration of what the Germans have failed to achieve is as follows:

1. Failed to crush the French armies.
2. Failed to crush the Russian armies.
3. Failure even to wound Great Britain.
4. Paris and Calais remain untaken.
5. Petrograd and Moscow are intact.
6. Britain's sea power unshaken; German submarine war dies down.
7. Failed to save her colonies.
8. Failed to stem the sure attrition of German strength in men and in material.

IF THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD APPLY PARTY METHODS TO RECRUITING

The Prime Minister has chalked on the wall the news that the Government authorizes the raising of a force of 500,000 men in all for overseas service.

Having made that announcement the Government evidently intends to leave the matter in other hands for fulfilment. The actual raising of the troops is, evidently, to be left to cities like Toronto, to municipalities, localities, energetic groups of persons at points her and there throughout the Dominion, who will put forth their utmost efforts. If they succeed or if they fail it will be all right—in either case, did not the Government show where it stood when it authorized the country to raise half a million men?

Yet if an election were on, and the Government at Ottawa wanted to rally five or six hundred thousand voters to vote for the party, instead of that number of volunteers to fight for the country, would not the task be undertaken in a different way? Would not the Government at Ottawa and everybody in it, and everybody anybody in it could influence from the Atlantic to the Pacific, be quickly stirred up by telegraph? Would there not be tremendous doings in a hurry?

If the need of the hour was to persuade men to vote for the party, instead of being, as it is, to persuade them to enlist in the service of the country, would there not instantly go out from Ottawa tons of printed matter, franked freely through His Majesty's mails, using all kinds of persuasive arguments and addressed to every available man in the country?

Would there not be public meetings in every town hall in the country and canvassings, and checking over of lists, and torch-light processions?

Would not every Cabinet Minister be trying to make the speeches of his life and exert the widest influence of his life?

Well, why not regard the present affair as being one of, at least, equal importance? Why not have similar leadership, determination, and resouce evinced by the Government?

Evidently if 500,000 men are to be raised they are to be raised as were the first 32,000. No plans at all have been put forward by the State, making feasible the absence all at one time of 500,000 men from the industries of the country. Ther is apparently to be no effort at selection, no discrimination. There is to be no supervision of the effects of random enlistment, no adjustment by the State of labour and the industries. All is to be left to chance. If all the expert mechanics in Toronto who are engaged in making munitions were to enlist to-morrow, evidently they are to be accepted and taken away.—Toronto Star.

Ask Britain To Let Supplies For Destitute Poles Pass Blockade

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 11.—A cable despatch urging Britain to lift the blockade sufficiently to admit supplies to the destitute of Poland was sent to-night to Mr. Asquith, the British Premier.

A telegram was also sent to President Wilson, quoting the despatch to Mr. Asquith, and to the British, German, French, Italian, Russian, and Austro-Hungarian embassies at Washington. The communication to Mr Asquith follows in part:

"The undersigned, duly elected officers of legally constituted organizations, numbering half a million American citizens, representatives of four million Polish speaking residents of the United States, hereby most respectfully present a unanimous request to His Majesty's government that the blockade against ships carrying provisions and clothing, and destined for the war stricken districts of Poland, be raised, and vessels carrying such cargoes be permitted to discharge them at the harbour of Dansig or some other suitable port for distribution among inhabitants of that part of Poland devastated by war.

"It is our desire and earnest hope that the American commission to Belgium should take charge of the entire relief work, thus offering to His Majesty's government complete and absolute guarantee that the food and clothing will be distributed exclusively among Polish sufferers in districts devastated by war. We trust that the Almighty will inspire His Majesty's government to grant our request."

The communication was signed by the Polish Central Relief Committee, and nine big Polish organizations, whose relief work is being conducted through the relief committee.

The telegram to President Wilson says they believe it their duty as loyal Americans to notify him of their action and declares that more than half a million American citizens of Polish birth or extraction bespeak his assistance and co-operation in influencing the Belgian Relief Commission to undertake distribution of supplies to Poland.

A telegram to Sir Cecil Spring-Rice the British Ambassador, says that had time permitted they would have wished to present their request through him, and that they hope he will understand the feeling which prompted their action, even though it is not in accord with diplomatic action.

PETERBORO'S FIRE LOSS FOR THE YEAR AMOUNTED TO APPROXIMATELY $22,361.00

Loss was Nearly Double that of the Preceding Year—Eighth Annual Report of Fire Chief Howard was Submitted to the City Council — Twenty-five per cent of the Total Strength of the Department Enlisted During the Year —The Capitulation.

Few reports dealing with civic departments contain more interesting reading than that furnished by Chief W. A Howard of the Fire Department. The eighth annual report respecting this particular department was submitted to the City Council last evening. It showed a total fire loss for the year of approximately $22,361 which is nearly double that of the previous year. The alarms responded to during the month of November was nearly double that of any other month during the whole year.

During the year of 1915 four members or twenty-five per cent. of the total strength of the department enlisted for overseas service. They were replaced by men acceptable to the department.

The Report.

The report reads as follows:

To His Worship the Mayor and Aldermen of the City Council.

Gentlemen:—

I have the honor to submit herewith the eighth annual report of the Fire Department for the year ending December 31st 1915, which is as follows:—

During the year the Fire Department responded to 122 alarms of fire, and in doing so the apparatus travelled 83 miles and used 6,650 feet of two and one half inch Standard Fire Hose, raised 752 feet of ladders and used 259 gallons of chemicals.

The total damage by fire as near as can be ascertained for the year 1915 was $22,361 nearly double the amount of damage of the preceding year.

The damage is classified as follows:—

Damage to buildings	$ 5,172.00
Damage to contents	17,189.00
Total	$22,361.00

The alarms of fire were received in the following manner:—

88 by Telephone.
29 by Fire Alarm Boxes.
5 verbal or still alarms.

During the year a thorough and persistent inspection was conducted by the Department of all public buildings, wholesale and retail establishments and manufacturing concerns with a view to preventing fire in so far as possible. I am pleased to be able to report that the work of this Department along the lines of Fire Prevention has been exceptionally successful from many standpoints. The Department has been fortunate in receiving the alarms of fire while they were in their incipent stage. This coupled with the fact that your Firemen are constantly on the alert, has made it possible to keep the fire losses of the City of Peterboro down to a respective low percentage.

The Police Department have paid particular attention to this part of public service, thereby rendering valuable assistance to the firemen throughout the entire year.

The merchants and manufacturers have taken kindly to the suggestion offered to safe-guard not only their own but neighboring premises. This assistance we appreciate very much.

I am pleased to be able to report that the Department have received the co-operation of the citizens in general. A general spirit of good feeling has existed between the citizens and your firemen. The harmony and good will existing between the gentlemen of the Council Board of 1915 and the City Fire Department is worthy of note. Alderman Jos. J. Duffus, Chairman of the Board, having jurisdiction over the affairs of the Department has been kind and considerate, giving freely of his time and talents to promote the best interests of all concerned, for which we are especially grateful.

The general health of the Department has been good. One member of the Department met with a slight accident which rendered him incapable for thirty days.

The discipline of the Department is excellent. During the whole year only two or three misdemeanors of a very trivial nature occurred. These were satisfactorily adjusted by the Chairman of the Board and the Chief of the Department.

Appropriation.

The appropriations for the year were well prepared and gone over in detail by the Fire, Water and Light Committee. Although in some cases they were cut very fine, I am pleased to be able to report that having no serious accident, we were able to keep well within the appropriation and have a surplus to turn back at the end of the year.

The money slotted for horses was not used as we found it impossible to purchase suitable horses for the Department, despite the fact that the Chairman and myself and a number of other have been constantly on the lookout for suitable horses.

It is not my intention to press the claim of the Department for any extras this year, owing to the general outlook in financial affairs, but I sincerely hope your Committee will be as generous as in prudent, so that the Department will be provided with the necessary funds to carry on the work and thereby avoid the possibility of an over-draft at the end of the year.

The Department is really in need of a chemical engine, and if at all possible I sincerely hope your Board will make provision for the purchase of a modern machine.

During the year underground cable was installed through the business section of the city and also two new fire alarm boxes.

In addition to extinguishing fires, the Department was called upon to render assistance with the pulmotor, and I am pleased to be able to report that in nearly every case we were able to render assistance.

I take very great pleasure in reporting the splendid behaviour of your firemen during the past year. They have conducted themselves as firemen and gentlemen and are enjoying the respect and esteem of the citizens. They have been faithful to duty, courteous to the public and painstaking in the performance of their every duty for the protection of lives and property.

You will please find attached to this report a stock sheet showing the amount of equipment and supplies on hand January 1st, 1916.

There is also a table showing the number of alarms of fire received; the date of each fire; the day of the week on which the fire alarm was received; the time of day or night at which the alarm occurred; the cause of the fire as near as can be ascertained; the name of the owner of the place where the fire occurred; the name of the tenant or occupant; how each alarm was received; whether by fire alarm street box, by telephone or verbal; the estimated damage resulting from fire; the number of miles the apparatus travelled; number of feet of ladder raised; number of feet of two and one half inch hose used; the number of telephone calls received at the Fire Station each month; the number of street lights reported out by the citizens and police; number of inspections made by the Department; the number of reports made; the number of official letters sent out and also a comparative tabulated statement of former years is attached.

In conclusion, I desire to express my sincere thanks to His worship, The Mayor, and Gentlemen of last year's Council, and especially the Chairman of the Board, who has given so freely of his time, and for the valuable assistance he has rendered the Department, throughout the year. The Chief of Police and his staff of constables and all the City officials together with the Public Press have taken a keen interest in the welfare of this Department and their kindness has been much appreciated. The friendly relations existing between the different departments of Public Works of this city is worthy of note and I trust will be long continued.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honor to be, Sirs,

Your obedient servant,
Fire Chief Department.

ply even the necessities of life for the starving Belgians.

Mayor Duffus assured the ladies of his support and promised that the matter would be given due consideration by the Council. Later in the evening, Ald. Lanford was delegated to represent the Council on the committee that is being formed to place the new organization on its feet.

Seasonal Honours.

Ex-Mayor Buller, Ald. G. H. Duncan and James Murty were elected to the Board of Health for the ensuing year. Frank Sollitt was elected to the Public Library Board, while Ald. F. H. Dobbin will represent the Council on the Board of the Peterborough Protestant Home.

The Property Committee of the City Council will confer with the Board of Health in respect to a couple of cottages that the Board is desirous of constructing with the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital. They will be used exclusively for the treatment of virulent diseases, such as smallpox, spinal meningitis, etc. According to the Health Act such cases cannot be treated in the Isolation Hospital. The latter is for diphtheria and scarlet fever. This information came as a surprise to some of the Aldermen who failed to recollect that a few years ago the city expended several hundred dollars for tents for the accommodation of one or two cases of smallpox. The tents have since deteriorated and the Board has decided that the best interests of the city would be served by providing something permanent in the way of buildings. The two cottages required can be built at a cost of four or five hundred dollars. A mix-up in the tenders will necessitate a joint meeting of the Property Committee and the Board of Health.

MICE NESTING IN ORGAN DISORDERED THE NOTES

A colony of mice hibernating in the organ at the Temperance Hall on the 4th line of Smith, [illegible] into some of its vitals putting five of the keys out of order. When the bellows were pedalled these five keys played a chorus of their own before a note was struck. As a result the songs were dispensed with, and the mice remained undisturbed in their home of music.

Alkali in Soap Bad for the hair

Soap should be used very carefully if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leavee the scalp soft, and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy. it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

SIR JOHN JELLICOE'S REMUNERATION

Comparison is Made With Amounts Paid to Government Officials in Remuneration and Pensions.

The Government must set an example if Ministers expect their speeches to be effective, says the London Telegraph.

"Is it seemly that Ministers should divide among themselves at a time of financial stringency a sum of about $729,000 annually?

"Is it in accord with the British habit of mind that at such a moment the House of Commons should continue to vote itself payment at the rate of $1,944 for each member, absorbing about a quarter of a million sterling?

"Can anything be said in excuse for the allocation of a matter of $97,200 each to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland and the Attorney-General, or $48,600 to the Lord Chancellor?

"We utter no word of criticism of the occupants of these offices. No doubt they have to meet heavy expenses of which the public knows little. But are these sums which should be paid at a time when the nation—the poorest and the richest amongst us—is being urged to tread the path of rigid economy, and when taxation has reached a level never before attained? Do they represent value received by the nation, in accordance with the new standards to which all the professional classes are being compelled to conform?

Startling Contrast.

"Let these salaries be contrasted with the amount paid to the distinguished officer on whom our very existence depends. According to the last Navy Estimates, Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, in command of the greatest war machine which the world has ever seen, receives $8,769 annually, with allowances for servants and entertaining which raise his emoluments to $15,849.

"Is his splendid performance of duty only of a value about one-sixth that of the Attorney-General's?

"Not content with preaching to the nation the urgent necessity for economy and the reduction of consumption, the Government intends itself to set an example," says the London Chronicle Parliamentary correspondent.

"It is to be hoped that official pensions as well as salaries will be retrenched. Our legal and judicial pensions are on a very lavish scale For example, we have three ex-Lord Chancellors each drawing a pension of $24,300 a year, viz., Lords Halsbury, Loreburn, and Haldane. There is plenty of room for renunciation in the salaries of our six Law Lords ($29,160 a year); and in those of our High Court Judges, $24,300 a year each, with the exception of the Lord Chief Justice and the Master of the Rolls, who receive $38,880 and $29,160 respectively.

"Once retrenchment becomes the rule the Civil List cannot escape."

HAVE YOU A HUSBAND

child or friend, who is suffering from eczema, or other skin disease, or an obstinate sore that has defied medical treatment? If so, that is a case for Zam-Buk.

Mrs. B. Ellis, of Castleton, Ont., writes: "My husband suffered intensely with a running sore on his foot. The sore penetrated to the bone, and the inflammation was so bad that he could not sleep at nights. After spending a lot of money and trying every remedy we heard of, with no result, I read of a cure which Zam-Buk had effected in a similar case, and got a box.

"Within two hours after the first application the pain was eased; and with perseverance the inflammation was drawn out, the swelling reduced, and before long the sore was entirely healed."

Zam-Buk also cures ulcers, abscesses, eczema, poisoned wounds, pimples, cold sores, chapped hands and chilblains.

WHAT HARRY LAUDER HAS DONE TO ASSIST THE BRITISH EMPIRE

In view of what has occurred in England since Harry Lauder returned to it from this country just a year ago, it is likely that the favourite parsimony stories with which a number of writers used to regale the public have forever been laid. All of the hoary tales of "canniness" must seek their holes and pull the holes in after them, when they learn what Harry did when it came time to show his love of son and country, and threw a fortune to the four winds of heaven for a principle. The man who can do big things when big things are demanded need hardly stop to deny the ancient wheezes of how he saved a match on occasion or how the clean five pound note told the dirty one how it retained its crispness by being in Lauder's purse for ten years. Here is the other side of Harry Lauder that ought to be read with more avidity than the silly tales of his being a "tight-wad."

Lauder's only child, now Captain John Lauder, of the Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, graduated from Eton in the spring of 1914, and for a vacation went to visit his father, who was then completing his round the world tour in Australia. While he was there the war broke out, and at once John, who is 24 years old, announced his intention of going home at once and enlisting. He entered the camp of instruction at once on his arrival in England, and in December was ordered to prepare to leave for France as Lieutenant of his regiment. As soon as Harry, who was then playing an engagement of 25 weeks in this country, learned that his son was starting for the front, he brought his tour here to a close after ten weeks had been played; and as Lauder's salary is $5,000 a week, he sacrificed $75,000 of real money for a sentiment—that of seeing his son before the latter went into action.

Arrived in England, Lauder at once subscribed $5,000 to the Prince of Wales' Fund. He saw the boy in whom all his hopes were tied up, go to the snow-filled trenches in France, and then he cast about to find means to help his country as best he might. He suggested a plan to the authorities to help recruiting, and they accepted it with acclaim. As a result, Lauder equipped a band of fifteen pipers, and started to take them all over England and Scotland as a means of working up the attendance at these meetings, some of which were held in halls and others in the open air. To make this effective, Lauder was appointed a recruiting sergeant, and empowered to enroll recruits. All this was done without a cent of expense to the Government, as Lauder not only equipped the pipe band, but paid their salaries and expenses, and has been doing so for nearly eight months. Anyone who is fond of statistics can figure out Lauder's contribution to the cause of his country in this item alone by fixing the salary and expenses a week of fifteen men at any figure they like and multiplying it by thirty. To do this consistently and thoroughly Mr. Lauder refused some big offers to appear in the theatres in Scotland and England for many weeks, preferring to visit the hospitals and sing for the sick and wounded soldiers. It is only lately that he began to play at the halls there, and in every one of the cities there was held on the following day a recruiting meeting, at which thousands were moved by Lauder's eloquence and by his hard common sense arguments to rally to their country's cause. In Blackpool, for instance, eighty men enrolled in fifteen minutes, and in Manchester the response was equally gratifying.

During his stay in Scotland, Mr. Lauder and his wife have helped nurse their son three times when he was sent back from the front with wounds. Young Lauder has been mentioned in orders and has been made a Captain of his regiment, a battalion of which has been called "Lauder's Own" in honour of his father, and which is made up largely of recruits gained by the comedian.

Harry plays this city at "The Grand," Monday, Jan. 24th, marking his 8th annual tour of the Country under the direction of William Morris.

ORGAN RECITAL AT TRINITY CHURCH

The Beautiful Instrument Just Erected Had Its Merits Shown Forth by Dr. Sanders, F.R.C.O.

The large and commodious new church, situated on Rubidge street, which, as Trinity church, has displaced the smaller Methodist church on Charlotte street, was, to all intents and purposes, filled at 8.15 last evening when the beautiful new organ, in the brand-new church, afforded an opportunity of showing the public what can be done with a "keist o' whustles." Dr. Herbert Sanders, a fellow of the Royal College of Organists, the organist of the Dominion Methodist church, Ottawa, was the professional gentleman engaged to give the opening public recital. By whom the choice was made, whether by the church authorities or by the builders of the organ, this scribe knoweth not, but the choice was a happy one no matter by whom made.

The programme submitted was as follows:

Second Sonata in A ..... Edward J. Bellerby
Anthem—"O Holy Night" ..... Adam
Solo, Miss Ada Richardson
Aubade, Pavane... Bernard Johnson
Offertoire in D minor Edouard Batiste
Solo—Selected .....
Miss Ada Richardson
Pastorale (interrupted by a thunderstorm) ..... Aloys Claussmann
Variations on a Scotch Air ..... Dudley Buck
Military March — "Pomp and Circumstance" ..... Edward Elgar
God Save the King

Before commenting on the programme, let me say a few words about the organ, which was really the motif for the programme or recital.

This fine toned instrument which with its concave facade of sixty-five pipes, in three bays and two towers, occupies the whole of the width of that portion of the building devoted to organ and choir. This organ was built by Cassavant Freres of Sainte Hyacinthe (P.Q.) It consists of two manuals, great and swell, of 65 notes; a radial pedal organ of 30 notes. There are eight speaking stops on the great organ, each register running the full range; that is to say there is no case of the lower octaves of one stop having to do duty for other stops—in fact none of them are cut in. On the swell organ are thirteen speaking stops and a tremolo. On the pedal organ are six stops, four of them being on 16 foot pipes. Then there are eight couplers and ten composition pedals, by means of which various combinations of stops can be effected and an ingenious locking device is provided for locking any combination desired by the player. There are, of course, the swell and crescendo pedals.

The compass of the manuals is CC to C, and that of the pedals from CCC to F.

The front of the organ is gilt in an oak frame. While the console, which is detached, is of mahogany.

The whole of the action is electrical, thus obviating the use of trackers, rollers, back falls and stickers—which are so apt to stick—in the old mechanical actions. The bellows are operated by an electric motor.

The cost, I understand, exceeded five thousand dollars.

The programme was opened with a Sonata in A. I do not think I can do better in describing it than to quote a remark on the programme. This work carries as a motto the well-known words of Augustine, "Thou hast made us for Thyself; and our heart is restless until it finds rest in Thee." It opens with a prelude suggestive of quiet student life. The second movement is Toccata, in D flat, and attempts to depict the restless pursuit of pleasure, ending in a crashing discord. Then follows an air with variations in G flat, suggesting home life after the storm and unrest of youth. But this does not appear to satisfy, and after a series of recitatives broken by snatches of the previous movements, the student theme is heard in common time whilst the bass is the melody of a verse in the "Stabat Mater," taken up on the manual. This satisfies, and a Fugue follows on the old plain song.

As this piece contained such a variety of motifs, it was a selection well calculated to show off the merits of the various departments of the organ.

Mr. John Crane, the able and talented organist of Trinity church, now took the organ stool, accompanying Miss Ada Richardson in a solo supported by a chorus, "O Holy Night" was the title, and in it Miss Richardson's fine, clear voice was heard to great advantage. This is not the first time I have had the pleasure of listening to this vocalist, and I hope it may be by no means the last.

The next item showed forth, at one and the same time, the quality of the instrument, and the ability of its exponent, some of the smaller scale pipes being very sweetly voiced.

As will have been already seen, the programme was of a very varied nature; many types of school and thought being included. In Batiste's offertoire in D minor, the full organ passages were very rich, the swell stops being fine and delicate.

Miss Richardson here again delighted her audience, commencing with the recitative, "And God said let the earth, etc.," followed by the aria "With Verdure Clad." The singer's high and low notes were good and equally clear. The audience demanded an encore which however Miss Richardson had to decline. In this case Mr. Crane was accompanist.

The pastorale, with thunder storm effects, was another piece well calculated to show off the capacity of the instrument and was a fine piece of musical work. This was followed by variations of the well-known Scotch air, "Annie Laurie." Played in different keys with chromatic and diatonic enects the finale being played in diminuendo from full organ decreasing to a single small swell solo stop, showed how well the mechanical arrangement of stops by composition pedas had been effected. Loud applause greeted Dr. Sanders.

Then came the final number—a very fine specimen of playing which again tested the power and tone of the instrument. Such a round of applause followed this item that the talented musician played two more short movements.

Mr. Crane then again went to the console to accompany the National Anthem, "God Save the King," which was heartily sung by the highly appreciative audience.

The tone of this instrument is highly satisfactory. The large scale pipes, such as the open Diapason and Principal, have a fine, full, round, resonant tone, while the smaller calibre pipes, such as the Dulciana, the Viopline, etc., are sweet, soft and melodious. The 16 ft. Bourdons and Stopped Diapason 8 ft., are remarkably rich in volume and roundness of tone. The swell and great organs appear to be well balanced, while the solo stops are very sweet.

Altogether the authorities and congregation of Trinity church may congratulate themselves on possessing an instrument of a fine and sweet tone.

F. R.

THE BURDEN OF AGE.

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

White House Guests Hurt in Runaway

Carriage Strikes Iron Fence and Occupants are Thrown Out.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Flora Wilson, daughter of former Secretary of Agriculture Wilson and Miss A. Asavelle Gillette of this city, who attended the White House reception, were injured, though not seriously, in a runaway accident.

The accident occurred just as they were about to return to their homes. The driver, it is said, got off the carriage to get his hat, which had dropped. The horses became frightened and ran down Executive avenue towards the Ellipse. In turning a corner the carriage struck an iron fence, throwing the occupants out.

Miss Wilson was bruised and Miss Gillette's arm was broken. Both were removed to Miss Gillett's home. The driver was arrested, charged with violating police regulations, by leaving his horses unattended.

LECTURE HELD IN ALL SAINTS'

The regular meeting of All Saints' A.Y.P.A. was held on Monday evening in the Parish Hall at 8 o'clock. The meeting, which was an open one, took the form of an illustrated lecture by the Reverend R. S. Mason, of Uxbridge. The title was "The Fire and Sword in Belgium," a title which proves especially interesting at this time.

Although Rev. Mr. Mason had not been in Belgium, he read a very interesting lecture by F. A. McKenzie, a Scotchman, who had been in Belgium since the war and had secured the pictures.

The pictures showed the beautiful buildings in the different cities in Belgium before the war. Then the audience was led on to see the terrible destruction and havoc of the Germans and, finally the poor Belgians fleeing for their lives.

The terrible acts of the ruthless Germans was depicted in almost every picture, and it was pitiful to see the devastated homes.

After the lecture Rev. Mr. Mason showed a few coloured slides of the Christmas story taken from famous pictures. These were also very interesting.

The A.Y.P.A. of All Saints' is very much indebted to Rev. Mason, who came receiving no remuneration for his time and interesting and instructive address.

During the evening a few musical numbers were given which were as follows:

Instrumental—Miss Johnston.
Vocal Solo—Miss Rathbone.
Vocal Solo—Mr. Heafield.

These were very much appreciated by the large audience present. Miss Olga Johnston acted as accompanist.

The evening closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

CANADA'S FIGHTING FORCES IN PICTURES

Sergt. Wells and Corp. White, Two of the Canadian Heroes in the Second Battle of Ypres Will Lecture--Sergt. Wells Covered the Retreat of His Platoon and Was Taken Prisoner By the Germans.

Sergeant Fred. Wells is a fine speaker, all the Toronto newspapers granting him this distinction. His stories of trench life, prison life in the German prison camps, his escape by feigning insanity, are all very interesting topics for Canadians to hear. His lectures on "Canada's Fighting Forces" are very educational. A few remarks from him of his superior officers all seem to coincide that he was not only a game soldier but a very popular one. Captain Carlton says in writing to Captain Casey of the 104th: "Doc Wells, as he is more commonly known, was the life of his battalion. When the battalion would return from a long route march, tired and out of sorts, 'Doc' was the man who would step into the breach and bring them in in good humour. He on many occasions had to take charge of a platoon while in the trenches. On the occasion at Ypres, where the Canadians made fame, he was ordered to cross a very dangerous road with his platoon and reinforce No. 3 Company. His men had pushed forward into an advanced salient, and in order to keep his alignments with others on his flank he retired the most of his men, keeping just a few to cover their retirement, finally retiring the remainder, and although badly wounded, covered the retirement himself. Barker, who was last to see the gallant fellow, looked back and saw him leaning over the parapet of the trench. One arm had been literally riddled with machine gun bullets, but with his good arm he was firing at the advancing Germans. Barker could not conceive of his having come out alive. We have since heard that he is in an English hospital, an exchanged prisoner from Germany, on a fair way to recovery. We all wish him the best of luck." Sergeant Wells is lecturing on "Canada's Fighting Forces," and is assisted by Corporal White, who received the D.C.M. at St. Julien. These wonderful pictures will be shown at "The Grand" next Friday and Saturday, with matinee Saturday, at 2.30.

MOTORISTS REMEMBER THE MEETING TO-NIGHT

The annual meeting of the Automobile Association (wrongly announced for last night) will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers to-night at 8 o'clock.

During the past year the Association has not received the support that it merited. This is no doubt due to the feeling that in the past the Association has made no adequate return for the fee paid. Of the fee of five dollars two dollars are sent to the Ontario Motor League. The League in return sends to each member the Motor Magazine and uses the remaining dollar in its general fund.

The three dollars remain in the local treasury, and during the past year this was used in raking the stones from the roads in the vicinity of the city.

The connection with the Ontario Motor League has this year helped several local autoists in legal matters, has reduced the insurance premiums until now we have a standard policy at an equitable rate and although it has not been able to prevent an increase in the license tax, has at least secured the promise that the money so raised will be spent in road improvement.

Through the efforts of the League road signs have been erected on all the leading roads of the province. The Ontario Motor League has under its consideration the question of interchange of licenses with the bordering states and at its annual meeting next week has a speaker from New York State who will urge reciprocity in licenses between that State and Ontario. This should help the tourist trade in our city.

The Association should have your support for only by means of union can the autoists secure any influence with those who regulate the laws concerning motor vehicles.

Come out to the meeting to-night at the Bank of Montreal and give your views concerning the work of the Association.

WOUNDED AMERICAN AVIATOR AND HIS CAPTIVE. — Although wounded while serving in the Aviation Corps of the Russian Army Negley Farson, an American, recently returned with a 'prisoner' whom he captured in a Russian hospital. His prisoner is Miss Anna Goers, an American girl, who was nursing in the Russian War Hospital in Warsaw, when her bridegroom-to-be made his appearance.

K.C.B., a complete success. We have made repeated efforts to fill the battalion. We are only partially succeeding. It cannot drag on indefinitely. When the spring comes it must be ready to move on or to move off. The meeting takes place Saturday, Jan. 22nd, at 2 p.m. in the Armouries. The Patriotic League, the Battalion, the Government, and everybody concerned with the management will do their share. The response of the people must be complete and immediate to serve the purpose for which this battalion was originally created.

The intestinal muscles must have waste to properly develop. The growing muscles and organs must have abundant nutrition. The teeth and bones, nerves, muscles, organs, and blood must all have abundant inorganic salts. MANY CASES OF RHEUMATISM NOW

Says We Must Keep Feet Dry, Avoid Exposure and Eat Less Meat

Stay off the damp ground, avoid exposure, keep feet dry, eat less meat, drink lots of water, and above all take a spoonful of salts occasionally to keep down uric acid.

Rheumatism is caused by poisonous toxin, called uric acid, which is generated in the bowls and absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine. The pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly, cold weather the skin pores are closed, thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate this uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles, causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which overcomes uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

The modern child can be relied upon to put his parents in their place. Witness the following genuine extract from a recent essay on Home: "The important person at home is mother. Another important person is father. He helps to keep us."

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

Lights Out.

Frequent complaint is made regarding street lights being out. If all complaint were reported to the Fire Department or the Utilities Commission they would be remedied without the necessity of bringing them to the attention of the Council as is sometimes done.

A joint meeting of the Board of Health and the Property Committee of the City Council will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock, to consider a proposal to erect a couple of cottages in conjunction with the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital.

Tender for Cottages.

J. Revoy, who tendered for the construction of two cottages at the Isolation Hospital, wants to withdraw his tender upon the grounds that he made a mistake. His price was $385. The next lowest tender is that of J. Cochrane, whose price is $400.

Charity Board.

The Central Charity Board will meet this evening in regular monthly session. Last evening the City Council passed the usual appropriation of five hundred dollars a month for the use of the Board until such time as the estimates are struck.

The Mayor's Grant.

The usual grant of five dollars made to the Mayor will be paid in equal portions quarterly at the beginning of each quarter.

Will Be Represented.

The Board of Trade will be represented on the Manufacturers' committee by three members if such a number can be found.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Patriotic Fund and Relief Association will be held in the City Council chamber one week from to-night.

ADDRESS PRESENTED TO REV. FR. FITZPATRICK

In presenting Rev. Father Fitzpatrick with a set of gold beads and a gold headed cane, the choir accompanied their gift with the following address, which was read by Mr. John K. Galvin, while the presentation was made by Mr. T. T. Crough:

Rev. Dear Father,— Of those who will miss your kind smile and encouraging word in the parish of Ennismore, none will feel more keenly your departure than your choir.

Notwithstanding the numerous and onerous duties of the Holy Priesthood, which you were called upon to discharge daily, your interest in your choir never flagged, nor was encouragement ever wanting.

You showed that you realized what an important place in the liturgy and holy offices church music holds, and, hence you have always endeavoured to make your choir worthy of the house of God, according to the words of the Royal Psalmist:

"Praise the Lord with timbral and choir,
Praise Him with strings and organ."

Hence we always took the greatest pleasure in preparing the different holy offices, and our devotion was stimulated and increased by your zeal for the glory of the house of God.

We have learned then to esteem and love you, not only as the good Priest ministering most faithfully to the numberless needs of His flock, not only as a Spiritual Father of a large and flourishing parish, but we admire you for the exceptional interest you have taken in our behalf.

We had fervently wished that you would remain with us continually, but since Providence in His wisdom has transferred you to another field of labour, we humbly submit to His decision, and pray that you may be spared for many years to continue in the House of God the good work you have so nobly done in our midst, as a little mark of respect and as only a very humble acknowledgement of the many obligations for which we are bound to you, we ask you, Rev. Father, to accept this set of Breviaries and gold-headed cane, and request that in your prayers and daily office you would sometimes remember your choir of St. Martin's, Ennismore:

ENEMY SUFFERS HEAVY LOSSES

PARIS, Jan. 11.—A formidable two-day offensive launched by the Germans against the French lines in Champagne, broke down under French counter-attacks, leaving only a small section of trenches in Teuton hands, the War Office announced to-night.

The Germans, after preparing yesterday by violent artillery fusillades launched throughout the day and night four concentrated attacks on a five-mile front, hurling at one point an entire brigade, (more than 6,000 men) against a French position. Despite the vigour of the assaults which were aimed at penetrating the French positions and paving the way it is believed, for a general offensive, the Teutons only gained two small elements of advanced trenches and these were wrested from them to-day. French counter-attacks resulted in terrific losses to the Teutons, their forces being decimated by the French fire.

At other points of the front, notably in the Bois des Chevaliers and at the Haut-de-Meuse, the French artillery launched a vigorous bombardment of the Teuton lines, causing many trenches to cave in.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

Both Peterborough Intermediate O.H.A. Teams Won Their Games Last Night

Electrics Won From Cobourg at Brock St. Rink by 9 to 5 While 93rd Battalion Scored a Clean Cut Victory Over Campbellford on Latter's Ice.

LOCAL GAME A GOOD ONE

The Peterborough Electrics went out in front in the Intermediate group last night when the home-brew red, white and blue team defeated Cobourg St. Michaels. The proper score was 9 to 5, although Referee E. Laing of Belleville failed to count a goal scored at the end of the first period on the ground that the time was up, but as he had not stopped the play the O.H.A. has frequently ruled in similar cases that the goal should count. However, the Electrics had a three-goal lead without the one in dispute, so the matter will not have to be referred to the Hockey Association.

The Electrics trotted out a new combination of players with some familiar faces in the line-up, and the team played fine hockey, considering their lack of practice. The line worked together better than any the Electrics have had out this season, and with another week's practice together they are going to give the gang in the district a merry battle for the honours. As it was they have the edge with a couple of victories nailed to the fence. Their next fixture is next Monday night, with the 93rd, and a merry old engagement may be expected.

Jimmy McMartin, Orville Kennedy and Al. Coughlin, the latter a brother of the famous Jerry's, were the new players in action last night, and all three did good work. McMartin and Kennedy were on the wings and although neither is in shape they were in the hunt at all times, and did a tremendous lot of useful work. Both checked well and fed their centre men nicely with the result that the forward line played as much real hockey as has been seen this winter. Evans was at rover and his clever stick-handling caught the eye of the fans, while his marksmanship was good, as the scoring summary shows. Billy Hamilton played clever hockey at centre. On the defence, Pete Spratt did grand work, while his repeated rushes were always dangerous and kept Cobourg on the jump. For his first O.H.A. game Coughlin handled himself well on the defence. Claude Montgomery, the Junior goal keeper, who was in the nets, lost a couple of lazy shots, but made up for it by some clever stops of hard chances.

The Cobourg team looked decidedly dangerous in practice, but were not as effective when the game got under way. Lavis and Guy, the two veterans of the team were the most effective, although Reddy, at right wing, did some nice rushing and accurate shooting.

The game was clean and Referee Laing's penalties were for minor offences.

It was always interesting owing to the see-saw nature of the scoring.

The teams were:

Cobourg		Electrics
	Goal
Butler		C. Montgomery
	Defence
Guy		Spratt
Drumm		A. Coughlin
	Rover
Lavis		Evans
	Centre
Hart		W. Hamilton
	Right Wing
Reddy		McMartin
	Left Wing
Delanty		O'Kenneally

The Electrics started off at a good clip and had a shade the better of the argument in the first few minutes of play. The red, white and blue forwards were breaking fast and playing well together, while Pete Spratt enlivened the proceedings with a half-dozen pretty rushes. After losing half a dozen chances, when close in, the Electrics got a decidedly luck goal when McMartin, after a rush up the boards, passed the rubber in front of the Cobourg nets. Hart, the visitors' little centre man, in trying to clear, knocked the puck into his own nets and the Electrics were one to the good. The lead did not last long, however, and Cobourg's tying goal was just as lucky. Reddy getting the puck on an offside pass, and lobbing one past Montgomery. Then the homesters got going ahead and Hamilton slipped one past Butler on a neat pass from Kennedy. Just at the end of the period Hamilton scored again on an easy shot from the side, which Butler should have nailed. The was up before the puck was in the nets, but Referee Laing had not stopped the play, so that the goal should count, although the Referee was doubtful on the point and intended to refer it to the O.H.A. if the goal had any bearing on the result.

Opening the second period Cobourg made it 3 to 2 when Lavis scored after a combination rush. Then Pete Spratt went the length of the rink in a fine rush and Butler, the Cobourg goaler, went down on his knees to stop the shot. It saved a goal, but was a costly play, as the visiting net man drew a penalty, and while he was off Evans scored twice for the Electrics, getting the first from the face-off that followed the ruling off of the Cobourg goaler. Lavis scored for Cobourg before the end of the period on a scrimmage. Drumm closed the gap by scoring for Cobourg, but the Electrics kept on coming. Spratt went up on a nice rush and although chased behind the nets, passed out to Kennedy, who did the needful. Then Kennedy and McMartin combined for a goal by the latter after some nice passing.

The summary:

1st period—
1—Electrics—Hart.
2—Cobourg, Reddy.
3—Electrics, Hamilton.
4—Electrics, Hamilton.

2nd period—
5—Cobourg, Lavis.
6—Electrics, Evans.
7—Electrics, Evans.
8—Cobourg, Lavis.
9—Electrics, Evans.
10—Cobourg, Reddy.
11—Electrics, Evans.
12—Cobourg, Drumm.
13—Electrics—Kennedy.
14—Electrics—McMartin.

93rd Won 6-2.

The 93rd Battalion Intermediates opened their season last night with a clean cut victory over the Campbellford Intermediates on the latter's ice. The khaki team were in front all the way, and won out by 6 goals to 2, turning in a fine brand of hockey. Their playing bore out the assertion that with a little practice the soldier seven would be a hard team to beat. Campbellford used the same team that played the Electrics here on Friday night, with the exception that they had Cross, their good goaler, on, and the youngster had a busy night.

Ketchum and Montgomery starred for the 93rd. The former was in fine form at left wing, while his marksmanship was deadly, the first four goals being the result of his accurate shooting. Montgomery had lots of speed, and his back checking was a feature. The defence pair, Matthews and Dupuy, were a hard combination to beat, while Widdifield was good in goal.

For Campbellford Clements was the most effective, while Cross in goal did good work.

McWilliams, of Marmora, refereed. The 93rd lined up as follows:
Goal—Widdifield.
Defence—Dupuy and Matthews.
Rover—Montgomery.
Centre—De Puyjalon.
Right wing—Blewitt.

CITY HOCKEY LEAGUE ORGANIZED LAST NIGHT

Enthusiastic Meeting Held at the Y.M.C.A. Last Night—East City, Pennants, Bachelors, Americans and Charlotte Street Teams Already in Line—Officers Were Elected

The first meeting apropos the reorganization or resuscitation of the Peterborough City Hockey League went off with a bang in the dining room of the Y.M.C.A. last night. Mr. Hughson Johnstone called the meeting to order at 8 o'clock when the following registered as representatives: Messrs. Cox and Stewart for East City team; Lewis and Johnstone for the "Pennants"; Knox and Blanchard for "The Bachelors"; Harrigan and Wright for the "Americans"; Lyle and Brown for "Charlotte street." The room was just dizzling with enthusiasm, everybody wanting a part, no shirkers, lots of life, but perfect harmony. May it be a criterion of the conduct of the teams at the games. Mr. R. M. Glover, managing director of the Examiner was unanimously elected president and duly installed with loud applause. In his opening remarks he pointed out that the order of business had been diversed, as an honourary president should have been elected first. Immediately several voices shouted Dr. Wightman and that settled it; there were no other nominations. Mr. E. N. McWilliams was elected vice-president, and Mr. H. B. R. Dryden, secretary-treasurer, address Y.M.C.A.

The following are the patrons and patronesses: Hon. J. R. and Mrs. Stratton, Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Denham, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Maher, Dr. and Mrs. D. C. King, Mr. W. G. and Miss Morrow.

Executive committee — One representative from each team in the league.

It was then decided to adjourn until Thursday night, Jan. 13th at 8 p.m. to meet at the same place, when the final opportunity will be given other teams to enter. A copy of the former constitution, which is considered ideal, inasmuch as it shows teams how to run the season, and have a surplus, will be on the table and will in all likelihood be accepted. It now remains for the public to turn out and encourage the boys, who promise to put up some good, clean hockey.

A JAM SHOWER FOR 93RD BATTALION

Otonabee Chapter Daughters of the Empire Intend Having One

The monthly business meeting of the Otonabee Chapter, I.O.D.E., was held on Saturday in the green room of the Y.W.C.A.

Hearty votes of thanks were passed to Mr. W. H. Cunningham for his generosity in tuning the piano on Friday evening in the entertaining of the soldiers, free of charge, to Mr. Denham, President of the Peterborough Club, for his kindness in loaning the Chapter the Club's piano, and to the Regent, Miss Jean Harstone and the girls of the St. Julien Chapter, for their help in entertaining the men, and to all those who contributed to the programme. The usual monthly subscription of twenty-five dollars was voted to the Peterborough Red Cross Society. It was decided that the "Otonabee" Chapter should present the "St. Julien" Chapter with their colours.

Next month being the annual meeting, the necessary arrangements were made for same. Mrs. Robert Harstone being appointed convenor of the Nominating committee.

The members undertook to send books, magazines, checkers, cards, etc., to the recruiting rooms on Simcoe street.

The secretary was instructed to ask for prices and terms from the local piano dealers for a good second hand piano. The Chapter intend having a "jam shower" for the benefit of the 93rd Battalion shortly. It was decided to concentrate on the "socks" department and to send them to the fighting men.

HOCKEY

All members of St. John's Junior Church League team are asked to practice to-morrow (Wednesday) night at 7 p.m. sharp, at East City Rink. This practice is very important as the Captain of the team will be chosen.

The Electric juniors will practice to-night at Brock street rink and a full turnout of players is expected in view of to-morrow night's game with Lindsay.

When fish comes into the house, a few hours before it is cooked, it should be cleaned, wiped dry, and put into a closely covered vessel, not tin, and put as near the ice as possible.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—President H. H. Pope of the Texas Farmers' union, outlined to congressmen from the cotton states the union's plans for shipments of cotton to Germany by way of Sweden. He said the cotton would be concentrated at Houston, that the first ship would sail February 1, and that regular sailings were planned.

The cotton would be shipped, Pope said, in ships owned by a native born American citizen, and will fly the American flag. The cotton has been sold for 27 cents a pound delivered at destination, and will net the farmers about 20 1-2 cents.

The market price is about 12 cents, and the British government has been saying that for cotton seized. Inasmuch as Great Britain and Germany both have put cotton on their contraband lists, this latest move may revive the contentions of the United States against their action.

GOOD ICE FOR TO-MORROW ENSURES RED HOT BATTLE

Lindsay Juniors and Electric Colts Clash at Brock St. Rink in First Junior O. H. A Game—Biggest Crowd of Season Will See Fast Junior Teams Fight For Victory.

The weather man has ensured the last thing that was needed to make to-morrow night's Lindsay Junipr-Electric Colts Junior O.H.A. game at Brock St. Rink the hockey classic of the year. By turning on the cold tap he has provided a fast sheet of ice which guarantees the fans a real battle. Fans who know hockey realize that in a hard-fought junior game they get all the thrills that belong to the great winter game, for the youngsters invariably let themselves out to the last ounce trying for victory. That is the sort of game that may be looked forward to to-morrow night, for the old rivalry between Lindsay and Peterborough makes a red-hot tustle certain. That there wil be excitement galore goes without saying, as Lindsay's train load of rooters is all that is needed to make the Peterborough fans climb unto their feet and give the local kids all the vocal encouragement possible. The game is called at 8:30 o'clock, and it is likely that Lou E. Marsh, of Toronto, will handle the bell. Lindsay has one O.H.A. victory over Belleville to their credit, while the Colts have not yet played an O.H.A. game, but have beaten two intermediate O.H.A. teams in practice games. The two teams should be in the best of shape, and on the keen ice that is certain for to-morrow night, there is every reason to expect the best game of the season. That the crowd will also be the largest goes without saying.

MORAN STOPS JIM COFFEY IN NINE ROUNDS

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Jim Coffey, the Dublin giant, met his master in Frank Moran again, when the Irish-American lad won over him in nine rounds before about 10,000 fight fans. Coffey almost toyed with Moran for seven rounds. He outboxed Moran and landed blow after blow to almost every part of his body during these stages of the battle. Moran seemed unable to reach the Roscommon lad. Occasionally he would try a wide swing, and Coffey, who was by far the more clever, would either step inside of, or away from danger.

All went well until the eighth round, when Moran seemed to open up. It was evident that Moran had been waiting his chance. He had permitted Coffey to do all the work until Coffey lost his speed. Then Moran got in his heavy smashes. He whipped rights and lefts into Coffey's system, and while the Dublin fighter withstood them all when they first arrived, they were telling on him with each smash.

At the outset of the ninth round Moran landed a furious left to Coffey's jaw and followed it up with a vicious right to the same place. Coffey went down. As he arose Moran met him with a fusilade of slams, but Coffey took them gamely. A right smash to the jaw sent him to the mat again. He was very weak when he arose, and Moran had little trouble in sending him to the floor once more. It was apparent to all that Coffey was done. At the count of eight his seconds threw in the sponge. Coffey weighed 206½, Moran 196½.

CURLING

Only one game was played at the Curling Rink last night. The rule requiring two degrees of frost in the rink proved its particular advantage, the players declining to go on the ice with the prospect of heavy going after an end or two.

Herb. Martin's rink won from J. W. McDermid on the last end with one up.

Yeggmen Surprised, Shot Up By Posse

Three in Hospital With Bullet Wounds, and Two in Jersey Jail.

PENNS GROVE, N. J., Jan. 11—A gang of six or seven yeggmen were surprised while robbing the post office here with the result that three are in a hospital with bullet wounds and two others are in the Camden county jail after a battle with a posse of citizens, policemen and a postal inspector.

On pay day at the powder plant two weeks ago an attempt was made to rob the post office and another visit from the robbers was anticipated. Chief Marshal Marbeson of Penns Grove enlisted the service of half a dozen citizens to help his force of four policemen, and postal officials sent four inspectors.

The post office was surrounded at midnight by this guard when the yeggmen silently broke open the front door and entered. The posse closed in and the lookout opened fire. Instantly the other yeggmen at doors and windows started shooting, the posse returning the fire vigorously.

The yeggmen retreated and three fell wounded. They were taken to the hospital where they gave their names as John Mayo, 12 years, St. Paul, Minn.; Frank Matson, 38, Galesburg, Ill., and Charles Collins. The town was searched and two of the gang were arrested.

JUDGE HUYCKE IN PORT HOPE

Addressed a Recruiting Meeting on Sunday Evening

PORT HOPE, Jan. 11.—A splendid audience greeted the speakers at the first Sunday evening recruiting rally held in the Royal Opera House.

The chair was occupied by the Rev. F. J. O'Sullivan. His Honour Judge Huycke of Peterborough, was the principal speaker. Capt. Kirkconbell, an old Port Hope boy, also spoke from the standpoint of the soldier on active service. The musical services were under the direction of the Methodist choir, and Mrs. Wayman contributed a solo with echo chorus by Mr. Russel McLean.

Judge Huycke well sustained his reputation as an eloquent, forceful and appealing speaker. He is known far beyond his own jurisdiction as an honourable and high-souled Christian gentleman, whose character lends unusual weight to his words; consequently his appeal made a profound impression. In the course of his remarks the judge appealed to every man in his audience. To the young men of military age and fitness—to fathers, mothers, wives and sweethearts, in turn—urging the duty of rallying to the defence of the Empire and the cause of freedom in this day of peril. The possible recruit in every business and walk of life was sought out and appealed to, and the ordinary excuses for non-enlistment were mercilessly pulverized. A tender, yet proud, note was struck when His Honour referred to his three sons, all of them serving as officers with our Canadian forces across the seas. His closing appeal to the conscience and manhood of the young men will not soon be forgotten.—Port Hope Guide.

CREW DISPLAYED GREAT HEROISM

London, Jan. 1.—One of the crew of the King Edward VII., the battleship which was reported yesterday sunk by a mine, says:

"Our captain was on the bridge when we struck the mine and did not leave it until 10 minutes before the ship disappeared. There was no panic. He kept us all cool with his cheering remarks.

"We struck at 11.45 in the morning and the ship disappeared at 7.45 in the evening.

"In response to wireless messages the destroyers took us in tow. The weather got worse gradually and the towing hawser broke. The captain then gave the order, 'Every man for himself,' and some got away in the ship's boats. The destroyers took the remainder.

"The last boat left the ship at 6 o'clock though the captain remained on board for another half hour.

"One of the most remarkable incidents was the display of heroism by the watchkeeper of the wireless who dashed below and turned on the switches holding them until our messages were answered."

CITIZENSHIP AND SANDED SIDEWALKS

Blinks skidded as he turned into his own walk last night and wrenched his entire anatomy in his attempt to keep on his feet. The first thing he did after supper was to get a pail of ashes and sand, and going forth removed the slipperiness from the surface along his walk and in front of his residence. Down the street Jinks spilled himself over a little icy slope and sprawled to his feet "blankety-blanking" the city and its officials down to the man who made the sidewalk. He felt himself all over to make sure his limbs were sound, went on his way home and every time the memory of that fall returned his ire gathered and rumbled. But Jinks brought forth neither ashes nor sand for the icy places in front of his house. He didn't have to do it anyway. Besides the town should look after that sort of thing. Of these two citizens chose the man in whom the civic spirit moves deeper.

FRED SUTCLIFFE.

Butter which is streaky in colour, or mottled, is often the result of churning the cream at too high a temperature. This also spoils the texture of the butter, and makes it difficult to express sufficient in the course of manufacturing this product. It is important to have butter of a good colour, as when the colour is at fault the flavour is seldom good.

FLORENCE ELLEN BARNES.

RICHARD BOYLE.

The death occurred this morning, at 2.30, at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Peter Simons, 311 Rubidge Street, of Mr. Richard Boyle, at the age of 82 years. The late Mr. Boyle, for many years, followed the pursuit of farming, in the Township of Emily, but for the past twenty years has lived retired in this city, with his only surviving sister, Mrs. Peter Simons. One brother, Mr. John Boyle of Prentiss, Wis., also survives him.

The deceased was a man who was very highly esteemed in this community, and the news of his death will be learned with deep regret by hosts of friends.

The funeral will take place on Thursday morning to St. Martin's Church, Ennismore. Interment will be in St. Martin's cemetery.

ROBERT GRAY.

Last Friday, at noon, as Robert Gray was on his way home from work at the Fittings Ltd., Oshawa, he was overcome by heart trouble, from which he had been suffering for some time. He fell on the street in front of his house, to which he was carried, and despite all efforts to revive him he passed away in about twenty minutes. Mr Gray was born in Peterborough fifty-eight years ago. He came to Oshawa about thirty years ago, and has been in the employ of the Malleable Iron Co., and the Fittings Ltd., ever since. For the past ten years he has been manager of the moulding department of the Fittings, and was a most competent man. He was a man of sterling qualities and had many friends who were shocked to hear of his sudden death. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and had been an Oddfellow for thirty one years, being a member of Otonabee Lodge, No. 11, Peterborough. Besides his widow he is survived by six children—Harry of St. Catharines; Mrs. G. Mason, Oshawa; Mrs. G. H. Armstrong, Detroit; Robert L., Winnipeg; and Mrs. H. Guy and Greta at home. His funeral took place Monday to the Union Cemetery.

Deceased was a son of the late Jesse Gray of Peterborough, and a brother of Harry Gray, painter.

PERCY ELMHIRST.

INDIAN RIVER, Jan. 11.—The people of this community were saddened when they learned that early on New Year's morning death had entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Elmhirst and had taken away the eldest son, Percy, a young man of most lovable disposition, in his 27th year. Everywhere Percy went his happy smile, his merry laugh or his pleasant joke will never be forgotten. His death is an unusual sad one, as it is the first break in a family of nine sisters and four brothers, and his sorrowing father and mother.

On Wednesday afternoon, January 5th, after a service at the house, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Robert, of Indian River, his remains were followed by an unusual large number of neighbours, friends and relatives, and laid away in Fife's cemetery.

The pallbearers were his three brothers, Stephen, William and Charlie, and his three cousins, Gilbert, Stewart, and Albert Elmhirst.

ROME, Jan. 11.—Pope Benedict hopes to take his first practical step toward peace this week. Cardinal Mercier, with Mgr. Heylen, Bishop of Namur, is expected to arrive here from Belgium to-day or to-morrow. They would be received in audience by His Holiness, and are expected to tell him upon what terms the people of Belgium will agree to an early peace. Pope Benedict is convinced that the restoration of Belgium by Germany is imperative, preliminary to peace proposals, and has made this fact known to Germany and the Allies.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—The French liner Lafayette, which was threatened with destruction in anonymous messages, arrived here to-day safely. E. C. McDowell, of Hamilton, Ont., who arrived to-day on the Lafayette, said the French Government has just placed an order for 4,000 steel cars with a Canadian firm.

Trappers Fight Flood and Flames

Sudden Rise in Genesee River Imprisons Two Men on Geneseo Flats.

GENESEO, Jan. 11.—Edward and Louis Chapman of this village, while trapping on the Genesee flats had an unexpected and thrilling experience. They were on a little tract of the flats higher than the surrounding ground and busy with their traps, and although the Genesee flowed close by they did not realize the speed with which the flood was approaching. When they got ready to depart they found themselves entirely surrounded and there was no way of their getting out but to swim. This they could not do without danger of being swept down the flats and perhaps losing their lives, so after shouting in vain they decided to settle down and wait for help.

During the night one kept a fire going while the other heaped wood on the blaze and watched the progress of the water's rise with considerable anxiety. Towards morning they got so exhausted that both fell asleep on the ground and woke up to find the trees they were under had caught fire from the blaze and was in imminent danger of falling on them.

The scare they suffered and the efforts they made extinguished the fire on the tree woke them up so thoroughly that they could not sleep again, so they remained awake till early dawn, when Frederick Nixon, of Geneseo, found them with his boat and brought them back to their anxious relatives.

"Son," "I hope, governor, that when I attain to your years I'll know more than you do." "Father," "I hope you one better, my boy; and hope that when you reach my age you'll know as much as you think you know now."

THE ROY STUDIO 140½ Hunter

DECORATED BY KAISER

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—In the course of his last visit at the western front Emperor William personally decorated Frederich Meyer, a Hamburg laborer and corporal of one of the Prussian reserve regiments, with the Iron Cross of the First Class. In a letter to his former employers Meyer who is the first man of his regiment to earn this distinction, describes the interesting event and the deed which won him the much coveted decoration as follows:

"I was lying in one of our trenches when an officer appeared and informed our commander that I was wanted at the headquarters of the General Staff. When I pointed to my dirty clothes and remonstrated that I was not in a presentable condition I was given a few minutes to wash up and put on a clean uniform. Then a big auto took me to headquarters, where I was presented to the Emperor and the Crown Prince, the Kaiser, to my astonishment, shook my hand and, calling me by name, said:

"'I have heard of your bravery in the last engagement on the front of your regiment. You are a hero and I am happy to be able to award the Iron Cross of the First Class to you.'

"The Crown Prince pinned the decoration to my breast and then all the generals present shook hands with me. After the ceremony I was led to a beautifully set table in a large adjoining room and there I dined with the Kaiser, the Crown Prince and the highest and most famous leaders of our army. It was the proudest day of my life.

"The deed for which I have been decorated was hardly great enough to merit such a reward. During the engagement mentioned by the Emperor a French detachment broke into our position. The Frenchmen were quickly cut off, though, and we captured them after a hand-to-hand fight in which we also lost heavily. Later I discovered that another French detachment had entered our trench a little further north. As our Lieutenant had been wounded I took command of the 25 men that remained of our detachment and started a counter attack. The fight was furious but we succeeded in capturing three French officers and 46 more men.

"When I delivered the prisoners at the headquarters of our regiment I was ordered by the Colonel to carry a communication to the headquarters of the brigade. This was a pretty dangerous job, as I had to cross a section of the battlefield very close to the French trenches. I started out at 10 o'clock in the evening and safely reached my destination, but on my return I was discovered and taken under fire by the enemy.

"Throwing myself on the ground among the hundreds of dead and wounded I kept quiet for a while and then I bandaged a Frenchman who was slowly bleeding to death. When I started to rise cautiously I discovered a French patrol who swiftly approached the spot where I was lying. Of course I had to act quickly. Shouting commands, to deceive the enemy, I fired a dozen shots in quick succession. Two of the Frenchmen fell and the others started to flee, as they believed themselves opposed by superior German forces. After a few shots from my rifle nine men stopped and surrendered, while three others escaped. I made the prisoners hand over their pocket knives, daggers and revolvers and transported them to the headquarters of our regiment, where I arrived at 1 o'clock in the morning. The Colonel was at once notified of my success and arose from his bed to congratulate me."

WHAT CAUSES COLDS?

This question is asked every day. A cold is really a fever, not always caused by the weather but often due to disordered blood or lack of important food-elements. In changing seasons fat-foods are essential because they distribute heat by enriching the blood and so render the system better able to withstand the varying elements. This is the important reason why Scott's Emulsion should always be taken for colds, and it does more—builds strength to prevent sickness.

Scott's Emulsion contains Nature's rare strength building fats, so skillfully blended that the blood profits from every drop. It is free from harmful drugs. Sold at drug stores—always get the genuine.

French Aviators Drop Bombs on Sofia and Cause Panic

Considerable Damage to the Bulgarian Capital—Germans Are Concentrating at Monastir

LONDON, JAN. 12.—A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Salonica says a flotilla of French aeroplanes has dropped bombs on Sofia, causing considerable damage and indescribable panic among the inhabitants of the Bulgarian capital.

In the Balkans reports persist that the Germans are concentrating at Monastir preparatory to an attack on Salonica, but the interest in the Macedonia campaign has become secondary to the operations of the Austrians in Montenegro. A determined attack is being made on Mount Lovcen, a Montenegrin stronghold overlooking Cattaro Bay, by the guns of the Austrian fortress at Cattaro and Austrian war ships lying in the Adriatic. The formidable Austrian forces invading Montenegro extend over a wide front from the River Tara in the west to the Ipek district in the east.

It cannot be disguised that this invasion is causing great uneasiness among the Entente Powers, and especially Italy, which sees in its success an end to Italy's dream of dominating the Albanian littoral of the Adriatic. The Italian newspapers, in expressing the opinion that an Austrian success against Montenegro would give the invader an incalculable political, maritime, commercial and strategic advantage, admit the fear that Italy's intervention in the Balkan campaign has come too late.

The present situation in Albania was thus summed up to-day by Lord Robert Cecil, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in the House of Commons:

"I regret to say it is impossible to speak of Albania as an entity at present. In the central area, over which Essad Pacha's authority extends, the relations between the Serbian soldiers and the population have been friendly, and Essad Pacha has rendered to them valuable assistance. The northern tribes, among whom the enemy has conducted a considerable propaganda, are hostile to the Serbians and Montenegrins."

GOATS' MILK FOR COUGH

"Go to the Hills and drink goats' milk" was the prescription given by Hippocrates more than 2000 years ago for coughs, colds and bronchitis, but nowadays our local druggists, McDermid & Jury, and E. L. Payne, have a none-secret constitutional remedy just as certain which can be taken right at home. It is Vinol—composed of the healing, medicinal extractives of cod livers, without oil, peptonate of iron for the blood and the nourishing properties of beef peptone. It goes to the seat of the trouble, removes the cough and cures the cold. Vinol is a very reliable preparation.

Early Fall of Cettinge, the Montenegrin Capital, Forecasted in Despatches—Austrians Occupy Mt. Lowcen, Dominating Roads to Cettinge.

LONDON, Eng., Jan. 12.—Russians have gained thirty miles on the east bank of the Stripa River.

LONDON, Eng., Jan. 12.—The English General at Shorncliffe pronounced the shooting of the Sixth Canadian Howitzer Brigade as the best he had ever seen.

PARIS, France, Jan. 12.—The German onslaught on the Western front proved a big victory for the French.

ROME, Italy, Jan. 12.—The early fall of Cettinje, the Montenegrin Capital, was forcasted in despatches received here to-day, confirming the news that the Austrians have occupied Mt. Lowcen, dominating the roads to Cettinje and less than seven miles away. The military evacuation of King Nicholas' capital began on Sunday, according to advices received here.

ROME, Italy, Jan. 12.—After spending nearly eight months at the front with his troops, King Victor Emmanuel returned home to-day. His arrival was entirely unexpected.

GERMANS ARE WEARING OUT, SAYS FRENCH COMMANDER.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—"Germany is beginning to wear out," General Joffre, Commander-in-Chief of the French military forces, is quoted as saying. He added:

"That fact is certain; but, of course, it does not mean that she is already worn out, and we still have a great effort to make. But with the admirable endurance of our army and the perseverance of the whole French nation and of our Allies we are sure of a final triumph."

The views of the French Commander-in-Chief are given in a despatch to the Matin, from Athens, which says that the Patrie prints a statement made by General Joffre to Mr. Pougeres, director of the French school at Athens.

"We have every reason to be sure of final victory," General Joffre said. "We are beginning to get proofs which show beyond all doubt that German power is waning.

"The signs are such as cannot be mistaken by competent persons. These signs and proofs relate more particularly to the morale of the German army. The quality and material condition of the troops permit us to conclude that our enemy is now entering upon a period of exhaustion."

Year 1915 Saw Many Upsets in Athletic World

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Old Man Time to-day turned down the most scrambled sport page in many a year. Collisions of the Dope with cold, hard facts, left the unartistic sheet in crazy disorder. It was a record of the dethronement of champion whose sway had seemed almost unchallenged.

Beginning the 1916 ledger, the bearded old guy with the primitive harvester and egg-boiling meter faced the prospect of another cataclymic cycle. More champions were on the threshold of the little Green Door.

Jess Williard's dethronement of Jack Johnson loomed in largest type on the record for 1915. The Galveston roustabout flopped in 26 rounds, a beaten, helpless black man, defeated by wine, women and Williard. Willard an unpopular champion, has yet to defend his title, but his supremacy is not regarded as greatly threatened, more because the heavyweight crop lacks quality than because he possesses merit.

Next on the page was the football record, a chronicle of upsets. Yale for the first time in years failed to make a single position on Walter Camp's all-American team, and that fact itself was an indication of the Blue's collapse. Little colleges, on the other hand, made fame and capital for themselves by trouncing the big boys. Harvard was saved by defeating Yale, but the accomplishment was not one to boast of.

Baseball stepped in and for a share of attention of the strength of some volcano stuff in the majors, The Hitle fellows attracted attention only by going to the wall under stress of the baseball war, but Connie Mack's Athletics were a hopeless wreck and the giants of John McGraw flopped about in the ruck with never a chance to hear the coveted embroidery flapping in the breeze of Coogan's precipice. Pat Moran ascended Stallings' pinnacle, goading his Phils to victory with gentle methods which attracted attention. The Red Sox breezed into the American league race and trounced the Phils, Alexander and all, in easy fashion.

Freddie Welsh, Johnny Kilbane and Kid Williams, the safety first champions retained their titles by dodging the decision goes. True, Williams fought Frankie Burns a 20-round canter at New Orleans not long ago and got a draw, but then Burns is (a pretty old man and certainly not so dangerous as Johnny Ertle, who claims a 50 per cent. interest in Williams' crown. Welsh at last is signed to meet Charlie White, chosen by a country-wide poll as his most formidable contender; but they are dickering now for the United

Girl Strikers Turn On Police; Bombard Windows of Factory

Cigar Factory in Poughkeepsie Scene of Disorderly Acts This Morning When Employees Demand Higher Wages.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Jan. 11.—More than 100 girls, striking for higher wages, gathered before the cigar factory of Samuel I. Davis and company, in Main street here, and bombarded the windows with icicles and missiles of a varied nature. One rolling pin was found after three of the strikers were arrested.

The girls taken into custody were Elizabeth Rosta, aged 24, Elizabeth Potoky, 20 and Mary Such, 28. They were charged with disorderly conduct and each fined $5.

The girls were employed at rolling cigars. Their walkout, when refused five cents more per hundred cigars, threatens to throw 400 others out of jobs as female help is scarce here. The Samuel I. Davis Company has large factories in New York city. Thus far no girls of American parentage appear to have joined the strikers. The factory building is under constant police guard. A mass meeting of the strikers will be held in a downtown hall this afternoon.

When the police attempted to check the attack upon the cigar factory this morning as the workers filed into the building, the girls turned upon the officers and there were indications of a serious disturbance. But the arrival of police reinforcements soon discouraged the disturbers. There appeared to be no leaders in the strike.

NEGRO MAKES PLEA IN MOHR MURDER

Chauffeur May Be Used as Witness for Prosecution.

PROVIDNCE, R.I., Jan. 11. — A plea of nolo contendre to the charge of manslaughter was entered in the Superior Court by George W. Healis, who was a chaffeur of the automobile in which Dr. C. Franklin Mohr was riding when he was shot and killed in Berrington on 31st August, 1915.

Healis and two other negroes, Cecil Victor Brown and Henry Speelman, are alleged to have entered into a plot to kill Dr. Mohr at the instigation of his wife, Elizabeth F. Mohr All the negroes have been under indictment accused of the killing, while Mrs. Mohr is accused of being an accessory.

The trial of all the defendants has been set for this week. It is understood that as a result of the action of Healis to-day he may be used as a witness by the prosecution. His sentence was deferred.

Dr. Mohr was on his way from this city to his Newport residence at the time he was shot. While passing through a dark stretch of woods the chauffeur stopped the car to make some repairs and five bullets were fired from the side of the road. Both Dr. Mohr and his secretary, Miss Emily G. Burger, who was his companion on the rear seat of the car, were wounded. Dr. Mohr died twelve hours later without regaining consciousness. Miss Burger recovered.

Negroes' stories Conflict.

Conflicting stories of the killing of Dr. C. Franklin Mohr and the wounding of Miss Emily G. Burger have been told to the police by Healis and the other two negroes under indictment accused of the murder. After first denying knowledge of the assassins, Healis confessed that Mrs. Mohr had hired him and the two other negroes to kill Dr. Mohr. Mrs. Mohr was almost insanely jealous, he said, and threatened to kill her husband herself if she could not get them to do it.

Brown and Speelman were said by the police to have corroborated Healis' confession. Later, all three recanted and insisted that they were innocent. Two weeks later Healis again accused Mrs. Mohr of having inspired the crime. She promised to pay him and Brown $2,000 each and Speelman $1,500, he said.

Mrs. Mohr, who had been arrested three days after the shooting, was indicted last fall. With the three negroes she pleaded not guilty and always has insisted that the story of Healis was false.

Mrs. Mohr had long been at odds with her husband and had started an action for divorce against him. A letter in the possession of the police, said to have been written by Mrs. Mohr to a brother-in-law of Miss Burger, threatened the latter with death if she ever entered her house.

OUR SERIAL STORY

"I'm only saying," Morris hastened to explain, extending an apologetic palm, "I mean business dis time."

The schatchen's face lighted up immediately.

"Business," he echoed; dot's something else again."

He paused and knitted his brows in deep reflection. Mentally he passed in review all the young ladies of his clientele.

"Yah!" he ejaculated in sudden remembrance, "I got something extra A number von. You know Adelstein, der cloakmaker?"

"Nie."

"You know his daughter Beckie?"

"Big?" Morris inquired, his hand raised some six feet from the floor.

Freedman nodded.

"Fat?" Morris continued, making an extended gesture with both arms as though preparing to embrace a hogshead.

Freedman nodded again, more vigorously.

"Go on," said Morris encouragingly.

The schatchen leaned forward as though to impart a fact of great secrecy.

"One tousand dollars goes mit her," he whispered and then drew back the better to note the effect of his words.

Morris elevated his eyebrows and shrugged superciliously.

"I vant to tell you something, Meestaire Freedman," he announced. "I am a property owner and a business man, ain't it?"

Mr. Freedman nodded once more.

"Und a good Jew, ain't it?"

Again the schatchen assented.

"Den vat's der use of talking foolishness?" Morris cried in tones of finality. "It must pos-i-tive-ly be one thousand five hundred!"

Mr. Freedman seized his hat in silence with the air of a man who, having seen his good offices ruthlessly rejected, washes his hands of the entire matter. He rose to his feet and made a stately progress for the street door and was almost across the threshold when Morris rushed forward.

"Vait a minute!" he cried excitedly and laid a restraining hand on the schatchen's arm.

Mr. Freedman was readily persuaded to reseat himself, and before he finally departed a meeting between Morris and his prospective father-in-law was arranged for the following Friday night at the synagogue on Norfolk street.

At precisely noon on the Friday in question Annibale left his store clad in all his Sunday finery, with his guitar case under one arm and bearing a valise in his bediamonded right hand. He entered his neighbor's tailor shop.

"I just come for make-a hands with you," he announced to Ginsburg. "I like for ask-a you a favor."

"Nie," Morris replied, "vat's der matter? You ain't sick?"

Annibale evaded the question.

"I like for ask-a you," he continued, "please make a writing on this card, just for some one is-a dead. I want for put on my door."

Morris took the card and wrote in a large scrawl, "Closed For a Death."

"Dot's a misfortune," he murmured in sympathetic accents. He shook Annibale's proffered hand. "Might your fader is dead?" he inquired.

Annibale nodded gloomily.

"Anyhow," Morris continued, "you open tomorrow again, ain't it?"

"I d'no," Annibale replied; "maybe yes, maybe no."

He affixed the card to his door and after turning the lock made haste down the crowded sidewalk, but not in the direction of Mott street.

The Sabbath evening services at the Norfolk Street synagogue commence in June at 7 o'clock, for as soon as three stars twinkle in the firmament the Sabbath, on rabbinical authority, is held to have duly arrived. Accordingly at a quarter to 7 Morris locked up his store and repaired to his place of worship.

His Sabbath attire, of his own construction, was a modification of the frock coats respectively known as the Prince Albert and London walking suits. A silk hat of ancient vintage completed the costume, and when Morris, secure in the knowledge of his standing as a business man and property owner, caught sight of himself in a plate glass window he felt as though he were already engaged to the rich Miss Beckie Adelstein.

The impression was heightened upon his arrival at the synagogue, for as he entered the boys' choir was midway in the chanting of "Come, My Beloved, to Meet the Bride," the song of Solomon, which is a part of the ritual for the Sabbath eve. Indeed, so persons was the hymn's allusion that he could not forbear to blush, and to cover his embarrassment he bowed and swayed vigorously, as though in the ecstasy of prayer for the rest of the service.

At its conclusion he met Mr. Freedman, who stood in conversation with his proposed father-in-law.

"A number vun," he heard the schatchen murmur, and, applying the flattering term to himself, he commenced to glisten with a gentle moisture of bashfulness.

The schatchen greeted him effusively.

"Meestaire Geensburg," he cried, "dees is Meestaire Adelstein."

"Pleased to meet you," Morris croaked.

"Dot's all right." Mr. Adelstein said airily, "don't mention it."

"Und how is your daughter Beckie?" Morris inquired.

"Thank Gawd!" Mr. Adelstein re-

"One tousand dollars goes mit her," he whispered.

plied plenarily, meaning that the young lady was well. Here the conversation languished until Mr. Freedman jumped into the breech.

"Ain't it a fine weather," he declared. "Ve go home by your vay, Meestaire Geensburg."

He nudged the aspiring son-in-law in the ribs.

"Ain't you deaf and dumb," he hissed sotto voce. "Speech a little something!"

They had proceeded so far as the corner of Ginsburg's street.

"Und how is business?" Mr. Adelstein asked by way of encouragement.

"Business," Morris echoed, "is umbroofen good."

He might as well have omitted the evil dispelling term "umbroofen," for no sooner were the words out of his mouth than a tremendous explosion shook the ground.

"Oi gewoldt!" they exclaimed in chorus. "Vot is dot?"

Morris followed the throng that ran in the direction of his place of business and arrived in time to view Annibale's barber shop and his own tailoring establishment burst into flames.

The Black Hand had carried out their threat in good earnest. Before the fire apparatus appeared both stores were gutted, and the Sabbath meal, with its attendant ceremonies, was forgotten by Adelstein and Freedman, who stayed to view the stubborn progress of the flames. The entire building was involved in the destruction.

"Vell, gentlemen," Mr. Adelstein said at length, "I guess you excuse me. I must go home to my supper. My family vaits for me."

The schatchen turned an anxious face toward his client.

"Ain't you going to ask Meestaire Geensburg as vell?" he whispered.

"Vot!" Mr. Adelstein exclaimed in horrified accents. "I guess not." Obviously he directed the remainder of his sentence at Morris. "My Beckie," he concluded, "ain't for no beggars and bankrupts."

The outraged Ginsburg wheeled around and fixed his quondam prospective father-in-law with a terrible glare.

"Meestaire Adelstein," he replied, "I am a business man and a property owner." He paused for one impressive moment. "Und," he added, with telling emphasis, "mein store is insured for $2,000."

"Hear, oh, children!" the schatchen cried. "Two thousand dollars and a total loss!"

The sneer on Adelstein's face merged at once into a conciliating smile.

"Nie, nie," he said meltingly. "I vas only joking."

He essayed to pinch Morris' cheek as playful evidence of affection, but the latter drew back coldly.

"Familiarities!" he exclaimed. "Joke with him"—he indicated the despairing schatchen—"joke with somebody else, but not with me." Then came the parting shot: "You tink I vould marry your daughter Beckie now? No, sir, not if her hair hung mit diamonds!"

A year later Mr. Morris Ginsburg, merchant tailor of Nassau street and owner of an undivided four-fifteenth interest in two east side tenements, entered a downtown barbershop. Gone were the rugged whiskers of yesteryear, and a well trimmed mustache adorned his upper lip, for such are the transformations worked by prosperity.

"You next, sir," said a familiar voice.

Mr. Ginsburg turned in its direction, and there stood Annibale Lamonte, a trifle plumper, perhaps, but with undeniably the same diamond—a fine canary colored stone, named flawless—decorating his right hand. The recognition was mutual.

"Ah!" Annibale exclaimed. "Ha What you think that? I am always for wonder what you goin' do since dose Black Hand make-a your store on fire."

Ginsburg climbed into the chair.

"I was insured," he said with simple dignity.

"I guess you so-reech," Annibale commented as he lathered his old neighbor's chin. "You get shaves every day."

"Not every day," Morris corrected, "every other day."

"Ha!" Annibale replied, "what you wife say for dat?"

"Vife!" Morris echoed. "Vy, I ain't got no vife!"

"No?" Annibale remarked with a polite rising inflection. "Well, that's all right. Some think is just fo nice he got a wife and some think is not. Myself, I got nice 'Merican wife."

"Money is da best-a frand."

The hot towel prevented any comment from Ginsberg.

"Yessir," Annibale continued, "I got nice-a wife and nice-a stylish flat. I tell you, nice-a stylish furnish."

Morris emerged from the towel's damp embrace.

"Ain't you insured?" he asked.

"You bet my life," Annibale replied earnestly and continued the operation of brushing Ginsburg's curly hair in thoughtful silence. He pocketed with a grateful murmur the dime which Morris handed to him, and it tinkled as it fell into a pile of loose change. "I just for like to tell you something-a," he said.

"Go ahead," Morris replied.

"Frands is frands, and good-a frands is frands, too, ha? Bat," he concluded with a twinkle in his Sicilian black eyes, "money is da best-a frand, you bat my life."

And Morris indorsed the quotation with a solemn nod.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural colour and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle for about 50 cents. Everybody uses this old, famous recipe, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

THE EXECUTION OF PONTON

OSINING, N. Y., Jan. 11.—Antonio Ponton, the Porto Rican student was put to death in the electric chair for the murder of Miss Bessie Kromer, a Schenectady, N. Y., school teacher, with whom he was infatuated. Three shocks were administered before Ponton was pronounced dead.

The condemned man walked to the electric chair unsupported and the prison officials said the execution was effected without a hitch. Warden Kirchwey, who is opposed to the death penalty, was not present. He excluded all newspapermen from the execution chamber, taking the position that, as he was opposed to capital punishment, he did not care to advertise it any more than was necessary.

Was Troubled With BOILS
ALL OVER HIS BODY.

When the blood becomes impure the first symptoms manifesting themselves are a breaking out on some part of the body of various sorts of bad blood troubles, such as boils, pimples, abscesses, ulcers, etc.

How many times have you met a friend with a handkerchief tied around his neck, and have asked him; "What is the matter with you?" "Oh! I have a boil on the back of my neck; I guess I will have to take something for my blood."

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters, and the speediest and most thorough method of expelling all the useless and corrupt matter from the blood is to use this old and well tried remedy that has been on the market for the past forty years.

Mr. W. E. Cacherill, Golden, B.C., writes: "I was troubled with boils all over my body, and my blood was very bad. I tried all kinds of medicines and salves, but got no relief. I had to quit work, as I could not stoop to do anything. My boss told me to use Burdock Blood Bitters, after I had told him I had tried nearly everything else. I got one bottle of B.B.B., and before I had finished it the boils were all gone. It is the best blood cleanser I have ever taken. I have told several others who were suffering with boils, and they all say it is great medicine. I am forty-seven years of age, but I feel like sixteen since I got rid of the boils."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

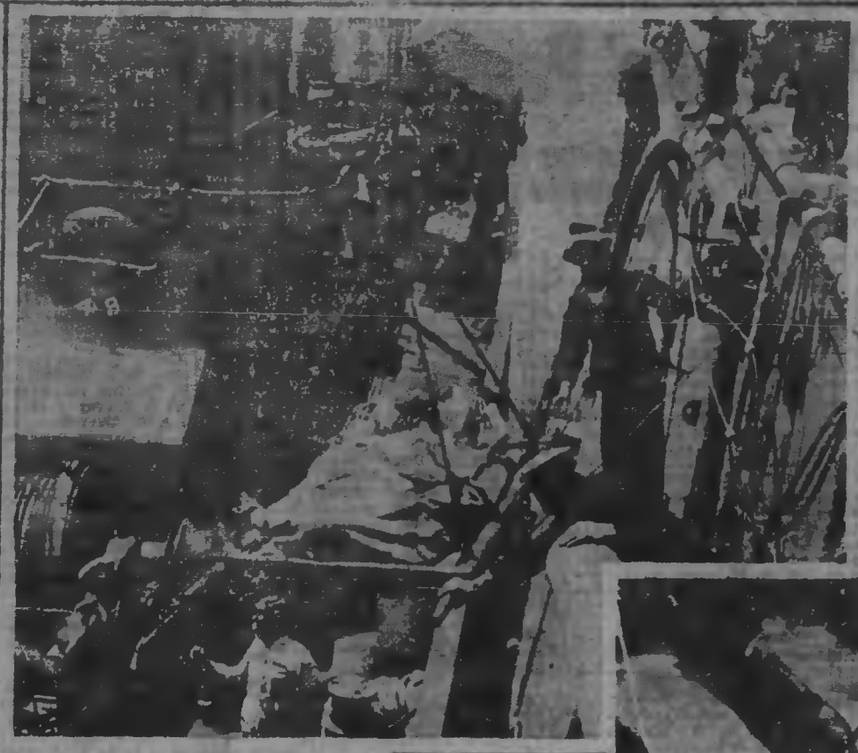
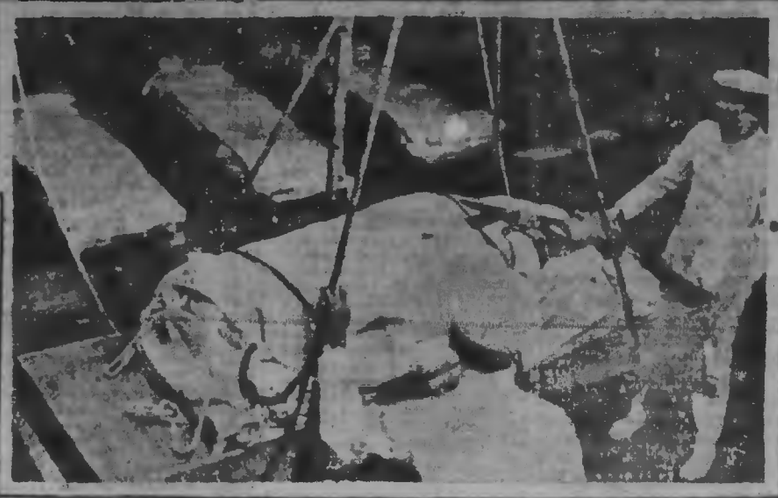
...ing interest

12—"It was a treat to get a draught of water on board the tugboat I was on. An obliging fellow comes up, and he says, 'Here you are, matey,' and I drank just as much as he'd let me. They put blankets over me."
[From the Sphere.]



15—"Soon the rest of us were hoisted aboard a regular hospital ship, with dandy officers in white directing the show. I was dangled from a crane like the rest, and then down I went below."
[From the Sphere.]

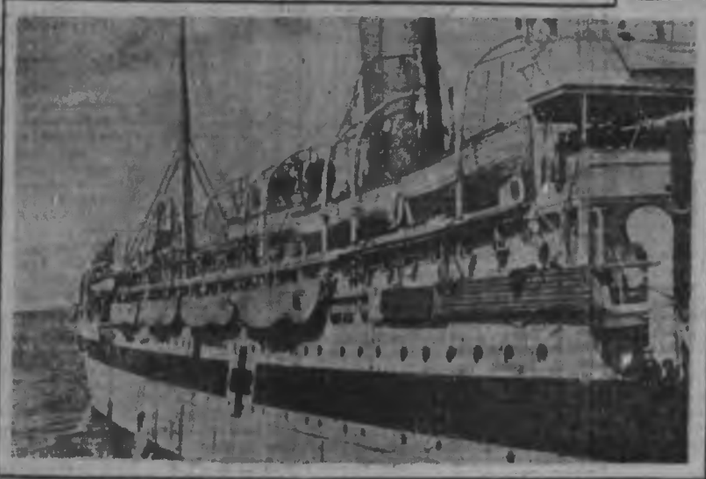


16—"It was a fine sight, I can tell you, to see the neat, clean cots waiting for you in the shade, and I wasn't sorry when the Sisters got me into one. It was fine, so tidy everything was."
[From the Sphere.]

14—"Some lucky fellows were taken aboard a battle ship, and their troubles were soon at an end. Bound to get a lot of special attention and all that kind of thing, they were slung aloft in a swell cable arrangement and kept from humping the sides by dozens of the boys in blue."
[From the Sphere.]

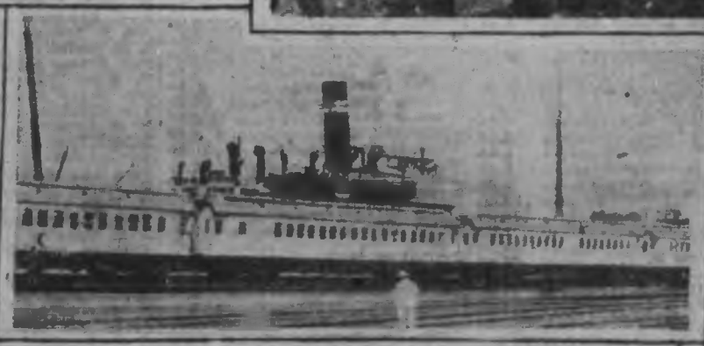
13—"A lot of fellows were put on the big lighters and towed out to the hospital ships. Sitters stood or sat round the edge, while the stretcher cases were laid out in rows, toes to toes. Then we got alongside."
[From the Sphere.]

19—"The sea air did us all a world of good, and a lot of fellows who at first couldn't stand were soon up and about on crutches, and quite a number stood up to face the camera."
[From the Sphere.]



17—"It wasn't long before the ship—she was the Devanha—was off and away. She was a beautiful white ship, and it was a treat to be on her. The nurses were busy, I can tell you, straightening us all out."
[From the Sphere.]

20—"The nurses were At, and they never seemed to give you more twists than they could help."
[From the Sphere.]



21—"Well, one morning I awoke to find the ship quite quiet. We were alongside the quay. Some of the fellows were already ashore, and others were streaming down the gangway. And a much happier lot we all were, I can tell you, than when we hopped on board on one foot from the dear old Dardanelles. It takes some navigation to get down a gangway if your heel gives you a jump every time you think of it."
[From the Sphere.]

22—"They backed a Red Crescent train alongside by the time I was ready with the other 'cots.' I was still too dizzy to stand by myself, but with the help of a couple of pals I got along all right."
[From the Sphere.]

18—"A great many of the fellows sat about on deck, some on mattresses and others just where they pleased. At first they just sat about. They could see everything, but Sister used to tell me a lot."
[From the Sphere.]

23—"We were all told off to various carriages. Some fellows only wanted a helping hand; others had to be carried to the benches and cots on the train. That was all white, like the steamer."
[From the Sphere.]

24—"Finally we fetched up among wide, sandy stretches on one side and some buildings away in front of us on the other. Some white ambulances—fairly blazing they were—were waiting for us, and here I am writing in the —— ward of the hospital Mellopolis."
[From the Sphere.]

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Shirley's Surprise.

By Martha Cobb Sanford.

Shirley was superintending the annual charity bazaar and putting her whole incautious, magnanimous soul into the task, but that was Shirley every time.

And she had what she termed a "perfectly, splendidly unique" idea for this particular bazaar. As soon as she thought of it she called up each of the other girls on the committee by telephone to tell them about it.

"Perfectly impossible," one said.

"Too much work," complained another.

"Fine," agreed a third, "and just like you, Shirley. But you'll have to put it through yourself. All the rest of us have more than we can do now."

And so, a bit chagrined, but quite undaunted, Shirley proceeded "to put it through."

She had just executed her first victorious stroke when she came face to face with Philip Evans—that is, their machines met before a smart sporting goods establishment.

"You look as fresh as a morning glory, Shirley," was Philip's greeting as he sprang from his car and helped Shirley from hers. "How do you do it—with a whole charity bazaar on your hands?"

"Just come in her with me a minute, Philip, and I'll show you," Shirley answered, laughing.

Once inside the shop, Shirley asked for the proprietor. No one else would do, she said. When that pompous gentleman saw who it was demanding his exclusive personal attention his expression of annoyance underwent an instantaneous metamorphosis.

To Philip's intense amusement he fairly beamed upon Shirley. But, then, every one beamed upon Shirley, for that matter, and Shirley beamed upon every one in return, or possibly it was just the other way round.

"I'VE ALREADY BOUGHT THIS ONE."

"You see, Mr. Brown, we're going to have a charity bazaar," she began, smiling so captivatingly as she did so that her victim quite overlooked the fatality of the announcement. "And you have such perfectly charming and unusual things here that I knew you would be delighted to give us just one or two small articles to help us out." Mr. Brown managed to tuck an acquiescent smile in edgewise as Shirley, seating herself in a reclining bamboo porch chair, announced: "Yes, we'd like this, I'm sure. It's delightfully comfortable. And, oh, that lovely tan Gloucester hammock! We must have that. Come over here and try it with me, Philip."

Philip obeyed without a moment's hesitation; although conscious that the eyes of several spruce young clerks were watching himself and Shirley as they sat like two children swinging side by side.

"And that will be all, Mr. Brown," Shirley announced munificently, jumping out on the fly, as it were, "just that chair and this hammock. You see, I've let you off very easy. I can't tell you exactly what we want them for. That's a secret, but it will be a splendid advertisement, and if they aren't sold, why, we'll send them back to you."

Mr. Brown, with many smiles and a sweeping bow, acknowledged himself pleased and honored to be of service.

"And I haven't asked you to buy a single ticket, Mr. Brown," Shirley reminded him generously.

Mr. Brown immediately put his hand into his pocket.

"No, thank you just as much," declined Shirley prettily; "but, you see, Mrs. Brown bought half a dozen yesterday."

"Shirley," Philip remonstrated soberly when they were on the sidewalk, "haven't you any conscience whatever?" But at Shirley's expression of absolute incomprehension Philip burst out laughing. "What are you going to do with the things anyway?" he asked, helping her into her automobile.

"That's my surprise," Shirley answered. "You'll see when you come to the bazaar. By the way, how many tickets do you want?"

Philip opened his billfold and slowly drew out six.

"Won't these be sufficient to let me in?" he asked teasingly.

"Where did you get them, Philip?" flashed Shirley.

"Oh, from two or three irresistible sources," he answered indifferently.

"Well, here are six more," Shirley announced defiantly. "I saved them on purpose for you, Philip, so you'll have to take them. Now, you mustn't detain me a minute longer. I've got loads of other places to go to. See you at the bazaar."

"But I can't call before"— began Philip, abruptly tearing in two several small pieces of blue cardboard.

"No, you can't," interrupted Shirley, laughing. "I'm too busy. If you need any more tickets, Philip, let me know. Goodby."

The bazaar opened with a blaze of social glory and continued its triumphant career for one entire week.

The center of attraction was "Shirley Burnett's little portable house," as it came to be called before the bazaar was half over. There it stood at one end of the long hall, immaculate and dainty in its coat of white and yellow, defying any one to find fault with it and inviting every one to come in—for the small price of 5 cents.

Every one wanted to go in and remain to exclaim over its coziness. Not a corner of it was left unexplored from the little living room with its artistic wicker furnishings to the diminutive kitchen with its miniature cook stove and shining rows of brand new pans and kettles.

And nearly every one lingered long enough to have tea, which Shirley served out on the porch with just as gracious hospitality as if she weren't charging the exorbitant sum of 15 cents a cup for it. The little portable house proved a most paying proposition.

And when the very last night of the bazaar it was put up at auction there were spirited bidding and much excitement.

"Four hundred and ninety dollars—four hundred and ninety dollars," called the auctioneer impressively, "for this beautiful little house with all its furnishings complete. Come, gentlemen. Some one make it five hundred. Going, going—five hundred, do I hear? Thank you, sir. Gone at five hundred to the gentleman over there on my right. Will he please step forward and give his name?"

A SUFFERER FROM KIDNEY TROUBLE
FOR TWO YEARS.

When the kidneys get ill the back gives out. But the back is not to blame. The ache comes from the kidneys, which lie under the small of the back.

Therefore, dull pain in the back, or sharp, quick twinges, are warnings of sick kidneys—warnings of kidney trouble.

Plasters and liniments will not cure the bad back, for they cannot reach the kidneys which cause it.

Doan's Kidney Pills reach the kidneys themselves. They are a special kidney and bladder medicine. They heal the diseased surface of the kidneys and bladder, and help them to act freely and naturally.

Miss Mary A. Northrop, Cole's Island, N.B., writes: "I have been a sufferer from kidney trouble for two years. I tried quite a number of remedies, but they did me no good. My mother got me a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, and they did me so much good that I got the second one, and when I had taken that I was completely cured."

Doan's Kidney Pills, are the original kidney pills. See that our trade mark, "The Maple Leaf," is on every box. Price, 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

HUSBAND OBJECTS TO OPERATION

Wife Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Des Moines, Iowa.—"Four years ago I was very sick and my life was nearly spent. The doctors stated that I would never get well without an operation and that without it I would not live one year. My husband objected to any operation and got me some of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it and commenced to get better and am now well, am stout and able to do my own housework. I can recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who is sick and run down as a wonderful strength and health restorer. My husband says I would have been in my grave ere this if it had not been for your Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. BLANCHE JEFFERSON, 703 Lyon St., Des Moines, Iowa.

Before submitting to a surgical operation it is wise to try to build up the female system and cure its derangements with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; it has saved many women from surgical operations.

Throw Away Your Eye-Glasses!

A Free Prescription

You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye-strain or other eye-weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing, say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read anything without glasses, and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy wither without glasses but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear! I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto. Fill a two ounce bottle with warm water, drop in one Bon-Opto tablet and allow to dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time. The Valmas Drug Co., of Toronto, will fill the above prescription by mail if your druggist cannot.

SAYS U. S. WOULD RESIST.

If Canada Were Invaded, 5,000,000 Americans Would Rise to Arms.

"If Canada is ever threatened with invasion, you will find 5,000,000 of an army from the United States fighting shoulder to shoulder with you to resist the invasion," was the closing sentence of an address delivered by President Bowen of the International Union of Bricklayers, Masons, and Plasterers, at the opening ceremonies of their convention in the Technical School, Toronto, yesterday.

"If the time ever comes that they fly the red flag, you will find the trades unions lined up to fight it to the finish," said Mr. Bowen.

Mr. James Simpson represented the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, and outlined some of the work of the congress in the interests of the wage-earners of Canada. His sentiments expressing the bond of union between the workers in the United States and Canada, and the determination to strengthen that bond, struck a responsive note and were loudly applauded.

Misery in Back, Headache and Pain in Limbs.

Dear Mr. Editor—For more than a year I suffered with misery in the back, dull headache, pain in the limbs, was somewhat constipated and slept poorly at night until I was about ready to collapse. Seeing an account of the wonderful qualities of "Anuric," prepared by Doctor Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., I sent for a box, and before using the whole box I felt and still feel improved. My sleep is refreshing, misery reduced, and life is not the drag it was before. I most cheerfully recommend this remedy to sufferers from like ailments.

Yours truly, W. A. ROBERTS.

NOTE: You've all undoubtedly heard of the famous Dr. Pierce and his well-known medicines. Well, this prescription is one that has been successfully used for many years by the physicians and specialists of Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for kidney complaints, and diseases arising from disorders of the kidneys and bladder, such as backache, weak back, rheumatism, dropsy, congestion of the kidneys, inflammation of the bladder, scalding urine, and urinary troubles.

Up to this time, "Anuric" has not been on sale to the public, but by the persuasion of many patients and the increased demand for this wonderful healing Tablet, Dr. Pierce has finally decided to put it into the drug stores of this country within immediate reach of all sufferers.

I know of one or two leading druggists in town who have managed to procure a supply of "Anuric" for their anxious customers in and around this locality. If not obtainable send one dime by mail to Dr. Pierce for trial package or 50 cents for full treatment.

BURLY GERMANS SENT HOME

About one hundred Hun soldiers in uniform, burly, well-fed, muscular men, left Fenchurch Street Station, London, recently, on their way to Tilbury, Flushing, and Germany. They were being sent back to their native land in exchange for captured British soldiers.

There was some consternation on the crowded platform, says the Daily Express, when this fact was realized. The thing was hardly credible. Anyone who has seen British soldiers returning from Germany as exchanged prisoners knows that they are half-starved, thinly clad, and generally helpless cripples.

The German soldiers this beneficent country returned were plentifully and warmly clad and soundly shod. There was a ruddiness in their cheeks betokening English roast beef and vegetables and other good food. Some of the men were smoking cigars, others cigarettes. All were in the prime of vigorous manhood.

"Perfectly disgraceful," was the comment of bystanders as the Germans marched between armed guards to the train. "Germany would not send any of our fighting men back—only starved and limbless men."

A sergeant in the Royal Flying Corps, fresh from the Front on leave, watched silently the procession of well-clad beef-fed Huns.

"I can scarcely believe my own eyes," he said as they entered the train. "I suppose when I go back to the Front on Saturday I shall see those chaps again.

"I shall tell the fellows at the Front about this, and — well, they won't half swear at the way things are being done here."

Shortly afterwards about 150 civilian British prisoners arrived at the station from Ruhleben, in Germany. They, too, had been exchanged for healthy civilian Germans sent from this country. Many of the returned Britons were poorly clothed and their pinched faces and sunken eyes told a sad tale of prolonged hunger and hardship.

Treatment in Germany.

"Things are a bit better than they were, but they are still very bad," said one of the number. Mr. Albert Charles Rothchild, an electrical engineer, said: "The sanitary arrangements are disgraceful. The food is very scanty, and at times so foul as to be uneatable.

"We had to sleep in stables with leaking roofs, and our blankets and mattresses were frequently soaked with rain. There were not even any washing bowls, except those provided out of the prisoners' own money. If you could not afford to buy one, then you had to go without.

"We had meat three times a week, but in such insufficient quantities that you could hardly see any in the stew. Fish once a week—but as a rule it was so rank that it could not be eaten.

"The five shillings a week which the British Government allows to each prisoner buys scarcely anything, as the food is so dear, and the military authorities make 7½ per cent. profit on everything they sell to us, even medicine. We have not had butter or margarine for three months, and eggs—not new-laid—are threepence each (six cents).

"The mattresses are stuffed with shavings, and mine had not been renewed for seven months, and was consequently full of dirt and dust.

"I was not able to learn much about the internal conditions of Germany, but I do know that the people cannot get butter, margarine, or condensed milk."

One of the returned British prisoners obtained a glimpse of Berlin on Sunday, when he was allowed out under guard to obtain a passport. He saw very few men, but many cripples and widows, and food seemed to be very scarce.

All poultry, whether they are ducks, fowls, turkeys or geese, must be given a good supply of fresh vegetables every day. If green food is withheld from fowls their feathers often assume a dry and withered appearance, and it may lead to feather eating. If this happens you will wish you had given them green food.

HUN CAPTIVES WERE SHOT

British Officer Says Germans Fired Reversed Bullets and Daily Shelled Wounded Men

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—In reprisal for the Germans' shooting of reversed bullets — which inflict frightful wounds—a British officer, American by birth and a Princeton man, stood up twenty-four German prisoners in a row and with his own hand shot them dead, one after another.

George Harvey, writing from London on "England To-day," in the North American Review, repeats the story of the officer told it while in London on six months' sick leave.

"You know, sir, I love my Tommies," said the officer; "by God, I love 'em, and that's all there is to it; and it about breaks my heart to have to leave 'em to take in a new battery. Well, anyhow, it was a beastly little scrimmage at best, but what do you suppose those scoundrels did? Why, God damn 'em—they—but say, did you ever see a body mangled by reversed bullets? No? Well, don't; that's all I have to say.

"Seven of my boys went in a heap and we were in a bad way when some fresh lads came up and gave 'em the steel. When it was over we had 96 white feathers on our hands quite ready to slip over to nice, comfortable quarters around here and receive boquets and chewing gum from Lord Haldane's friends. And, mind you, they were my prisoners.

Caught Red-Handed.

"We found the reversed bullets in their guns all right, remember that. Well, I took one glance at that sickening mass at my feet and looked into the eyes of my boys, and they looked into mine. I didn't want to get them into trouble, and my chances were better than theirs, anyway.

"All I had given do was to stand those 24 up in a row, and then, one after another and without any particular hurry, I dropped every man in his tracks dead as a door nail. Oh, it's war alright. I must say," he added reflectively, "they took it very well."

"But say, there is one thing you may as well know, and I swear to you I speak for every fellow from America in the bunch," declared the officer.

"There are just two men in the world I should have liked to have in line with those twenty-four. One is the Kaiser and—well, never mind who the other is."

The British War Office forbids such reprisals and the officer was reprimanded. He was reprimanded for another exploit of which he tells.

Blew Them to Hell.

"You can imagine how strict they (the orders) were when I tell you that for four successive days the Germans banged away at our ambulances with particular relish, and we stood there and let them gather up their wounded and never pulled a trigger. But the time came when my pal, as fine a young Englishman as God ever made, got his along with a dozen or more others, but was still able to wave that he was only wounded. Two of my boys were just lifting him into the ambulance when all three were shot to pieces.

"Then I bided my time, which was not long in coming. A score or so of Germans lay waiting in a heap after a futile assault and I got the range for my eighteen-pounder and waited.

"Sure enough, in twenty minutes, or so out came an ambulance with I guess a dozen soldiers as nonchalantly as you please and feeling safe as a clock, as they had every reason to feel. They got their wounded aboard and were just starting back when I blew the whole damned lot to hell and gone. Of course, I got it in the neck at headquarters the next morning, but they let our ambulances alone after that."

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortsand, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it saved a cold which a friend said would soon put

Why Do We Sneeze.

Sneezing may be due to one of a number of causes. A bright light will cause many people to sneeze, as also the pollen of certain plants, while there are few people but will sneeze in the presence of dust. When you have a cold the sneezing is due to an attempt by nature to cure you. She is trying to make you sneeze for the same purpose that she wants you to shiver—to generate heat for warming the blood, and prevent you from taking more cold to help to relieve the cold you have. For one does not sneeze with his nose, but with the entire body. During the act every muscle of the body gives a jump, as it were; it goes into a sort of spasm that warms the entire system. It is worth mentioning here that when sneezing—as a cold symptom—seizes a person a few deep breathing exercises will often avert the attack.

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1916

AN EXAMPLE FOR PETERBOROUGH !

When Simcoe had raised one Battalion, her Townships were not satisfied. They offered an exclusively rural Battalion. The young men flocked to it. In two months to a day the 1153 men were raised and the new Battalion closed. What is the matter with the Townships of Peterborough County? Young man! The British Empire and Canada expect you "to do your Duty." The war will be won or lost this year. We must complete the 93rd this month.

Germans Lost Over 25,000 Men In Trying To Break the Line

General Von Eimen Planned to Bend Back the Whole French Front From Rheims to Verdun But According to German Prisoner the Hun Artillery Failed to Do Its Work Properly and the Result Was Germans Were Cut to Pieces When They Advanced.

THREE CANADIAN DIVISIONS AT FRONT

PARIS, Jan. 12.—The Germans lost more than 25,000 men in the Sunday onslaught against the French lines in Champagne according to Chalones despatches to-day, describing the battle as the bloodiest on the western front since the Allied offensive in September. Great numbers of wounded German prisoners have reached Chalons. They confirm the report that von Eimen planned to break through the French line and bend back the whole front from Rheims to Verdun.

The prisoners complained that the German artillery failed to do its work. Instead of silencing the French batteries the German guns only wrecked portions of the advanced French trenches. Without giving the enemy time to fortify the newly conquered positions, the French swept forward in a dashing charge that regained practically all the lost ground. Hundreds of bodies of German soldiers were found in the first line works and between the first and second line trenches. Among the German prisoners reaching Chalons were a number of soldiers belonging to the Imperial Guard.

OTTAWA, Jan. 12.—It is officially announced that Lieut.-Col. F. W. Hill, who left Canada in command of the First Canadian Battalion from Western Ontario, has been appointed to command the Ninth Infantry Brigade with the rank of Brigadier-General. The Militia Department this morning issued a detailed statement showing the reorganization of the Canadian forces at the front into three divisions commanded by Major Generals Carrie, Turner and Mercer. There are nine brigades each under brigadier generals who have already been made from time to time. Brigadier-General Victor Williams is one of the new ones.

Assistant-Secretary of War Breckenridge told the Committee the plan for the organization of the Continental Army would be more satisfactory to the War Department if enlistment were made compulsory instead of voluntarily.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—The official statement from the War Office this afternoon indicated almost entire cessation of activities in Champagne. In the region of Malincourt the War Office stated the French batteries dispersed groups of enemy sappers.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Amsterdam correspondent of the Daily Express says the Kaiser's condition is grave, and there are rumours everywhere in Germany that he is dying. A despatch from Geneva to the Daily Express says the first operation on the Kaiser's throat was a failure, and a second operation has been ordered. Prince Von Buelow, former German Chancellor, has been summoned suddenly to Berlin from Switzerland.

Captain Rollins, Quartermaster of the 93rd Battalion, will be present to address the meeting.

Writing to one of the Examiner staff from the Isle of Lemnos in the Mediterranean, Lieut. E. V. Frederick of Peterborough, with No. 1 Canadian Stationary Hospital, says: "I am extra well. We have plenty to eat and wear at present. It is quite cold. Snow flurries to-day and ice on the little puddles of water. I have now been on this island about 3 1-2 months and it has been a wonderful experience watching the growth of the place. When we came it was across fields of boulders and burrs. Now we have macadamized roads and railways all over and a khaki population about four times the size of Peterborough. The wind blows one day from Bulgario, bould, and the next from the south, warm, and all of them at a fierce rate. A good part of our time is spent tightening tent ropes and pegs, but we expect to move into wooden huts in a few days. Our patients have been in huts for a couple of months.

All the rest of the Peterborough people here at present are also well, although two of our Peterborough nurses had to return to a more agreeable climate.

Pte. Chas. Lynn, one of the Peterborough members of the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, sends the menu of the first annual Christmas dinner of the regiment held at Bramshott Camp, Liphook, Hants, Eng. It was as follows:

Chief of Police Thompson is in receipt of an interesting letter from Sergeant Edward Downs who since his departure from Peterborough has been at the front since the commencement of the war. Prior to that he was a member of the Peterborough police force. In his letter to Chief Thompson, Sergeant Downs refers to the battle of Loos in which he participated,

Pte. Arthur Searle of the second divisional supply column, writing to Mrs. Bettes, 5 Hunter street east, under date of December 28th, stated that he was in the hospital, but hoped to be out in a few days. He sent a picture post card, showing the ward, in which the Canadian soldier patients were partaking of the Christmas festivities. The ward is prettily decorated with evergreens.

TENDER HAS BEEN AWARDED TO D. COUGHLIN

Board Refuses to Consider the Tender of J. Revoy—Two Cottages Will Be Constructed in Conjunction With the Isolation Hospital at a Cost of $400

QUESTION OF RATES

At a joint meeting of the Property Committee of the City Council and the Board of Health, held yesterday afternoon, the contract for the construction of two cottages in conjunction with the Queen Mary Isolation Hospital was awarded to Daniel Coughlin. His tender was four hundred dollars. It was the intention of the Board to recommend that the tender of J. Revoy be accepted. This was for three hundred and twenty-five dollars. The latter said that a mistake had been made in the estimate for the roofing, and requested an additional forty-two dollars. Mr. G. H. Duncan, chairman of the Board, objected to this procedure, claiming that it was unfair to the rest of the tenderers. He suggested that the contract be awarded to the next lowest tenderer, which in this case was Daniel Coughlin. Both the members of the Board of Health and the Property Committee were of the opinion that once tenders are accepted they should not be reconsidered, and that in any case a marked cheque should accompany all tenders. This is a policy that will be adhered to in the future. It is one that Ald. McIntyre fought for last year. Its adoption should do much to eliminate juggling with tenders.

Scale of Prices.

The question of soliciting a grant from the adjoining townships towards the maintenance of the Isolation Hospital was broached by Ex-Mayor Buller, who is a member of the Board of Health. Sometimes the hospital is kept open for the convenience of one patient. This entails a loss to the city. Out-of-town patients are charged at the rate of one dollar and a half a day, while local patients are charged ten cents a day. One instance occurred last summer where it was necessary to open the hospital for the accommodation of one patient. The cost to the city was in the neighbourhood of ten dollars a day. The Board was inclined to the opinion that the fee should be raised to the individual patient, or, as an alternative, invite the townships to subscribe to the maintenance of the institution. The matter will be taken up at a later date. In the meantime the township clerks will be advised of the Board's intention.

FORMER RESIDENT HURT AT CHATHAM

The Chatham Planet gives the following account of an accident to Wm. Holdaway, a former resident of Peterborough and until a short time ago an employee of the Taylor Woolen Mills:

William Holdaway, an employee of the Taylor Woolen Mills, sustained three broken ribs as a result of nasty fall this morning, when he slipped on the icy sidewalks. Mr. Holdaway was on his way to work at the time and evidently did not notice the bad condition of the sidewalks. He fell with great force, his back striking the corner of the curb.

A stretcher that can be folded and carried in a knapsack has been invented by a Swiss army surgeon.

THE REASON

Our business is growing so rapidly showing a steady increase month after month, is because our work is dependable, our glasses are irreproachable in quality, our prices are absolutely fair, and because we are prompt.

WEDNESDY, JAN. 12, 1916

THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

One word more in the way of a reminder, of the important annual meetini of the Peterborohgh Health Association to-night, in the City Council Chamber. Not only in the way of reminder, but of injunction. The work of the Association transcends in importance of function and object that of any other city organization. Our City Council has to do with the comparatively sordid matter of our money. But the Health Association deals with that without which money is valueless. There can be two opinions upon the value of the public health; no two opinions regarding the splendid part played in the preservation and promotion of the public health by the work of the Association. Under no circumstances can your neighbour do your duty.

RED CROSS WORK.

One of the most important and interesting of formal reports is the monthly report of the Peterborough Red Cross, one of which appears in this issue of the Examiner. This society has become so much a part of our social economy, so settled down unobtrusively to its work, that it attracts less attention. With little sounding of trumpets, with quietly enlisting so many agencies, and quietly pursuing the beneficent tenor of its way, it is only from the monthly reports that we get even a faint idea of the activities and results of the Red Cross work here. With the month's work reduced to half by the holiday season, the record of the half month including the shipment of over 55,000 separate articles for the healing and relief of wounded and sick soldiers, gives us a somewhat intelligent idea of the character and extent of the work done. Our interest in the work of the Red Cross is indicated more persistently, because the necessity of its work will persist. It will be long before the war is over, and the Red Cross can lay aside its work; and the demands of its work will increase, with Peterborough and Canada's increased contributions to the fighting ranks.

A COUNTER-IRRITANT.

If people try to understand the military situation in all its complexity, they will become as mentally mazed as the war situation is complicated. There is much concern in the fluctuating fortunes of arms that revolve around Bagdad. We are not after Bagdad in a spirit of conquest. One of the objects of the Mesopotamia campaign is to keep the Turks busy, where they can do least harm, though sometimes they return the compliment and keep us busy. The more the Turks are kept engaged in these regions the less likely they are to make trouble at the Sues Canal and in Egypt, and present less danger of complicating things in Persia and the furthest East. If the British, which have a well-entrenched camp at Kut-el-Amara, are beset by the Turks in any considerable force, our object is gained, and the Turks, in large numbers, are kept busy, and will be kept busier in avoiding or evading the British forces that are coming up the coast to the relief. It is in the minor theatres that the British successes have been pretty uniform. The Mesopotamia military enterprise is not of a capital character, but something in this war like what a counter-irritant is in medicine.

ONE GERMAN SUCCESS.

We should have respect for German capability of accomplishment when we find the ruling powers able to make the German people believe that Germany and the central allies are in this war in self-defence. That may be the reality in the present stage of the conflict, when the Teutonic forces are fighting with their backs to the wall for self preservation. All hope of conquest is gone, and the only hopeless hope is to save the remains. But there is no room for argument that the present monstrous war is a production of German preparedness and German planning for a full generation. She wanted colonies and she could only get them in the robber way. She could only do this by becoming the dominant power of Europe and the world, by building a navy that would swallow up all other navies, and creating a military force that would be irresistible. All the horrid complications — the Serbian outrage, the ghastly alliance with Turkey, the invasion of Belgium, and all the horrors of the unprecedented war are clearly traced to German intrigue, German initiative. The people have been fooled completely, and one of the greatest triumphs Germany has accomplished so far, is the success she has achieved in fooling her own people into the belief that Germany was forced into this war, in self defence. But the delusion is only temporary. The German people are getting their eyes opened, and their attitude towards the militarists and the war will be greatly influenced by the continuous processes of in-leaking truth of the situation upon the national consciousness.

MILITARY NEWS

Department at an astonishing rate, and it is evident that the country is taking up with enthusiasm the call for a quarter of a million more men.

Among the offers received to-day was one to raise a new overseas battalion in North Bay and district. Several members of the Manitoba Legislature have wired offering to raise new regiments. The offers will be accepted.

Col. Thompson of Winnipeg was in Ottawa yesterday. Hearing that the 43rd Battalion, which has been in training in England, and which was recruited from his Winnipeg regiment was leaving for the front, he left at once for the Old Country, to see his boys.

Offer Four Battalions.

Winnipeg, Jan. 11.—Offers to raise from their consituencies 4 complete battalions for overseas service have been made to the Militia Department by four members of the Manitoba Legislature. Prout, Ross, Hamilton and Sigfusson, representing Kildonan, St. Clements, Elmwood and St. George, respectively.

Ottawa, Jan. 11—The amount of assigned pay or separation allowance now being sent out monthly by the Militia Department to dependents or relatives of the men at the front totals about $2,000,000.

There are some 99,000 names on the list of recipients. The total monthly pay roll of the departments is now something like $6,000,000. Consequently about one-third of the pay earned by the men on active service is assigned to the kin they left behind them.

TORONTO, Jan. 12.—Discussing the government's promise to raise another quarter of a million men for overseas service, the Toronto Star says to-day: "The necessary forces can be raised and no doubt will be raised if the Government not only calls on the country to do it, but leads and assists the country in the doing of it. But there ought to be registration throughout the Dominion of all men of military age. There is need for this registration not only because of the way it will bring home to every eligible man a personal question as to himself, but because by the same registration, full particulars can be secured as to the trades and occupations of all men concerned.

NEW CEMETERIES WITH WINE BOTTLES FOR HEAD STONES

With the French army in Champagne, by mail—Cleaning up a battlefield is a whopping big job. The battle of Champagne begun several months ago and several regiments are still trying to make it presentable.

The battlefield, which will be known in future text books as in many ways unique, is 15 miles long and three miles wide, running east and west. As the French advanced they faced the Germans at its southern edge, their trenches cut in chalk white as curds, being 50 to 200 yards apart.

Two months before their drive the French began to accumulate ammunition, mass artillery, dig trenches, built narrow and standard guage railways; wide, well graded rock and gravel highways and other things of the sort.

September the 22 the French artillery turned loose a hell's fury of shells. A German officer's letter, interrupted by death, said the shelling resembled the collapse of a world. Practically every square yard of this 45 square miles of chalky ground was tossed into the air by explosives. White as a sepulchre it is hard to believe that ever again will man be able to make his home amid these fields.

For three days the French poured melinite and chedite into the Germans' barbed wire entanglements, steel turrets, machine gun, armored trenches, invisible fire coils with cutting edges, centre of resistence, fortified woods and what not.

Food Supply Cut Off.

The Germans, their food supply cut off because supply trains could not approach, huddled at the bottom of their bomb shelters, 20 feet under ground while their trenches were blown to nothing. Some companies lost half their men during the bombardment alone. Underground ammunition stores exploded; shelters were ripped up as though they were roofed with paper instead of yards of stone and earth. The world never saw such shell fire.

At 9.15 a.m. on the 25th the French infantry charged, and at 9.15 the housecleaning began. As the attackers entered what was left of the German first line trenches, the cleanup began with the bayonetting all remaining Germans who offered resistance and making prisoners of those who surrendered. Then the dead were thrown out and the position turned around for a possible counter attack.

The dead Germans were buried in their own trenches. I have heard that 20,000 to 25,000 bodies were thus disposed of, while bodies at the bottom of the caverns, under destroyed bomb shelters and in like places were left in the graves of their own choosing.

Fred Keister Says:

Speaking about a man's missing his life's opportunity, we might mention the fact that a Detroit woman sued her husband for divorce because he would not let her take in washings. As a personal favour we would like to inquire if there be anybody that knows that woman's address?

MORE LIGHT ON THE MOTIVES OF THE GERMAN MILITARISTS

Herr Kurt Eisner has published a pamphlet about the Pan-German Society, which is a remarkable commentary upon the Teutonic cant that Germany is fighting a defensive war. According to Herr Eisner, "the nationalistic Pan-German illusions are merely an idealistic by-product for the delectation of teachers and professors affiliated with the society. The real goal is the acquisition of colonies; and this colonial empire can be obtained only by strengthening Germany's positron as a power in Europe. For this universal military service must be introduced to the utmost limit, and there must be unhindered building of warships, for whose efficiency, in addition, the acquisition of coaling stations and naval bases is indispensable."

Remember, this is an ante-bellum programme. The executive heads of the Pan-German Society are declared to be former Generals and Admirals, with "the co-operation of a staff of intellectuals" whose activities extend everywhere. The latter, having acquired, mostly by foreign travel, certain kinds of knowledge and experience, are welcome to the press as experts whenever there is any question of world politics." He declares that the Pan-Germans, by unflagging energy, have been preparing recent events for years. We suspect that Herr Eisner himself is one of the "intellectuals," but like most German "intellectuals" he talks too much for the good of his country. In the suggestive phraseology of the Bowery boy, he gives the snap away, and with brutal frankness tells the truth in most reckless contradiction of his lords and masters. He says that in the issue of the Pan - German Gazette of January 10, 1914, the question was put: "Are we Chauvinists?" This was answered in the negative, but it was suggestively added: "But Germany needs new territory. And as the English will not tolerate any expansion of the German Empire this follows: If they persist in this attitude, then the great German object is certainly not to be attained without war."

The Agadir incident was both a stimulus and an excuse for aggressive Pan-Germanism, but long before the Serajevo murders, which were the immediate ostensible cause of the war, Eisner makes it evident that an Austrian invasion of the Balkans, and especially Serbia, had been decided upon. Discussing England we find General Freiherr von Gebsattel quoted in April, 1914, as saying: "Nowhere is there a valid excuse for genuine hostility with this newest relation of ours. All we ask is that she shall not cross our path when we seek to acquire a colony which we can colonize with the overflow of our population." This would be comic if it had not such a serious side. The hoisting of the German flag over any colony is a warning to all white men, and especially Germans, to keep away from it. The Teuton is nothing if he is not parasitic. He prefers to go to the country where he can reap where he has not sown, rather than go to a new colony where he will have to do the pioneer work, under the heavy handicap of Prussian officialism and militarism.

The General was good enough to offer England the inestimable boon of German friendship as the price of the English conniving at the theft of colonies ready-made. He said: "should we become allies we should rule this world.—On the other hand, should England go to war with us then her position as a world power will be seriously jeopardized." There it is in a nut-shell, the characteristic German dream of world-power, to be shared at first with England and then who can doubt to give way to Deutschland uber Alles. A beautiful Teutonic dream qualified by symptoms of nightmare. On April 28, 1914, at the meeting of the Pan-German Society at Stuttgart, Professor Count du Moulin-Eckhart, who was evidently in the secrets of the gods, in welcoming the delegates, said: "The fateful day draws near. And even if the twilight of the gods be upon us, let it come in furious battle rather than in lingering sickliness." The inspired Pan-Germans certainly had remarkable prophetic vision, or else were well-posted by the war lords of Berlin.

It is hard to reconcile this prevision with the more recent theories of Teutonic self-defence. The Germans are in the position of the gentleman who, having organized the presentation of a testimonial to himself, is "taken completely by surprise; but nevertheless makes a neat speech." They have got their testimonial, and as with some other testimonials have paid a large share of the cost themselves. How do they like it?

AN APPEAL TO THE REEVES

Peterborough, 12th Jan., 1916

The Reeves of the County of Peterborough:

Sirs,—The Minister of Militia will speak here on Saturday, Jan. 22nd, at 2 p.m., in a final endeavour to complete the recruiting of the 93rd Overseas Battalion, which is the especial battalion offered by the City and County of Peterborough to the great cause of the Allies.

Unless Canada completes her reserves for those of her sons already at the front and provides new battalions for the Belgian campaign the work in that respect already done must necessarily suffer a serious setback. We cannot permit that. Canada must also have until the war is over a large force of trained men for her own protection.

The only method by which the recruiting of battalions can be accomplished within a reasonable time and thus be of use for the purpose intended is by the active personal canvass of the wards of the city and of the concessions and side-lines of the townships.

The canvassing of the Townships must necessarily rest upon their own representatives in the Township Councils. The young men of the rural districts can be properly approached only by their own people.

The magnificent generosity of the rural municipality bodies and the splendid Red Cross work of the ladies of the Townships remains to be supplemented by recruiting.

If we are to make our work effective we must close the 93rd Battalion with its full complement of 1153 men by January 31st. We have at present 600 men.

Will the Rural Districts furnish its share of the remaining 500 by that date? Recruiting has halted. A personal canvass can alone start it going again fast enough to attain the objective.

Will the reeves of the township take this matter up? On behalf of the various organizations engaged in the work I submit this most urgent request for active approval and cooperation. It is now or never. In Canada, as in Britain, the last call for recruits is being sounded.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM

London Times: The King Emperor has paid a tribute to the memory of Jemedar Muhammed Khan of the 26th (King George's Own) Light Cavalry, who, when fighting five Arabs single-handed near Aden on October 7, killed three and disabled a fourth before he himself fell.

In a telegram to the Commanding Officer of the regiment his Majesty says he has received with much regret the news of the death of the Jemedar, whom he remembers seeing at the Delhi Durbar, when he won the gold medal as the best man-at-arms. The message adds that "the King-Emperor much deplores the loss which the regiment have sustained by the death of this gallant officer."

The Jemdar had been recommended for the Indian Order of Merit.

Two hundred and ten days were required to make the voyage.

SUES COLLEGE FOR DRINKS SOLD MAN ON ITS PROPERTY

Drunkard's Wife Asks $30,000 Damages After Husband Goes Insane.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—The University of Chicago has been made joint defendant in a suit for $30,000 because a man is alleged to have been driven insane by excessive drinking in a saloon on property belonging to the school. The other defendant is the Tacoma Title and Trust Company, joint owners with the university of the Tacoma Building, northwest corner of Madison and La Salle streets.

The university for many years has led the fight to oust the saloons in Chicago, whose income was in excess of $5,000 a year, ruined his health, business and reason by drinking in the saloon of Charles Grand is charged by his wife, Eleanor A. Winchell. Grand is a tenant of the Tacoma Building.

On the plea that she was deprived of her husband's income, suffered severe mental anguish and was compelled to find employment to care for the husband when he had spent all his money in the Grand saloon, Mrs. Winchell is asking damages.

New Home Treatment For Banishing Hairs

(Beauty Topics)

With the aid of a delatone paste, it is an easy matter for any woman to remove every trace of hair or fuzz from face, neck and arms. Enough of of the powdered delatone and water is mixed into a thick paste and spread on the hairy surface for about 2 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed. This completely removes the hair, but to avoid disappointment, get the delatone in an original package.

There are about 10,000,000 farmers in the United States. They constitute 10 per cent. of the entire population. The value of their annual products is approximately $10,000,00 or $1,000 for each farmer. The liquor industry purchases every year about $100,000,000 worth of produce from the farmer. Therefore the liquor industry consumes just one per cent. of all that the farmer produces; that is, $10 for each farmer in the United States.

Ottawa Priest Appeals to Catholic Societies of Men To Assist in Recruiting

OTTAWA, Jan. 10.—Fortifying his remarks with Catholic theology and the Scriptures, Rev. Dr. O'Gorman uttered a searching call for Empire service in Blessed Sacrement Church yesterday. It was the second recruiting sermon preached by Dr. O'Gorman within a week and his analysis of the moral duty of young unmarried men to eqlist and ringing call to Catholics to join the colours constituted one of the most compelling recruiting appeals heard in the Capital since the beginning of the war.

After applying the test of Catholic principles to show that the duty of enlisting in defence of one's country is sanctified and reinforced by religion and maintaining that every able-bodied unmarried Canadian was bound in conscience to volunteer his services, Dr. O'Gorman sounded this ringing call to his people.

Catholics of Canada, your Catholicity is now being tested by the white fire of sacrifice. Now is the time to act. When this war is over, it will be idle to relate what Catholic Canadians did in the war of 1914. The question will be: What did Catholic Canadians do in the war of 1914? A census will be taken of the shirkers of Canada. Every Catholic in that number will be a scandal to the church. It will not suffice that we shall have done as well as our non-Catholic neighbours. We, the successors of the men whose heroism in the face of barbarous warriors first sanctified the soil of Ontario, we, the French sons of Crusaders, and we, the Irish and Scottish sons of Penal Law martyrs, we Catholics who are the heirs of nineteen centuries of Christian heroism — we cannot fail. Therefore enlist.

Word to Catholic Societies.

The present moment is the opportune time for our Catholic societies of men to undertake in the most earnest manner possible the work of recruiting. There is especially one society that I would appeal to, that society with a martial name which aims at bringing within its fold all the leading Catholic men of this country —the Knights of Columbus. A knight is a gentleman who is a Christian soldier in a noble cause. Our cause—the defence of the liberty and integrity of Canada and the British Empire, the liberation of martyred Belgium, and the protection of our allies—is a noble cause. A quarter of a million of Christian soldiers are required at the Canadian recruiting office. Answer the call, Knights of Columbus! Half a million soldiers from Canada will mean one-fourth of all Canadian citizens of 21 years of age or over. Have one-fourth of the Knights of Columbus enlisted? Or if not, when will that proportion be attained? I ask as a friend and member of the society. If at the end of the war it should be found that the proportion of Canadian Knights of Columbus under colours is less than the average proportion of the nation, it will be necessary for that society to purify its ranks by wholesale expulsions or to drop the word Knights from its title.

Sir Knights to Arms.

Sir Knights, if the call to arms comes to you as a command, volunteer at once, or you are neither Knights, Canadians nor Catholics. If owing to your position or duties, the call comes to you not as a command, but as a counsel which it is permitted to follow, then, Sir Knights to arms!

The Catholic men of Canada must so act to-day, that in future generations their descendants may look back to their heroic sacrifices and exclaim:

"Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive, But to be young was very heaven."

Surely for the soldier of Christ there is no truer heaven in this world than the glorious opportunity for a great sacrifice in a noble cause.

I am not looking at the soldier's life from the sentimental standpoint of the dreamer. I know its dangers, both physical and moral. I am aware that all soldiers are not saints, that all are not even moderately good Christians. But if you wish to keep company only with the good, "You must needs" as St. Paul says, "go out of this world."

Volunteers for Chaplain.

Dr. O'Gorman at this point referred to the need of Catholic chaplains for Catholic soldiers at the front and said that there was good reason to believe that the government was willing to do everything possible to provide Catholic chaplains and added:

"Personally should the Minister of Militia see fit to make use of my services I would be willing to be chaplain to a body of Catholic soldiers from the Ottawa Valley or from any other part of Canada, and be ready to vouch to the parents, wives and relations of those men, that since they had made the sacrifice of becoming soldiers, they were all the better Christians."

An Eloquent Conclusion.

When a man becomes a soldier from a conscientious desire to serve his country, Christ Himself vouches for him in these words: "Amen I say to you, there is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive much more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting" (Luke XVIII: 29,30). To the shirker, Christ says: "Whosoever would save his life shall lose it." To the true soldier Christ says: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. XVI:25). The motto of every Canadian, whether it be his glorious privilege to risk his life for his friends or whether he be compelled by duty to remain at home and help his country in some other but equally necessary way, should be that given by the immortal soldier, saint and Roman martyr, the Apostle Paul. "Take thy part in the suffering hardships, as a good soldier of Christ Jesus." (II Tim. 11,3.)

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

OPERATION SLIGHT KAISER ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

ROME, Jan. 12.—The latest reports received here regarding the illness of the German Emperor minimize the seriousness of his condition, and contradict wild rumours circulated recently. These reports received from Germany, through Switzerland say the Emperor is affected by a malignant growth in the throat, which required a small operation. Although the operation was slight, it is said, the greatest care was indispensable owing to the delicate nature of the organs affected.

A high church official was assured the physicians believed that if complications do not arise, a contingency they think unlikely, the Emperor will be able to resume work this month or early in February.

German Attack Was Victory For French

PARIS, Jan. 12.—The German attack in Champagne, which failed so signally, was in reality a victory for the French, only it had less eclat than the great offensive of September. It was by far the most important action on the western front since September. More than 50,000 Germans took part over a front of less than ten miles in the grand attack, which had been prepared for by four days of severe bombardment, and which was immediately preceded by a bombardment with gas shells and bombs, and by the launching of clouds of asphyxiating gas driven forward by mechanical means.

TWO BATTALIONS WIPED OUT.

The only result was a decisive defeat all along the line. At one point two German battalions following behind a gas cloud, were totally wiped out by the French enfilading fire from rifles and machine guns. At a point called "The Bastion," on the index finger of the "hand of Massiges," a double attack was launched with two brigades against both sides of a rocky promitory. The Germans struggled bravely, but the French met them with a withering fire, and the Germans were shot down as they reached the top of the hill, their bodies rolled back into the valley below. The main German attempt was to enlarge their salient at Butte de Mesnil, and in the last 12 hours before the infantry attack they fired four hundred thousand shells on the French trenches. At the point of the main attack they were repulsed decisively without reaching the French trenches. At half a dozen places along the line they succeeded in seizing the French listening posts in advance of the lines, but from these they were driven out by the French counter-attacks.

At only one point—between La Courtmis and Butte de Mesnil—did they succeed in gaining a foothold in a short portion of the French most advanced trenches. That few yards of trench they hold most precariously, while their losses in this abortive attack were nearly four times those of the French on same grounds on September 25, when the French gained a brilliant victory.

OFFICIALLY CONFIRMED.

The war office report reiterated to-day that the violent two-day offensive launched by the Germans in Champagne, which came to an end as a result of vigorous counter-attacks yesterday afternoon, failed completely. The French drove the Germans out of the positions they had carried in the first onrush and only a small rectangle west of Maisons de Champagne, remained in Teuton hands. This position is now under French attack. Berlin asserted officially this afternoon that French counter-attacks failed to wrest from the Teutons the positions they had conquered on Sunday northwest of Massiges, in the Champagne. Artillery activity continues on the vital parts of the western front. All official reports tell of aeroplane actions.

YOUNG OFFICER IS ARRESTED

BROCKVILLE, Jan. 11.—Lieut. John Henry Nowlan, of C Battery, Kingston, who spoiled his career by stealing the jewels of his hostess, Mrs. S. Flint, after being kindly entertained for some days at the residence of the latter, was caught at Montreal on Saturday with most of the jewellery on his person.

Nowlan, whose antecedents are somewhat hazy as far as any information he has given in that direction, spent about two weeks in Brockville, and had his leave extended on account of illness. He came here with good letters of introduction and Mrs. Flint entertained him on the strength of recommendations from a mutual friend. He was a fluent talker and spoke of personal experiences on the battlefield during the present war, also of having lived in Sweden and other countries. When arrested in Montreal he was on his way to Sweden where he states he has a sister. He is only about twenty years of age.

Nowlan left Mrs. Flint's residence on James street last Wednesday morning about eleven o'clock ostensibly to fill some social engagements. Almost immediately afterwards Mrs. Flint had occasion to go upstairs where her jewelery was kept and found the following articles missing, valued at about three thousand dollars:

One large emerald pendant surrounded by diamonds.
Three-stone diamond ring.
One solitarie diamond ring.
One ring with smaller emerald surrounded by diamonds.

It was not until evening that the theft was reported to C. R. Deacon, solicitor for Mrs. Flint, and he at once took the matter up with Chief Burke who immediately sent out a description of Nowlan and the jewels and requests to arrest the young man. The military authorities were also notified.

Nowlan, after leaving the Flint home, proceeded almost immediately to the G.T.R. station and bought a ticket for Kingston, taking the fast train. Instead of getting off at Kingston he paid his fare to Toronto to the conductor At Toronto he disposed of the three-stone diamond ring at the Kent store for $365 and a smaller ring to the Diamond Co. for $65.

Leaving Toronto he went to Montreal via. C. P. R. and then to the G. T. R. station where Adjutant Lawson, of Kingston who had just arrived, recognized him and knowing the details of the jewelery theft at once phoned to the detective department. Detectives Labine and O'Donnell went to the station but Nolan had just left in a taxi. The officers commandeered another taxi and the chase began, Nowlan's car taking a roundabout course with the intention of shaking off any possible pursuers, finally stopping at the Ritz-Carleton Hotel where the detectives arrested him.

He had three pieces o jewelery left wrapped up in tissue paper, and carried a small hand grip containing a large Colt army revolver and a change of linen. His other clothing he left at Mrs. Flint's home when he left town so hurriedly with the jewelery.

Chief of police Burke and C. R. Deacon went down to Montreal and the prisoner was brought back to Brockville yesterday afternoon. This morning he was remanded until January 17.

HIS ASHES SPADED INTO SOD, BURIAL ORDERED BY WILL

No Ceremony at Funeral, Wish of George S. Foster; Charity for All, His Farewell.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 12.—A wish to have his ashes spaded into the earth, beneath the sod of Evergreen Cemetery, was expressed in the will of George S. Foster, who died at the age of eighty-one.

"I desire that the ceremony attending my funeral be of the very simplest kind," reads the will just filed for probate; "that no denominational or theological sermon be preached. Simply expressing my hope and belief in continued spirit existence and my farewell to all friends and the scenes of earth, marking charity for all and malice toward none. I express my sincere thankfulness for the blessing I have enjoyed in life."

The value of the estate is not known, as it consists almost entirely of personal property. It is declared to be between $10,000 and $15,000. The will was written in his own hand, and leaves all of the property to his widow, Amy Stuart Foster.

MOTHER GIVES SKIN TO SAVE BABY'S LIFE

SALINA, Kan., Jan. 12.—That her 14-months-old child might live, though badly scarred and disfigured, Mrs. Erastus Keys has given up thirty square inches of skin to be grafted to the face, neck, and chest of her baby.

Little Paul pulled a kettle of boiling tea off the table, spilling the scalding liquid over his face, chest and abdomen and burning him so seriously physicians abandoned hope of his recovery. It was decided he might recover through a skin grafting operation. In a last effort the mother begged and pleaded she be allowed to give her child this last chance for life and physicians yielded. Mrs. Keys underwent one of the largest and most painful skin grafting operations ever attempted. The child now has an excellent chance of recovery.

The woman that is idolized may be put aside as an idol until she is needed again.

Just Suits My Needs Building Up the System

This is the Way Thousands of Women Are Speaking of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Breck, Trenholmville, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour — all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the wasted nervous system. Put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are feeling tired out and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and new nerve force and you will realize again the joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

HARRY LAUDER IS FUNNIER THAN EVER

Harry Lauder, the famous Scottish comedian and generally acknowledged the most inimitable artist in his line in the world, will be seen at the Grand on Monday, Jan. 24, during his eighth annual tour of the country under the direction of William Morris. Mr. Lauder, like old wine, improves with age, and his opening in New York this year was the largest week's business that he has ever played to in the metropolis.

Mr. Morris has seen to it that Mr. Lauder shall have a company this year which is in every way worthy of the great artist who heads it, many of the acts of the big vaudeville programme have never been seen in America before and are specially imported for this tour. They include Al Golem Troupe, a company of 16 daring performers; Dave Genaro and Isabelle Jason, in a series of dance specialties, Selwyn Driver, who performs his specialty at the piano in a humorous and novel vein; Albert Donnelly, the silent humorist in shadowgraphy, and Mlle. Lucille and her marvelous talking Cockatoo.

As Mr. Lauder's engagement is limited to one night only it would be well for those who desire to see this wonderful artist to make early reservations. Seats will be on sale at the box office on Friday, January 21, if there are any left after filling mail orders, which are pouring in from both inside and outside of the city.

"THE CHIEF TEXT"

YOU ask for my opinion of Advertising as a business policy, and what it has done for the firm of J. S. Fry and Sons, Ltd. In reply, I might well ask, What has it NOT done? I would describe Advertising as the chief text in the Gospel of Business.

WITHOUT it we could never have given — and be giving — employment to so many thousands of workers, or have benefited so many millions of people by our manufactures.

ONE would say as the result of practical knowledge that ALL forms of Advertisements are good and beneficial, relatively, though in my opinion—I give it for what it is worth—those in Newspapers and Magazines are probably more far-reaching in their results.

FROM long experience I am convinced that, as Sir William Lever so well puts it, "the firms which have continued to advertise have benefited enormously and so will continue advertising."

IS it not undeniable that the success of nearly all our great commercial concerns has been largely due to the application of this educational and dynamic principle?

OF course it can only be expected to succeed where the commodities concerned are intrinsically good and valuable in themselves and able to stand the test of time

PETERBORO' BOYS ACKNOWLEDGE THE GIFT OF TOBACCO

Cards Received From Local Members of 21st Battalion and 4th Battery Express Recipients' Thanks

WHO WILL HELP THE WORK

Five more cards addressed in Peterborough, and sent to England on October 12, 1915, have been received from the front. The London branch of the Over-Seas Club enclosed the cards in packages of Canadian tobacco and forwarded to the Peterborough boys on the firing line:

Yours,

Somewhere in Europe

To the members of the Peterborough Club:

I cannot express in writing my thanks for the cigarettes and tobacco which I received from you. It proves that the old saying "Out of sight out of mind," is not always correct. It is very much the other way I think. It is certainly a splendid object that you are working on, as the boys certainly enjoy a good smoke, in smoking myself.

Wishing you and all the Peterborough Club every success, believe me to remain,
Yours truly,
CORP. F. C. ROBERTS,
Can. Army Medical Corp. 21st Battalion.

Somewhere in France.

Peterboro Club,—

I must thank you very much for the tobacco and cigarettes which I received from you. Wishing you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, from
Yours sincerely,

2 Young Women Successfully Work Gold Mine

Clad in Overalls, They Labor Like Men After Being Bequeathed Claim.

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 12.—Two girls of Baker, Ore., Grace Carmalt and Susie Norwood, coming into possession of a mining claim in Owl Mountain, eastern Oregan, set about to work it themselves, from the digging and crushing of the ore to the final reclamation of the precious metal, and have succeeded so well that a golden harvest is within their reach.

It all come about in a peculiar way. The young women's fathers were joint owners of a claim about eighteen miles from Baker.

When they inherited the claim through the death of their fathers, their first thought was to sell it. But the offer made them for the property were inconsistent with their ideas of its real value.

Then a happy thought came to one of the girls. They had both grown weary of teaching during the Winter months; they were strong and healthy; they were of an adventurous spirit, and they had learned a lot about mining. Why not work the claim themselves?

Now they are both doing well financially, but keep working the claim themselves.

PUZZLED.

Hard, Sometimes, to Raise Children

Children's taste is ofttimes more accurate, in selecting the right kind of food to fit the body, than that of adults. Nature works more accurately through the children.

A lady says: "Our little boy had long been troubled with weak digestion. We could never persuade him to take more than one taste of any kind of cereal food. He was a weak little chap, and we were puzzled to know what to feed him on.

"One lucky day he tried Grape-Nuts. Well, you never saw a child eat with such a relish, and it did me good to see him. From that day on it seemed as though we could almost see him grow. He would eat Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper, and I think he would have liked the food for dinner.

"The difference in his appearance is something wonderful.

"My husband had never fancied cereal foods of any kind, but he became very fond of Grape-Nuts and has been much improved in health since using it.

"We are now a healthy family and naturally believe in Grape-Nuts.

"A friend has two children who were formerly afflicted with rickets. I was satisfied that the disease was caused by lack of proper nourishment. The children showed it. So I urged her to use Grape-Nuts as an experiment and the result was almost magical.

"They continued the food and today both children are as well and strong as any children in this city and, of course, my friend is a firm believer in Grape-Nuts for she has the evidence before her eyes every day." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

"CASCARETS" FOR A COLD, BAD BREATH OR SICK HEADACHE

Best For Liver and Bowels, For Biliousness, Sour Stomach and Constipation

Get a 10-cent box now.

Furred Tongue, Bad Colds, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing, and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a ten-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then to keep their stomach, liver, and bowels regulated, and never know a miserable moment. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

A woman should be reserved in her acquaintance of lover until after marriage.

Arts and Crafts Column

In this column, conducted by Mr. Hugheen Johnstone, painter and decorator, 513 College Street, will be answered on Wednesdays — questions of the kind given below, for the benefit of those who, in this period of stringency and enforced and suggested economy, might like doing their own work. Questions relating to painting, signwriting, paperhanging, furniture polishing, and decorating may be sent to the Examiner, and will receive attention in due course

X. Y. Z., Peterborough, Ont.—Please tell me through your 'Arts and Crafts' column how I can paint green window shades?

Ans.: Your question is a little indefinite as I am not sure whether you refer to wooden shutters, which some call shades or if roller blinds, whether new or old. However, let us chance old or faded roller blind cloth. The blind cloth should be stretched on frames of proper size, then thoroughly washed with soap and water, rinsed and allowed to dry. Then as you say they are green, procure your green shade, see that it is ground in oil, add a little gold size Japan, and make very thin with benzine. Then with a good sized flat brush, lay on the colour very quickly and evenly on one side, turn your frame over and repeat. If made and handled right one coat will be enough.

West End, City: Will you be kind enough to suggest a plain, inexpensive colour or colours to use in a bed-room facing north-east? Would a robin's egg blue suit, as the bed is blue enamel, and my chair is white enamel with a blue cover? The balances have blue and pink colours. An answer will oblige.

Ans.: A robin's egg blue would be an entirely wrong colour scheme for a north-east room and more especially as your chair, bed and balances contain blue. To decorate the walls with a robin's egg blue would be frightfully depressing and trying, when you consider that a north light is a blue light. Warm colours are needed here, say a white or light cream ceiling and a pink or light wine colour wall. If papers are used pick one with little or no contrasts self or two tones would be better. If done in distemper use a neat frieze of a deeper tone say a crushed strawberry with just an odd leaf or something in natural green.

North Monaghan Ont.: I have two plain though very prettily shaped bottles and I would appreciate it very much if you would tell me through your "Arts and Crafts" column how I could paint or stain them so as they could be used as vases?

Ans.: A very simple and inexpensive way to stain them is to procure some bleached shellac to which add some aviline dye to the desired colour. Use the shellac thin, select a warm room have your bottle heated slightly and cork it. Now attach a string to the cork, pour on your stain and let it drain evenly. This is better than brushing it on if you can manage it. Some very beautiful colours can be had this way and is a good imitation of stained glass.

Madam X, Peterborough, Ont.: Will you kindly tell me how many square feet a quart of paint will cover and what firm makes the best paint and is shiny or dull paint the best and why?

Ans.: The covering capacity of paint is so variable that it is impossible to say how many square feet of surface a given quantity will cover. A gallon on some surfaces might cover 500 square feet, while on others not more than 50 square feet. Then the density of the paint has a lot to do with it. We cannot give firm names in this column. C. Under some conditions shiny paint could not be used, then dull paint is best. In other instances dull paint would be most deleterious so there you are. They are both best under certain conditions. That's why.

GLIMPSES OF THE Y.M.C.A. WORK FOR SOLDIERS AT THE FRONT

One hundred thousand magazines were collected in one day in Toronto and will be forwarded by the Militia Department to the Canadian soldiers at the front. The collection was arranged by Capt. Forgie for the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s of Canada. It is planned by the Y.M.C.A. to gather together and forward huge bundles of these magazines every couple of months, as the soldiers are eager for such entertainment.

A Methodist Missionary just back on furlough, 'phoned up the headquarters of the National Council of the Y.M.C.A. in Toronto and asked what was being done on behalf of Canada's soldiers. The information was so gratifying that the following day a cheque for $200 was received.

The cabled news item sent out before Christmas that millions of pounds of plum pudding had left England for the soldiers of Britain and the rest of the Empire, caused surprise only from the big figures involved. The Y.M.C.A. workers helped to reverse the process — in gifts "from" the trenches. Here is what Capt. Hanrock, one of the Canadian Association men overseas, writes from the firing line: "Our men wer paid extra Christmas money, and my C.O. wanted to know what could be done in the way of supplying Christmas presents that the boys could send home to Canada. I got a few thousand francs together and took my horse and groom, with our packs, and made to the nearest large centre and purchased a generous supply of souvenirs, jewellery, handkerchiefs, etc.

"The way the boys went after these things was amazing. They lasted just one day. Again I made a trip and got more, and still again, each time bringing back as much as we could carry. The men took it all and would have used more.

Further, each man was supplied with a card on which he sent his Christmas greetings with the article he chose. The goods were packed and registered and mailed right from the Y.M.C.A. Hundreds of men sent these messages of love home, which would have been impossible but for the Association. Alas, for some it has already proved to be their last."

(Submitted by the National Council of the Y.M.C.A.'s of Canada. A copy of your paper, now and then, containing items would be appreciated. Address—National Council Y.M.C.A., 15 Toronto St., Toronto, Ont.)

PETERBOROUGH, ONT., CANADA

THE newspaper in the Peterborough zone of Ontario to be granted Newspaperdom's "Winning Daily" emblem was the EXAMINER. After investigating the local field the following conclusions were established: First, the EXAMINER has a materially larger circulation than any other Peterborough daily; second, it is the leading evening newspaper of Peterborough and the tributary territory; third, it is supreme in volume of advertising published—and this volume is made up of gilt-edged business from local and foreign advertisers in Canada and the United States. Local advertisers unanimously endorse it for its result-getting efficiency. It invites correspondence regarding the Peterborough zone as a business possibility in 1916, the possibility of dealer cooperation, etc.

"Resolved, that the teachers and officers of the Murray street Baptist Sunday school desire to put on record their appreciation of the lengthy and efficient services of Mr. E. Elcombe, the teacher of the Senior Bible Class. That while we regret his retirement from the work, we express our conviction that he is following the Lord's leading in deciding to devote Sunday afternoon to him home and that we faithfully pray that he may long be spared to render service to his Master.

Further, that we assure Mr. Elcombe and his wife of our affection for them and our admiration of their faithfulness to Him who is their Lord."

Secretarys Report.

The following is a report of the work done in the Sunday School during the year 1915 given by the secretary:

This is the fourth annual business meeting of the teachers and officers that has been held in our new school building, and each year, as we have thus reviewed our work, we have seen decided progress, but 1915 has been, in many ways, one of our unusual years. One could not only expect that the events and the demands of the past year would cause a considerable shrinkage in the high standard that we have previously maintained and the fact that we have not only maintained that standard, but actually surpassed it, has been due, in a large measure, to the unfailing teachers have shown to their classes, interesting them in the study of God's Word and making it a pleasure for the members to attend.

For the four years previous to 1915 the average attendance has hovered around 200, reaching in 1914 an average of a little over 205. But this last year our average has jumped to over 213 per Sunday, the highest average ever obtained by our school. This is all the more creditable when one considers the number that have unavoidably left our school so that the average number on the roll was only a little over 286. For the first six months of the year the average was exceptionally high, reaching a little over 208 per Sunday.

This very evident regularity in the attendance of our scholars shows itself clearly in their individual attendance records. Three of our scholars, Miss Bessie Elcombe, Berdina Graham and Stanley Rathbone maintained a perfect record throughout the entire year, coming every Sunday on time, thus obtaining 100 p.c. Then John Ward and Bessie Hardwicke did almost equally as well, but they were each late on Sunday, thus obtaining 99.4 p.c. Mildred Graham, Jennie Galbraith and Grace Read were absent only one Sunday, obtaining 98.1 p.c. Others that should be mentioned are Cyril Rathbone 98.3 p.c., Olive Doughty and Mary Eastwood 95.5 p.c. and Myrtle Knapp 95 p.c. Then there were fifteen more of our scholars who obtained less than 95 p.c., but more than 90 p.c. and twenty-seven who obtained between 90 p.c. and 80 p.c., thus making fifty-six in all who maintained an average of over 80 p.c. for the entire year. In conjunction with these names we should also mention the splendid record of two of the members of the Bible Class, that of Mr. Airress who only missed one Sunday, and Mr. Riddel who only missed two.

But we have another roll of honour that we are sure all will agree overshadows the previous one and which we are proud to include in this report. The young men that have left our school and have voluntarily sacrificed their ambition, and if need be their lives, for the sake of we who remain, deserve our highest praise and sincerest gratitude and this little verbal recognition will be nothing to our very active recognition of their services when we are given the chance. Those who have answered the call from our school during the past year are as follows: Wilbert Irwine, Victor Dallin, Norman Barrie, Harold Jolliffe, Roy Joliffe, Harold Yelland, Sidney Ward, Ben Martin, Gordon Matthews, Joe Horton and W. Theobald. These added to the twelve who enlisted in 1914 make twenty-three so far who are representing us at the front.

We had four special Sundays last year, Decision Day, March 21st; Easter Sunday, April 4th; Mothers' Day, May 9th; and Rally Day, September 26th. On Thursday evening, December 30th we held our annual Christmas tea and entertainment. The entertainment this year was exceptionally successful, the idea of each class contributing its share to the programme working our splendidly and we had an offering of $32.00 to divide equally between the Belgian Relief Fund and the fund, in care of our pastor, for the needy in our church. On Friday afternoon, July 9 we held our annual excursion to Jubilee Point, taking the steamer Stoney Lake. As usual we had a splendid day and the children thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

During the past year the pastor has had the pleasure of receiving into the church by baptism eighteen members of our school. This makes one hundred and thirty-one members of our school, including the adult members who are members of the church.

During the past year quite a number of changes have taken place in our teaching staff. In February Miss Aldridge's class and the Baraca Class combined, forming the members of a class called the Pastor's Class, and a little later the Phileathia Class, taught by Miss Nichols, also joined the Pastor's Class. Early in the year Mrs. Pettit was forced to give up her class due to illness and since then Mrs. (Dr.) W. D. Scott has most successfully carried on her work. Miss Garrett and Miss Louden asked to be relieved of teaching, Miss Garrett's class being taught by Mrs. Montgomery until, due to her ill health, Miss M. Scott took the class, and Miss Louden's class joined in with Miss Matthews' class. Mr. Routley's class was at his request, given to Mr. Fry, who retained it until a few Sundays ago, when he was asked to accept the position of Superintendent of the Park street Baptist Sunday school, and since then Mr. Johnstone has taken charge. Miss Eastwood's class is now Miss Aldridge's and a new class just promoted from the Primary Department has been taken by Mrs. Montgomery now that she feels better.

In October the school started to organize an orchestra and under the able leadership of Mr. Asa Huycke we already have a splendid orchestra of ten members.

And now as we enter upon our work for 1916 may we continue to remember that Christ is with us and if we trust Him for guidance our labours shall truly be blessed.

(Signed) W. B. Browett, Secretary.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic!" is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quick! stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barber's itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

A woman should let a man be clever, in her in vien.

Peel Off The Old Skin; Bring Out the New

You know that beneath that muddy, over-red or blotchy complexion you have a skin that's clear, soft and white. If you could only have this more beautiful skin exposed to view instead of the horrid old skin you now behold in the mirror! You can—and by a very simple process which you can use yourself. Get an ounce of common, mercolized wax at your druggist's and this evening spread a thin coating of it over your face. To-morrow morning wash it off with cold water. Small, powder-like particles of the lifeless old skin will come off with the wax. Repeat this daily until all the worn-out cuticle has been absorbed. Then you'll have a lovelier, healthier looking complexion than you ever think possible. Black heads, pimples, spots, freckles, sharp or other surface disfigurements are of course removed with the skin itself.

If your skin be wrinkled or flabby, bathe the face daily for awhile in a lotion made by dissolving one ounce powdered saxolite in ½ pint witch hazel. This is inexpensive.

ALD. G. H. DUNCAN WAS RE-ELECTED CHAIRMAN

Will Supervise the Destiny of the Board of Health for the Ensuing Year

The Board of Health met yesterday afternoon, and among other things, passed a couple of accounts: One in favour of Miss E. M. Coughlin for $44.80, and one for the G.N.W. Telegraph Company, for 26c. Mr. G. H. Duncan was re-elected chairman of the Board for the ensuing year, an honour which the recipient acknowledged with a few well-chosen remarks. Ex-Mayor Buller, who was elected to the Board at a recent meeting of the City Council, was of the opinion that the Chairman of the Property Committee of the City Council should serve on the Board. The Act provides that any three ratepayers may be appointed. For one or two years past it has been the custom of the City Council to nominate the Chairman of the above-named Committee, a precedent which certain members and ex-members of the Council are reluctant to eliminate. Ex-Mayor Buller intimated that he would remain in order to make room on the Board for the Chairman of the Property Committee. He was persuaded to participate in yesterday's meeting, so as to facilitate the transaction of business.

HOW CORPORAL WHITE Won D. C. M.

Corporal White, who is coming to "The Grand" on Friday and Saturday next with Saturday matinee, with Canadian Government Authorized Pictures "Canada's Fighting Forces," is a young man who won his decoration of D.C.M. for bravery at Ypres and Festubert. He hails from Vancouver, B.C., and was with the 5th Western Cavalry, who were fighting dismounted at Ypres. He was attached to the medical detail and was struck on the knee cap by the casing of a shell. His medical officer being taken prisoner, Corporal White stayed with his men for three weeks, refusing to go back for treatment. Not until May 22nd did he leave; by that time water had formed on his knee. For heroically staying in the trenches and for a number of deeds of great bravery which his Colonel became aware of, he was recommended for the Distinguished Conduct Medal and in due time this was awarded.

Corporal White is very modest in his reference to himself. Speaking of the stretcher bearers, he says that at Ypres they went out in broad daylight to rescue wounded. Three out of sixteen of his section are still at the front.

OPEN NOSTRILS! END A COLD OR CATARRH

How To Get Relief When Head and Nose are Stuffed Up.

Count fifty! Your cold in head or catarrh disappears. Your clogged nostrils will open, the air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more snuffling, hawking, mucous discharge, dryness or headache; no struggling for breath at night.

Get a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm from your druggist and apply a little of this fragrant antiseptic cream in your nostrils. It penetrates through every air passage of the head, soothing and healing the swollen or inflamed mucous membrane, giving you instant relief. Head colds and catarrh yield like magic. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable. Relief is sure.

Automobile Association Wants License Money Paid From Here Spent On This District's Roads

Department Collects Over $5,000 From Peterborough Automobile Owners and Money is Spent in Other Sections—Dr. Sutton Elected President Though Away on Active Service.

MR. GILLESPIE WILL PRESIDE

The Peterborough Automobile Association at its annual meeting last night decided to present a strong appeal to the Legislature for the expenditure on roads in this district of as much as possible of the license money contributed by automobile owners in this city and vicinity. With approximately $5,000 collected in fees from Peterborough car owners it was felt that a considerable portion of this money should be spent in this locality, particularly on the road between Port Hope and Peterborough.

As as preliminary manoeuvre of their campaign they decided to send Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Mayor Duffus and the secretary, Mr. S. J. Keyes, to the annual meeting of the Ontario Motor League in Toronto on Tuesday, January 18, to enlist the support of the provincial organization, and will follow this up by presenting their claims to the Legislature through Mr. Gillespie before it opens in February.

The expenditure of the whole or part of this money in this section is regarded by the Association, in the event of securing it, as a decided boon for the automobile owners, and for the farmers, too, and in order to present as strong a case as possible the members hope to mobilize the local car owners and to secure a big membership. As an additional inducement to join the Association, and partly as the result of financial conditions the membership fee was reduced from $5 to $3 on motion of Mr. Gillespie, seconded by Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald. This entitles each member to a Motor League badge, a year's subscription to the League's magazine, and to the other material advantages which a large and united membership is bound to secure.

Strength in Unity.

Dr. Amys and other members emphasized the benefits that can be gained if the owners will get together, present a strong and united front, and demand at least a proportionate share of the license money to be spent this year on some of the main highways in this district. The secretary was instructed to write to the Lindsay, Port Hope, Cobourg, and other associations in this district asking them to assist the Peterborough members. In the past, it was said, the local car owners paid for their licenses, but they received no good roads benefits in return. This has been due almost entirely to the fact that there have been no demands forwarded by the local owners who failed to recognize the value of union. Most of the money was spent in the western end of the province where the associations were strong and insistent.

Officers Elected.

This was probably the most important question discussed last night in the Bank of Montreal Chambers. The membership problem practically coincided with it. The following officers were elected for 1916:

Hon. President—Dr. C. H. Amys.

President—Dr. Sutton (on active service).

Vice-President—Mr. G. A. Gillespie (with duties of president).

Secretary-Treasurer — Mr. S. J. Keyes (re-elected).

Good Roads Committee—Mayor Duffus, chairman; Dr. Amys, Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald, and Mr. R. C. Heard.

Entertainment and Reception—Ex-Mayor Butler, chairman; R. Sturgeon, C. E. Canfield, J. W. Worth.

Membership—Reg. Turner, chairman; Felix Brownscombe, J. W. Brightman, R. Sturgeon, H. O. Fiske, Dr. Mann, Ald. Stratton, Theodore Crawford and Percy Spence of Lakefield, J. W. Kelly and Harry Jopling of Bridgenorth.

Auditors—Dr. Amys and Ald. Stratton.

Financial Statement.

Mr. Keyes presented his two reports, the financial statement as follows:

Balance from 1914	$ .78
Membership fees	105.00
One Millbrook member	3.00
	$108.78

Expenditure.

Ontario Motor League	$ 40.00
Postage	4.80
Printing	6.80
Rubber stamp	1.43
Work on roads	34.60
	$ 89.03
Balance in Bank	$ 19.76

Secretary's Report.

In his report as secretary, Mr. Keyes referred to the work in regard to insurance, the standard rate being a very fair one for motor owners. No entertainment was attempted this year. Loose stones were removed from about 90 miles of roads north of the city in the direction of Stoney Lake. Ald. Stratton and Mr. Keyes worked out a plan for auto mobilization. Sixty per cent. of the car owners responded, but when the plan was perfected there was neither home guard, nor 57th Regiment. Mr. Keyes remarked that this should be a good year for the organization with better financial conditions and especially if car owners realize the advantages of membership.

Other Considerations.

The Association decided to wait on the County Council and talk over road matters with the object of arousing their support in the movement for better roads. Township Councils will also be approached and even path masters will not be overlooked if possible. It is felt that better roads are in the interest of farmers as well as automobile owners. Inviting highways, it was stated, will certainly bring many visitors into this district.

Dr. Amys, enumerating the benefits from the Association, stated that members were saved their membership fee in gasoline by the road directions alone, which had been put up along a number of tours. The Motor Journal was of great assistance, especially to new car owners, and the League's badge was always recognized by the members of other associations. But the great advantage can be obtained by the expenditure of money on the roads, and it requires a well organized association to carry weight.

A big effort will be made to swell the membership which dropped from 70 in 1914 to 21 in 1915. In 1913 it was very large. It was felt that the members have received a large return in the road signs alone, but with every owner a member it is hoped to lay the foundation to good auto roads through the surrounding townships and counties.

Appreciation was conveyed to the press by a vote of thanks, moved by Dr. Amys and seconded by Mr. Keyes.

NEW YORK REPORTS BIG FUR PRICES

The Situation Locally Favours the Buyer Rather Than the Fur Man

A New York paper, The Herald, says that a Russian sable coat, one of the finest ever made in the country, and which cost $35,000, and contains 130 perfect sable pelts, is to be worn by the wife of a diplomatic representative to the U. S.

A French actress in New York is now wearing a sable coat costing $30,000 and containing 320 pelts. These coats are the most expensive tailored and sold in this country for a long time. According to furriers, they represent the extreme activity in furs this season, an activity not equalled in twenty years.

The beginning of the season was marked by the lowest prices in three years all notoriously bad for furriers, and it was feared that with practically every other world market except America closed, prices would drop to a ruinous minimum. And then out of a clear sky came the avalanches of military styles for women's dresses. There was a move by garment makers for black fox, skunk, beaver and kolinsky skins, and it was estimated yesterday that with fur trimmed boots, gowns, street suits and other frocks at their height of style, more than $6,000,000 worth or fur had already gone into trimmings. More than this amount, it is estimated, will be spent for fur trimmings before the season is over.

Fur prices in the last few months have been moving steadily upward and will continue to rise. There is a great demand for silver, blue and cross fox pelts, all of them practically American furs. Russian sable is plentiful and of the best quality ever sent to this country, but the demand for this kind is keeping the prices well up. Mink skins are popular and these are being furnished largely from New York State, in the Adirondacks, the York State, in the Adirondacks, where some of the finest minks in the world are trapped.

Blue and cross fox sets are bringing big prices. Mrs. Arthur Schoellkopf, of Buffalo, N.Y., who presented the stadium to Cornell University, recently paid $7,700 for a two-piece set of fox pelts. Mrs. C. H. Dodge, of Detroit, Mich., purchased a chinchilla coat here, for which she paid $9,000.

The annual fur sales heretofore held in London are this year being held in St. Louis and New York. St. Louis sales for this week show advances in coon, muskrat, fox, wolf, skunk of from 50 p.c. to 100 p.c. on last year's figures.

In this connection, it may be mentioned that Peterborough citizens are just now favoured with an opportunity to purchase high-class furs at prices that do not seem likely to be offered again for some years. Barries Limited's first mid-winter season in their new modern building, next to the Customs House, George street, have inaugurated a most liberally priced January reduction sale on all made up furs in their show room. For the benefit of readers it may be mentioned that, as the time limit of this sale is short, failure to take advantage of these very low prices will mean a considerable loss to intending purchasers of furs, as later in the season furs will go higher owing to the market advances of raw material. id-1w

A United People Bending Every Effort

To the Successful Prosecution of

THE GREAT WAR

This is the Resolve of Canada

The Determination of Ontario

A United People in the Great War

• This is the end to which Political Leaders have made every effort and continued to wield their great influence.

No question of a local, contentious or political nature can be allowed to divert our minds or our energies from the one duty. Win the War. The best minds in Ontario and, in fact, throughout Canada believe that, although there may be questions political and otherwise that might well be determined by the electorate, yet these must wait.

No Election Until After The War Is Over

No General Election This Year

The House of Commons opens shortly and it is expected the first bill to be introduced will be one extending the Life of Parliament for a year—What for? In order that the Government may devote its whole thought and energies in directing Canada's great efforts to do its full part within the Empire in winning the war and thus bring about an honorable peace.

Let the Man Who Fights Vote on The Issue

And now at this critical time comes the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred with its campaign for Total Prohibition to divide us, to throw us into opposing camps, and if possible force their will on this province when many of the electors are fighting for the Empire in Europe.

The Electors of the Province of Ontario

Spoke With No Uncertain Sound June, 1914

to retain The License System under sane Government supervision and control.

The question was settled, then why does the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred raise it now?

The Question Was Settled by The Electors in 1914

The Men at the Front and the Thousands to Follow

Thousands of our fellow-citizens have heard the call and have gladly responded, sacrificing the comforts of home, their loved ones, their friends, their business, at the call of Duty and Liberty. Many more will go before the vote proposed by the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred could be taken. These men voted in 1914. Is it fair to force the question of Total Prohibition on Ontario when they have become disfranchised by reason of their absence—fighting for you—fighting for Liberty?

Parliament of Canada Gave Vote to Men in the Trenches

In the last session of the House of Commons a bill amending the Franchise Act was introduced, approved and made law, under which, in the event of a General Election in Canada, our soldiers in England or on any field of action will be able to cast their votes. The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred is trying to get a verdict in the absence of our fighting men.

The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred realizes that the men who are fighting for the World's liberty on the battlefield of Europe would be fighting for the liberty of the individual if they were home.

Wait, and give them an opportunity to vote.

about ploughing. I would like to be walking behind the plough now myself for a few days. It would be quite a change, but this campaign will do us a world of good. A lot of ramblers will be satisfied with a quiet life, if they are spared to go home again. I have seen a lot of strange places since I left Peterborough seven years ago, and strange things to see before I see it again.

There is no change in the weather here yet, raining all the time and mud up to the eyes.

You spoke of sending me socks and underwear. There is no use of you bothering for we get all that kind of thing here, and as for making the soldiers pay for anything, they don't do it. We are charged for nothing, not even for anything of our equipment we lose.

So you can inform any person of the fact and use my name for authority. Have it put in the paper and ask the fellows who said so to give their authority, and they will be looked after in the proper manner. A number of those fellows have cold feet and never saw the firing line, or they would know differently. A lot of the stuff you hear is from slackers, who never came any nearer than England. We see a lot of it here. Everything that is sent to the front comes free of charge, and is handed out same way.

There is talk of the 1st Brigade being sent home for the winter for a rest, but I think it is too good to be true.

It requires every man here to hold our positions, and sometimes it looks doubtful at that. Sometimes it is quiet and sometimes the stretcher-bearers are the busiest men in the trenches. We got it handed out to us to-day in box car letters, and to-night hardly a shot is fired on either side. Hoping to hear from you soon again.

Yours,

Sgt. F. Bradfield, No. A26780,

A few of the regular monthly subscribers secured by the Advisory Board have asked why their payments are not acknowledged each month along with other subscriptions. A full and complete list of all our generous monthly subscribers was published in the local papers on the completion of the canvass, and apart from the extra secretarial work it would involve to publish the long list of names every time, it would encroach too much on the valuable space of our newspapers, and the Society is already deeply indebted to them for their generosity.

The various collectors mark on the cards the amount and date of payments when collecting each month, and subscribers can always examine their cards at the office of the Toronto Loan and Savings Company any time they so desire. The complete list will be again published at the end of the year when the pledge expires.

The Colts finished their training with a lively practice last night, and are confident of their ability to give Lindsay a battle that they will remember. Judging by the talk around town the fans have sized the game up correctly, and they will be out in droves to see the youngsters fight for supremacy. A win means everything to the Electric Kids, while to Lindsay it would be the edge in the district race, so that with so much depending on the result, there is no question as to the keenness of the struggle. Much to the delight of the local squad there is a perfect sheet of fast ice ready for the fray, so that the game will be played under ideal conditions. As Lindsay are running an excursion it would be well for the local fans to get to the rink on time.

EASTERN JUNIORS WILL HAVE TO BE CONSIDERED

That Lou Marsh considers the Eastern Juniors will have to be considered is evident, from the following in the Toronto Star:

Around Toronto the fans are freely calling Aura Lee juniors to win the junior O.H.A. championship. They will have a couple more guesses coming before the season is over. Down east Lindsay, Belleville and Peterborough all have sturdy teams. In fact, Cap. Simpson has at Lindsay a team which is big and strong enough to tackle anything, and in its first game showed a method of precision of attack usually found wanting in town teams. If they can beat Dick Arnott's Belleville squad and the Peterborough youngsters they will make the winner of the Kingston district series go like something in a hurry to even hold them to a respectable score. Lindsay has Flavelle, Hough, Griffis, and Carew of last year's team, and their new boys, Mitchell, in goal Read at rover, and Mills, centre, all measure up to the pace set by the more experienced lads. The "kid" teams in the Lake Shore district are too light to go far. They are playing nice, clean, interesting hockey down there, with Oshawa and Port Hope looking like the choice. Cobourg lads are a lively little squad likely to break up any club's winning streak on hard ice.

HOCKEY

The Toronto News says: Janes in the nets for the 40th Battery did not have a great deal to do, but he handled a few hard ones in the style that made him famous at Peterborough. He will do on any team.

One advantage the Battery have is in playing Pethick at rover. Whenever Gooch or McNab go down the ice he drops back, and the system always gives them an air-tight defence. Both McNab and Pethick showed some of the stuff that made them famous in the intermediate series. While they are big and strong they play clean hockey.

Mr. Peter Spratt of Peterborough was in town yesterday, and states that the game between the Peterborough and Lindsay Juniors Wednesday night should be a good one, as both sevens are well balanced. However, no matter when Lindsay and Peterborough meet on the ice, or on the green, a good game can always be counted on.—Lindsay Warder.

Gordon Flavelle, the husky defenceman of the Lindsay juniors, has been under the weather lately with a touch of la grippe. It is expected, however, that he will be on hand tomorrow night. This is exactly what happened last season, when Flavelle caught a bad cold and was forced to remain out of the game.—Lindsay Warder.

ABUSE CANADIAN PRISONERS

Ordered to Work in Mines.

Those Who Refuse Are Locked Up—Germans Fired on Red Cross Detachment.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Nearly a hundred British subjects arrived here a few days ago from Germany. Among them were two Canadian soldiers, Privates Walsh and Carr.

"On April 26," said Carr, "we were in two motor ambulances approaching our trenches in the direction of St. Julien. There had been some heavy fighting, following a German poison gas attack. German star shells were lighting up the front, so that our Red Cross could be clearly seen, yet the Germans opened fire on us. Of our party of eight, one escaped, two of us were captured, and the remainder, I believe, were killed.

Brutal Captors.

"When we asked the Germans why they fired on us, they replied that the British sometimes used ambulances to bring munitions to the trenches. Our captors treated us well, but when we were taken back to the main part we had a very rough experience. Though wounded, I was struck in the face by one of our guards. We were hurried on to Roulers, forced to march along by the point of the bayonet. Those who lingered, helping along the wounded, had Uhlans back their horses on them.

Canadians Rebel.

"We were sent to Giessen, where there were six hundred Canadians. Conditions there are not much better than they were. Our chief trouble has been punishments inflicted on our men because they will not work in the mines for the Germans. Fifteen are now in prison, and have been for three months for refusing to work there."

Inefficient Service.

Tailor—The postal service is in a wretched condition.

Friend—Never noticed it.

Tailor—Well, I have. During last month I posted one hundred and eighty statements of accounts, with requests for immediate payment, and, so far as I can learn, not more than two of my customers received their letters.

WENT BUTTONLESS 13 YEARS, HE TELLS COURT

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 12.—Buttonless, coat, buttonless shirts—in fact, all of his wearing apparel buttonless—ruined the social career of J. Dallas Stewart, a prosperous resident of exclusive Sewickley, according to the story he told Judge Kennedy in Desertion Court. Stewart was arrested on his wife's charge of desertion.

"In thirteen years she only sewed three buttons on my clothes," said Stewart, telling his woes to the court. "How can a man keep up appearances when he had to use toothpicks, matches, safety pins, lead pencils, and bits of string to hold his trousers up and his garments together?"

"Pay your wife $10 a week and get patent steel buttons in the future," was Judge Kennedy's solution.

GERMAN PRISONERS HAVE THEIR HYMN OF HATE

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Deutsche Tageszeitung prints a new "hymn of hate," of which the following is a translation:

One day is like the other, and every day is grey; each day is full of fog and every draught is cutting.

There is no fire on the hearth, there is no glow in any stove.

We warm ourselves with internal angle; we warm ourselves with rage, for outside our walls there is loud rejoicing, and many a golden palace is being built on false victories.

They revile us with words, they spit in our faces, we suspect the truth, however, and do not believe what they say.

We suspect that the German battle cry has long been resounding through Russia, that our comrades are gaining victories and we are not with them.

The thunder of our cannon—which is the German tempest—penetrates thick walls, and reaches us in our dungeon.

We fear, for we believe that it is so we see it as clear as daylight, Germany's sun of triumph breaking through the enemy passes!

We clench our fists savagely, and wish we were there.

In vain! They tore us from our ships to bring us here, every beat of our hearts cried vainly for home, and how hunger and thirst are reducing us day by day.

We lie here like beggars, in the frost, with open doors. We may not fight for Germany we only starve for her!

But hark! That is the sound of propellers traveling inland along the course of the Thames!

May every tomb hit you, accursed England, till England's factories are in ashes, and her palatial banks are mere heaps of ruins!

Each bomb will have said to you: "So we hate you."

And if the bombs fell on us, we should not complain, for that would mean an end to our torments, and would be preferable to an English court of law.

We should then die like other warriors, simultaneously with our enemies. Now, like the dogs, we feel only our adversaries' blows.

The others are dying in battle and their blood flows gloriously, while we are dying, without honor, of misery, hate and rage.

The new "hymn of hate" is written by George Von Kries.

Fortunately there is prompt relief in Dr. Hamilton's Pills which immediately relieve the system of all poisons and disease-producing matter.

Thousands have been so utterly depressed, so worn out as to be despondent, but Dr. Hamilton's Pills always cured them. "I can speak feelingly on the power of Dr. Hamilton's Pills," writes C. T. Fearman, of Kingston. "Last spring my blood was thin and weak, I was terribly run down, had awful headaches and a gnawing, empty feeling about my stomach, I couldn't sleep or work until I used Dr. Hamilton's Pills,—they did me a world of good." At all dealers in 25c. boxes.

Voice of The People

Editor of The Examiner:

No doubt the Patriotic League and the military people are anxious to do all they can to fill up the 83rd Battalion, but I can tell them that to talk to people at arm's length is not the way to do it. To fill up the battalion they must go right to the men as they do in other places. It is no easy task and it can be done by holding little meetings in town.

Yours,
Citizen.

CONSIDERED HIS HOME A HOTEL; IS DIVORCED

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12.—Gretchen E. Best was granted a divorce by Judge Graham from Otto Best, a Los Angeles chemist, because he considered his home a hotel and his wife an unnecessary incumbrance.

"That seems to be a prevailing weakness nowadays," said Judge Graham. "Too many men consider their homes merely a place to sleep and eat and their wives as servants, and if the wives refuse to be merely servants then they are considered nuisances."

AYOTTE—COUGHLIN.

COLLINS—COUGHLIN.

A pretty double wedding was celebrated this morning at St. Joseph's church, Douro, when Miss Margaret E. Coughlin was united in marriage to Mr. Fred J. Collins of Peterborough, and her sister, Miss Veronica Coughlin, was married to Mr. Joseph Ayotte of Young's Point. The nuptial mass was celebrated by Rev. Father McGuire. Mr. and Mrs. Collins were married first, the bride being attended by her sister, Miss Caroline Sweeney, and Sergeant Herbert O'Heron of Peterborough, was the best man. Mr. and Mrs. Ayotte were then attended by Mr. and Mrs. Collins.

The double ceremony was witnessed by many friends of the young people from Peterborough, Young's Point, Douro and other sections. Upon retiring from the church wedding breakfast was served at the bride's home about two miles north of St. Joseph's Church.

SHEARER—SHARP.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. William Sharp, Westwood, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday, Jan. 5th, when their youngest daughter, Elizabeth Florence, was united in marriage to Mr. Archie Shearer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Shearer of Otonabee. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. McEachern, and Miss Vina Shearer played the wedding march.

The bride, who was unattended, was given away by her father, and was dressed in ivory silk with chiffon tunic and wore the customary veil.

The young couple left on the evening train for points west, and on their return will reside in Otonabee.

SULLIVAN—O'GRADY.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Joseph's Church, Douro, on Tuesday, Jan. 11, by Rev. Father McGuire, when Mary Josephine, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs Edward Sullivan, was united in marriage to Mr. Patrick O'Grady, son of Mr. David O'Grady.

The bride was becomingly attired in a dress of navy blue poplin, with black baby-lamb coat and black picture hat. She was attended by her sister, Loretto, while the groom's attendant was William O'Leary.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to the immediate friends and relatives, the bride and groom leaving for their new home amid a host of good wishes for their future welfare.

FIND HEIRESS WORKING AS KITCHEN MAID

Found in Farmer's Household, Says She Prefers Work to Ease and Objects to Returning Home.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—In the person of a blond, curly-haired girl employed as a servant by a Wisconsin farmer detectives found the solution of the disappearance of Emma Bollongino, for whom the river and lake had been dragged and a countrywide search extending for more than a year had been made without avail.

The curly haired girl is Emma. Though at first she stoutly denied her identity, she became hysterical when her mother, Mrs. Anna Bollongino, confronted her, then confessed. Even then, however, the girl refused to return to her Chicago home until the farmer had been persuaded to discharge her. She will be brought back by her mother.

Preferred Work to Wealth.

Emma, who is fourteen years old, was tired of having to go to school and leading an idle life, she explained. Her mother had inherited about $80,000, but the girl had no desire for the luxuries such a fortune afforded. She wanted to work and earn her living. So she ran away.

The disappearance of Emma Bollongino on October 17, 1914, caused a sensation. Various theories were advanced. One had it that the girl had been kidnapped by Black Hand operators and slain when a demand for ransom money was refused.

Contented on Farm.

The river and lake were dragged for her body. Acting on another theory that she had run away to become a motion picture actress, studios all over the country were searched. But Emma apparently had no such aspirations. She wanted to do some hard work.

After walking out of her home that eventful afternoon in October the girl boarded a train for Milwaukee, where she applied at the Y.M.C.A. for employment, giving the name of Emma Smith. She was sent to the home of John Sleep, formerly sheriff of Waukesha County, Wisconsin, near Merton, where she got a position as maid of all work. She has filled this position in perfect contentment ever since.

Sleep received word from an unknown source last week that his housemaid was Emma Bollongino. He went to Milwaukee and obtained a picture of the missing girl, which he compared with his employe, then notified the Chicago police.

The child could hum a tune when he was two years old, and plays a kettle drum like a veteran.

Thin Folks Who Want to Get Fat

Increase in Weight Ten Pounds or More

"I'd certainly give most anything to be able to fat up a few pounds and stay that way," declares every excessively thin man or woman. Such a result is not impossible, despite past failures. Most thin people are victims of malnutrition, a condition which prevents the fatty elements of food from being taken up by the blood as they are, when the powers of nutrition are normal. Instead of getting into the blood, much of the fat and flesh producing elements stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste.

To correct this condition and to produce a healthy, normal, amount of fat, the nutritive processes must be artificially supplied with the power which nature has denied them. This can probably best be accomplished by eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is a careful combination of six splendid assimilative agents. Taken with meals they mix with the food to turn the sugars and starches of what you have eaten into rich, ripe, nourishment for the tissues and blood, and its rapid effect has been in many cases reported remarkable. Reported gains of from ten to twenty-five pounds in a single month are by no means infrequent. Yet its action is perfectly natural and absolutely harmless. Sargol is sold by all druggists everywhere and every package contains a guarantee of weight increase or money back.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you send $1.00 to the National Laboratories, 74 St. Antoine St., Montreal, and a complete ten days' treatment will be sent you postpaid.

NOTE—Sargol is recommended only as a flesh builder and while excellent results in cases of nervous indigestion, etc., have been reported, care should be taken about using it unless a gain of weight is desired.

British Quit Gallipoli In a Storm That Tore Out Landing Piers

How The Last of The British Troops to Withdraw From Gallipoli During a Terrific Storm, Told In Report From Lt. General Sir Charles C. Munroe.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—How the last of the British troops to withdraw from Gallipoli were embarked during a storm that tore away piers and drove one vessel ashore, is told in an additional report from Lieutenant General Sir Charles C. Monroe made public here. The report says:

"The Turks attempted a heavy attack on our lines January 7, between 1:30 and 3 p.m.—Our trenches were continuously shelled, and from 3 to 4 p.m. the bombardment became intense. The Turks also opened a heavy musketry fire.

"At four o'clock they sprank two mines near the western bird cage and Fusilier bluff. A quarter of an hour later they fixed bayonets all along our front. Their officers were seen apparently endeavouring to make their men assault. They were successful in doing so only opposite Fifth avenue and Fusilier bluff.

"The Staffordshires completely repulsed an attack, and a large proportion of the Turks who attacked were killed or wounded. Our casualties were five officers and 130 men killed or wounded.

"Aeroplane reports show that the naval fire on the left bank was most accurate, and it is probable that the enemy suffered considerably.

"The night of the 7th was fine. The evacuation and operations were quietly and successfully continued. The 8th was fine, with the sea calm until after four p.m., when the weather suddenly grew worse. At eleven p.m. the wind had increased to thirty-five miles an hour.

"From midnight onward it was only just possible to use the piers and lighters, and impossible to carry out the programme of embarking the troops in destroyers alongside the sunken ships at West Beach owing to the connecting piers being washed away. The embarkation at Gully Beach became impossible. One lighter went ashore there and the remaining troops had to march to West Beach for embarkation.

"In spite of these difficulties, the programme at West Beach was completed by half-past two in the morning and the troops from Gully Beach and all the beach party had embarked by four o'clock.

"A hostile submarine was reported off Cape Helles about nine p.m. The Turkish artillery was practically silent the whole night until the stores were fired simultaneously by a time fuse after the evacuation was completed. The Turks then fired red lights all along the line and opened a heavy shelling on our beaches and second trenches. The red lights continued one and a half hours and the shelling until after daybreak.

"The French embarkations were carried out by their own navy, which also greatly assisted us by embarking some of our animals."

BEAVER RINK IS SOME ARENA

DOUBTS VALLEY, Jan. 11—Heartiest congratulations are extended to Mr. S. B. Carew, on his re-election as Councillor for the year 1915.

We are glad to see that Mr. Jas. Doube is able to be around again.

Mr. Wm. Howden, auctioneer, is making preparations to build a new barn.

On Friday evening the skating season re-opened on Beaver Rink and a goodly number of jolly young people gathered at the new Club House recently erected on the edge of the rink, and enjoyed a pleasant evening, the ice being keen and the atmosphere frosty (8 below). During the evening considerable discussion occurred in regard to a new rink called Bethel, an account of which appeared in the local press, and what interested everybody was "Where is it?" Search parties and observations could reveal nothing in the shape of ice, waiting-room, or even the appetizing odour of coffee, and were forced to use the popular European phrase, that it is "somewhere in Emily." Possibly it is as yet a castle in the air, and in due time will come down to earth. Now, Beaver Rink is no myth. It is situated just north of the big G.T.R. iron bridge and on the shore of Beaver Rink, a beautiful little stream which rises in the sunny knolls of Mt. Pleasant, and empties into Chemong Lake. It receives its name from the remains of many dams which were built by the beavers in ages long past. We take this opportunity to extend to every one, (including Bethel Rink) an invitation to Beaver Rink, to spend an evening at one of Canada's best national amusements.

Mr. F. Brien and bride of Ridgetown visited at the home of Mr. Wilfred Howden, recently.

Dr. Jackson Says "Don't Stir It."

He is the inventor of Dr. Jackson's Roman Meal, and if anyone in the world should know how it should be cooked, he is the one.

He says "Do not stir Roman Meal porridge while it is cooking." If you were to hear his lecture on this food, you would not stir it. There are three scientific reasons for not stirring it, too long to be stated here.

Roman meal positively relieves constipation and indigestion. Stirring porridge partly defeats this purpose, besides entirely changing the flavour and altogether robbing it of its deliciousness. Cook without stirring.

KAISER'S CONDITION IS REPORTED TO BE VERY GRAVE

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Amsterdam Correspondent of the Daily Express says the Kaiser's condition is grave, and there are rumours everywhere in Germany that he is dying.

The correspondent adds: "The Kaiser is confined to his private apartment and is nursed only by the Kaiserine," adding: "He is absolutely brokenhearted owing to the impending collapse of Germany's great military machine and the dangerous financial situation of the Empire."

Colour is given to reports that the Kaiser is near death by the publication of extravagant eulogies of the achievements of the Crown Prince in the German Press.

A despatch from Geneva to the Daily Express says the first operation on the Kaiser's throat was a failure and a second operation has been ordered.

VI.—JAKIE

[Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.]

WHEN Jakie Feinberg, at the age of thirteen, attained his religious majority, his father deemed it high time that he should pay for his board and lodging; hence Jakie was withdrawn from the Maugin Street school and instructed to seek a job. It proved to be an elusive matter, and every evening he returned to his father's home behind the delicatessen store on East Houston street with the seal of unsuccess on his chubby face.

"Vell?" his father interrogated. Sorrowfully Jakie shook his head.

"Vodt for a schmardt boy are you?" his father commented, and Jakie choked down the herring and potato which formed his evening meal, while his tears seasoned anew the pungent viands.

By the dawn of the fourth week Jakie had roamed the financial district over and canvassed every office in the skyscrapers of the neighborhood. "Ain't yer got narten for a young feller ter do?" was the burden of his inquiry, and a curt negative was the only answer.

At length he chanced upon the headquarters of the chocolate trust in the Algonquin building. The boy in the outer room was asleep with his head on the desk, and Jakie deemed it best not to disturb him. He tiptoed into another office, where a stenographer sat at her machine, plunged in the concluding chapters of a romantic novel. Thence he passed into a third room, in which an executive meeting was being held. Gathered around a long table were six directors whom Mr. Branscomb, the second vice president, was addressing with impassioned gestures.

"It is an outrage," he declared, "that these duties should have been levied on manufactured chocolate. The goods were raw material, as appears by the statements which I have here." He paused to rummage among the papers on the table just as Jakie opened the door. "Boy," he said sharply, "tell Miss Doty to give you those customs statements."

Mr. Branscomb was totally wrapped up in his argument and had no eyes for the identification of office boys, while the faculty of obedience was strong in Jakie. He turned on his heel without a word.

"Miss Doty," he cried, "dey want dem customs statements."

Mechanically and without lifting her glance from the absorbing page she handed Jakie some yellow sheets of paper, which he delivered forthwith to Mr. Branscomb. In the meantime another matter had been mooted, and Jakie stood with the papers in his hands for some moments, until there was a lull in the general conversation.

"Go over to 200 Exchange place," said one of the directors, "and ask Mr. Eckhardt if he will be good enough to step around for a few moments."

Jakie laid the statements on the desk and was off in a flash. He returned a few minutes later, before the legitimate incumbent whose duties he had usurped had awakened from his nap, and repaired immediately to the directors' room.

"He ain't in, sir," he announced. Miss Doty, who had concluded the last exciting chapter of her novel, followed him into the room and arrived in time to hear him deliver his message.

"Leggo," Jakie cried; "I'm weikin' here!"

"All right," Mr. Branscomb said; "get Henry Carr on the phone."

Miss Doty preceded him from the room, and as soon as he crossed the threshold she clutched him by the shoulder.

"What are you doing here?" she asked.

"Leggo," Jakie cried; "I'm weikin' here!"

"Since when?"

"De big guy gimme de job," he replied.

"Who's that?" she continued. "Mr. Branscomb?"

"Yeh," said Jakie. "Mr. Branscomb. Dat's de wan."

"When did all this happen?" Miss Doty insisted.

"Just now!" Jakie cried, and in the midst of a further colloquy Mr. Branscomb burst out of the directors' room.

"Well," he demanded, "why don't you get Mr. Carr on the wire?" Miss Doty rushed to obey her employer, who held out 50 cents to Jakie.

"Go downstairs and get me three cigars," he said. "Tell the man they're for me. He'll know."

Jakie took the money and descended to the lower hall.

"Gimme tree seegars for Mr. Branscomb," he said to the man behind the counter. The tobacconist handed him three cigars with elaborate gold bands and pocketed the fifty cent piece which Jakie placed on top of the showcase. Jakie held the cigars gingerly in his left hand, but made no movement toward leaving.

"What are you waiting for?" the man asked.

Jakie laughed raucously. "Say," he said, "wot yer tryin' ter do, kid me? Don't I get no change?"

"You certainly do not," the salesman replied emphatically.

"G'wan. I give yer half a dollar, didn't I?" Jakie rejoined. "Seegars don't cost t'ree for 50 cents."

"These do," said the salesman.

"C'mars, now," Jakie coaxed. "Cough up dat t'irty-five cents. It ain't mine, honest. It belongs ter de bawss."

The cigar man came suddenly from behind the counter. "You get right out of this," he cried, "or I'll fan your breeches!"

Jakie ran up the hall. "Aw right fer youse, yer fat slob!" he cried. "I'll tell Mr. Branscomb on yer."

"Here, what's all this about?" said a voice at his elbow. It was Mr. Branscomb himself who spoke.

Jakie turned quickly. "Here's yer seegars, Mr. Branscomb," he said, "an' dat big stuff dere is tryin' ter hold out t'irty-five cents on yer."

"They're the usual kind," the salesman protested, "and there isn't any change."

"Who, of course am," Mr. Branscomb replied. "And say, young man, what are you doing around my office anyway?"

Jakie stared at his new employer in grieved astonishment. "Why," he gasped, "I'm workin' for youse, Mr. Branscomb, ain't I?"

"Are you?" Mr. Branscomb commented dryly. "And pray who hired you?"

This was too much for Jakie, who saw his new job melting into thin air, and he gulped once or twice in an effort to stem the gathering tears.

Mr. Branscomb placed his arm around the lad's shoulders. "Let's go upstairs," he said, "and talk it over."

They entered the elevator and repaired once more to the executive offices of the National Chocolate and Cocoa company. Miss Doty and the legitimate incumbent both disclaimed knowledge as to the time or manner of Jakie's advent, and after a rigid examination into his antecedents he found himself employed as assistant office boy at the generous stipend of $4 a week.

When Jakie returned to his delicatessen home that evening his face was wreathed in so wide a smile that the elder Feinberg stopped midway in the slicing of a smoked tongue. "Might you got a job?" his father and mother inquired with one voice. Jakie nodded ecstatically.

"Mommer," cried the elder Feinberg, seizing link by link a chain of frankfurters, "you should fry sahm wurst for de boy's suppairs." And he cut off the last two sausages with a blow of his knife that blended pride and generosity in one eloquent sweep.

Undoubtedly Miss Doty constituted her own ideal of a well dressed woman. Everything about her person betokened a superlative taste, from the broad bows on her shoes to the last undulation of her pompadour, which was a wonder of size and construction. Moreover, she demanded and received from every adjacent masculine eye the attention that a judicious use of the rouge pot and powder puff will attract.

Now, there was just enough Irish in James Walsh, the legitimate incumbent—his mother was Wicklow and his father Red Kerry—to give him a certain way with the ladies, and he made 5 cents' worth of milk chocolate go the length of a pound of candy with Miss Doty. Besides, Jimmie was old for his age, and his age was old for his job.

But Jakie represented a long line of ancestry whose interest in womankind was purely academic, and in form a disposition to discuss in the abstract the Talmudical and Mosaic laws of marriage and divorce. If he speculated at all on her raiment it was as to its cost, not its beauty, and her pompadour passed him by unnoticed. As for milk chocolate, his weekly allowance of 15 cents forbade such extravagance even had the thought of them occurred to him.

This at least was the situation during the first few weeks of Jakie's employment. His duties were neither arduous nor exacting, and he performed them all and most of James Walsh's cheerfully and promptly. In fact, after Jakie's advent there was little for the office boy in chief to do but flirt with Miss Doty and sleep, for which he had an insatiable appetite.

One afternoon Jakie returned from his lunch to find Miss Doty in the arms of the sixteen-year-old James Walsh. There was but one construction to be placed on the matter, and Jakie saw his duty clear. He walked boldly up to the abashed couple.

"I congradulate youse both," he said gravely and proffered his hand to Miss Doty. Marrying and giving in marriage is so common an occurrence on the east side that the proper phrase rose blithely to Jakie's lips. Besides, he knew the symptoms, for on summer nights the tenement stoops of Maugin street are crowded with just such scenes, ever greeted with, "I congradulate youse both," and concluding with a large wedding in a public hall.

The conventional reply of the engaged couple is a blushing thanks, pronounced "t'anks," but in this case, while Miss Doty supplied the blush, James Walsh omitted the reply, and it was far from conventional.

"Yer dirty, sneakin' kike," he growled, "come outside and I'll knock yer block off!"

HOW TO FURNISH THE "DINING CAR" KITCHEN

(By MME. MAISON)

In olden times a large kitchen was considered an essential by the housewife, but to-day what one young matron calls a dining car kitchen is considered ample for a small family and one just a tiny bit bigger will do for the average Canadian household.

In a modern apartment, cook was showing off her domain to a visitor, and, sitting on a white enameled stool reached to the oven door with one hand and the table on which she was making cookies with the other; not a step taken and no unnecessary steps wasted.

White Enamel Good.

If one may have the planning of this all important room, three essentials must be considered, a window over the sink, lights over it and plenty of closet space. A natural varnish or stain may be used or many prefer white enamel woodwork, as it is very easily cleaned with a mild soap and warm water, wiping dry with a soft cloth. There are many excellent cabinets on the market, but the wisest choice is one of steel.

If space will not allow one of these admirably arranged contrivances have one or two drawers in the built-in cupboard, zinc-lined, for keeping bread, cake and sugar. Kitchen tables covered with zinc or glass or even white oilcloth have a concealed molding board with receptables for flour beneath.

What one spends on equipping a kitchen depends entirely on the state of the pocketbook; a young matron who had taken a course in domestic science, said she would begin furnishing her new home with the kitchen. First, the floor, which was or ordinary wood and meant hours of scrubbing, was covered with a good quality of inlaid linoleum, the pattern was neat, blue and white squares, the walls were done in a heavy wash paper that comes specially for both rooms and kitchens. There are pleasing designs in blues, greens and pale yellows.

A good way to decorate a kitchen is to have the walls painted. A light color is always preferable, as the one object is to keep the place cheerful and apartment kitchens are very often dark. A small shelf for holding cookbooks (bound in white oilcloth) will be a convenience with space for a plain little clock.

Selecting Utensils.

In summer a window box placed on the outside sill will be a much appreciated attention by the cook. When it comes to making a selection of utensils there is a diversity of opinion; some swear by aluminum, others will use nothing but a certain brand of enameled ware; of the latter one may select blue, brown, gray or green, as best blends with the color scheme carried out in the kitchen.

Racks holding an assortment of brushes and one of spoons are a labor-saving device, as are the assorted sizes of earthenware and glass jars for holding spices, rice, tea, coffee, etc.

Just a word of advice to the housewife who is furnishing her kitchen for the first time. Do not get too much at once, buy the essentials and add whatever you need as you find its necessity. In this way you will not overstock.

Don't Merely "Stop" a Cough

Stop the Thing that Causes It and the Cough will Stop Itself

A cough is really one of our best friends. It warns us that there is inflammation or obstruction in a dangerous place. Therefore, when you get a bad cough don't proceed to dose yourself with a lot of drugs that merely "stop" the cough temporarily by deadening the throat nerves. Treat the cause—heal the inflamed membranes. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make an obstinate cough vanish more quickly than you ever thought possible.

Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) in a 16-ounce bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you 16 ounces of the most pleasant and effective remedy you ever used, at a cost of only 54 cents. No bother to prepare. Full directions with Pinex.

It heals the inflamed membranes so quickly and promptly that you wonder how it does it. Also loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

SERBS LOST MORE THAN HALF OF ARMIES

In writing about the losses suffered by the Serbians the corresponden of Heer and Politik gives some interesting figures.

"When the Teutonic offensive began the Serbians had four armies of 75,000 men each," he writes. "The First Serbian Army, under General Misitsch lost 15,000 men, who were taken prisoners, and 200 cannon. In killed and wounded General Misitch lost 8,000 men. This was only in the first two weeks, and since then his losses have been 40,000 men killed and wounded. Many of his men are known to have discarded their uniforms at an opportune moment and returned to their homes.

"The second Serbian Army, commanded by General Bojeuritsch, suffered even heavier losses, as this force was attacked simultaneously on three sides. In November this general lost 50,000 men killed, wounded and prisoners.

"The Third Serbian Army, under General Stepanowitsch, lost most of its guns, but the losses in men were only 35,000.

"The Fourth Serbian Army, which was hastily mobilized after the beginning of the offensive, and was commanded by General Kristitsch, did not lose so many men, as it was not in many engagements.

"The whole Serbian army now has from 120,000 to 150,000 men, scarcely half of the original army, and a large number of these are unfit for any further campaign owing to lack of guns and ammunition."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Desperate Situation

BY EUNICE BLAKE

At an Episcopal mission on the Chinese coast situated far from any white settlement the Rev. Mr. Waterman, a lean and hungry looking bachelor of forty-five, went to the superintendent, Mr. Blanchard, and said:

"I have been laboring in this field now for twenty years and have never been associated with any but Chinese during that time save only my co-workers. I must resign and go to another field."

Mr. Blanchard, unwilling to lose so valuable an assistant, said:

"Supposing, brother, a companion could be given you—a wife to labor with you and cheer you."

Mr. Waterman thought in that case that he could stand it awhile longer, but he didn't know where the wife was to come from. There were only married white women at the station, and he would not marry a heathen Chinese woman. Mr. Blanchard told him that there were women without husbands in civilized lands who might be induced to come out and marry a clergyman.

A few months after this conversation the Rev. Mr. Southgate, twenty-five years old and a bachelor, was standing on the dock belonging to the station awaiting the coming of a ship that appeared to the eastward. He was so homesick that anything coming from a Christian land interested him, and his object in being on the dock was to see a ship that had come from the land he loved.

When the ship was docked and the gangplank in position the only woman who came down it was not only white, but comely. She seemed much cast down. Mr. Southgate approached her, raised his hat and asked if he could do anything for her.

"I have some business with the Rev. Mr. Waterman," she said, "but I don't wish to go directly to his house. Can you direct me to a place where I can lodge temporarily?"

"Let me take that bag," was the reply, "and the other things. I will think of some place for you while we are walking to the station. There is not much in the way of accommodation here. How long will you need a lodging place?"

"That I can't say. Do you know Mr. Waterman?"

"Oh, yes, very well."

"What kind of a person is he?"

"A very excellent man indeed."

"Is he good looking?"

"Oh, no. Mr. Waterman is not good looking."

"How old is he?"

"Between forty-five and fifty."

"Light or dark?"

"Neither. He has red hair and many freckles."

The young woman stopped. Mr. Southgate looked at her inquiringly.

"I'm going back on the ship," she said.

"Going back on the ship?"

"Yes"—sobbing—"I came out here to marry Mr. Waterman, not knowing anything about him. From what you say he must be frightful."

There was a long silence, during which the young woman wept.

"You are sure you wouldn't marry Mr. Waterman?"

"Yes, I am. I'll jump in the sea first. I have nothing to go back to and am desperate. Perhaps the best thing I can do is to drown myself."

"Oh, dear, no! You needn't do that. Would you be contented to remain here as the wife of a man about my age?"

"Perhaps," was the indefinite reply.

"I wouldn't mind helping you out; that is, if you would permit me."

There was no reply to this, but the sobs were less frequent.

"If you're going to take me," continued Mr. Southgate, "it might be less embarrassing for you to marry me before you see Mr. Waterman."

"Perhaps it would."

"But there must be some reason given. It must be reported as a mistake."

"You might tell me you are Mr. Waterman."

"That would be untrue."

"I have never told a lie, but I have never been placed in such a position before. I will say that I forgot the name; that I thought it was Southgate."

"There comes Waterman, now."

"Oh, heavens!"

"Let us turn down this walk."

The sight of Mr. Waterman struck the poor girl with terror. She clung to her escort and trembled. They met a young clergyman, and Southgate said to him:

"Marbury, got anything to do just now?"

"Nothing particular."

"Go to the chapel; I wish you to do something very particular."

Marbury consented and in a few minutes was joined by the couple.

"Marry us," said Southgate.

"Marry you!"

"Yes. This young lady came out here on a venture to marry old Waterman. I'm her only hope."

The marriage ceremony was performed and the two were made one. When it was over Southgate said to Marbury: "Go to Blanchard and tell him. Get him to fix it up with Waterman, that's a good fellow."

"I'll do it. Are there any more like you coming?" he asked the bride.

She smiled and said, "No, I hope not for your sakes."

Mr. Blanchard fixed the matter by sending Mr. Waterman to civilization to find a wife for himself.

USE COCOANUT OIL FOR WASHING HAIR

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless) is much better than the most expensive soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

Tobacco Heart
CURED BY
Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Tobacco does not seem to affect all alike. Many men enjoy their smoke, live to a good old age, and apparently suffer no ill effects from the use of the weed.

There are others, though, on whose heart and nervous system tobacco produces the most serious results.

It causes palpitation, pain in the heart and irregularity of its beat, makes the hands tremble, sets the nerves on edge, and the breath becomes short.

To counteract this demoralizing influence on the heart and nerves there is no remedy that equals Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

They make the heart beat strong and steady, restore tone and vigor to the nerves, and remove all the evil results caused by the tobacco.

Mr. Nelson Young, Brampton, Ont., writes: "I have had, up to about a month ago, a very weak heart, which I suppose came from smoking cigarettes. When I heard of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills as a cure, I immediately gave up smoking, and started using them. It does you justice to be the founder of such a great remedy. They made me feel like a new man."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Answer This!

When you have indigestion you never take a long medicine. Why, then, when you have a cough, a cold or bronchitis (lung troubles) do you swallow things down into your stomach? It is a mistake, and the Peps treatment for colds, bronchitis and asthma, etc., corrects this mistake. Peps are tablets made up of Pine extracts and medicinal essences, which when put into the mouth turn into healing vapors. These are breathed down direct to the lungs, throat and bronchial tubes—not swallowed down to the stomach, which is not ailing.

On the face of it, is not this treatment of coughs and colds more rational than the old-fashioned way? Peps are recommended by doctors, by nurses, by people in authority everywhere, who once having tried this new treatment will never go back to the old form. We could send you books of testimonials, if you would like to read them, but one trial of Peps will give you more personal satisfaction than lots of reading about what others say. 50c. box, at druggists and stores. Remember the name—just four letters—

Peps

False modesty will not look at naked truth, unless it is draped in fig-leaves.

Thick lips denote a coarse, amorous disposition. Thin, fine lips, having very little red showing, denote cruel, hard nature, one lacking in warmth and affection. Moderately full lips are the best, and they should be moist, and not dry and hard.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED
SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves, and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. To-day we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

(Sworn before me as correct this 6th day of January, 1915. — Wm. Hawkins, Sen. Justice of the Peace).

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. For sale at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited Toronto.

ALL CHILDREN LOVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Give It When Feverish, Cross, Bilious, for Bad Breath or Sour Stomach

Look at the tongue, Mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, diver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food, and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this harmless "fruit laxative"; they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs" which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S APRON.

By Anabel Worthington.

7356

While the apron is not a very ornamental garment it has the advantage of being a very necessary one. In addition it is one which should be varied according to the work in hand and therefore we may have many of them in many different styles if we would enjoy their greatest benefit.

The example selected for our illustration is one of the novelties, which shows a low waistline marked by a wide, flat belt, hanging loosely around the figure.

The front and back of the apron are plain, with a somewhat circular cut at the lower edge. The short sleeves are of the raglan type and extend to the neck edge, forming a small yoke on the shoulder. The neck is of round outline and is finished with a small, flat collar. The edges of the sleeves are trimmed with bands of contrasting material or of ribbon.

There is a short opening down the back of the apron, but it does not pass the waistline, so that the lower portion of the garment is closed to the hem.

If this garment is to serve as a work apron it is best to make it of gingham or other wash fabric, but if it is to serve as a bungalow dress or working dress it may be of brilliantine or even of cashmere.

The apron pattern, No. 7356, is cut in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires 5⅝ yards of 27 inch material, with 1½ yards of 27 inch contrasting goods to trim as shown.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Address—The Examiner Pattern Service, The Examiner, Peterborough.

TWO STRANGE CASES OF PERSONS DISAPPEARING STILL UNSOLVED

ROCHESTER, Jan. 11.—Although in both cases the family and the police have done all that they could in the way of searching, nothing has been heard from either of two persons who disappeared from their homes about a month ago.

Mrs. Alda B. Smith, wife of Walter Smith, left her home on December 3. She had been married only four months and her home life had been happy. She had made no preparations for a journey, leaving her best clothes behind and not taking much money with her. From that time nothing has been seen or heard of her.

An equally mysterious case is that of William B. Garlick, 62 years old, who lived with his son, Dr. Frederick Garlick, at 778 Main street East. Mr. Garlick disappeared on December 8 and has not been heard of since.

Coughed Almost All Night

WITH THAT DRY, TICKLING SENSATION IN HER THROAT.

How many people have lost a good night's sleep by that nasty tickling sensation in the throat?

The dry, hard cough keeps you awake, and when you get up in the morning you feel as if you had had no rest at all.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is a specific for just this kind of a cough, as it is composed of the most soothing and healing expectorant herbs, roots and barks known to medical science.

Mrs. Joseph Hiley, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup did for me. I took a severe cold, and coughed almost all night with that dry, tickling sensation in my throat. The first bottle did me so much good I thought I would try the second one, and I am pleased to say "Dr. Wood's" resulted in a complete cure."

There is nothing that can take the place of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. There is nothing "just as good."

"Dr. Wood's" has been on the market for the past twenty-five years.

It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

Manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The dairy industry of Canada has netted the farmers over fifty-five and a half million dollars during the past year. Let us take off our hats to Mrs. Cow.

Toronto butter dealers report a larger production this year than in former years at this time, owing to higher prices, the quotation being fully four cents ahead of 1915 and 1914. As a result cream has advanced until buyers in Toronto are now paying 34c per pound of butter fat f.o.b. shipping point. Cheese will likely act in sympathy. Indeed the price is now 19 cents. Another big army order has been reported and export trade is firm and strong.

The egg season has started in with a rush. Evidently Canadian roosters are firm believers in Patriotism and Production. Prices for newlaids are down from 3 to 5c per dozen on the Toronto market.

Poultry has eased off a little after the heavy Christmas demand.

Cereal wheat is going up in price steadily, and is selling at $1.04 to $1.06 per bus. in Toronto this week.

Winnipeg No. 1 Northern is bringing $1.12 per bushel.

Oats at Toronto are 40 to 43 cents, barley 56 to 60, rye 80 to 85, buckwheat 76 to 78 and peas $1.50 to $1.70 per bushel.

Flour prices, on the outside, fluctuate from week to week. Manitoba flour is now quoted at $6.80 in bags.

Apple prices on the outside have declined, and the poor condition in which some Canadian apples are received in England will result in our export trade dwindling down.

Potatoes are holding their own. The extremely cold weather will prevent importing to a great extent, during which time we may not expect much drop. When spring comes we may look for a decline for, according to the crop, there must be a large quantity in reserve.

SOUTH SEA NATIVES CONTRIBUTE TO FUND

A remarkable display of native South Sea pageantry was seen in this town, the capital of the British crown colony, recently on a day named for raising funds for the South Sea Islanders wounded in the British army.

Fijians, Tongans, Samoans, Solomon Islanders, Chinese and Hindus, together with whites, were in the parade. A thousand Fijians were dressed as in the old days of the tribal wars. Each man had his face blackened and he carried a war club or other native weapon. The costume consisted of a kilt of green and yellow grass intertwined with tape, the native cloth made from bark, painted and lined by the Fijian women. Some of the men wore huge bows of tapa about their waists. The upper portion of their bodies, however, was bare, and their powerful muscles glistened in the tropical sun. The Solomon Islanders were garbed more vividly in glaring reds and brilliant blues.

After the parade the natives spread a mat upon the ground and threw upon it their contributions to the fund—coins, yams, cocoanuts, live poultry, tapa and other things. The proceeds in all amounted to about $6,000 cash.

Five hundred Fijians danced to the beating of a wooden drum or tali and a barbaric chant. They went through a warlike pantomime in which clubs were brandished and feet were stamped in rapid but complete unison. Then the pantomime came to an abrupt end with a wild yell.

The dance of the Solomn Islanders was even more weird. The music was produced by reed instruments and the musicians wore uncanny disguises, of which long shaggy hair, like that of the witch doctor, was a feature. Each dancer carried a curious swan-like object painted with characters like Egyptian hieroglyphics.

The Tokelau Islanders gave a spear dance. Two lines of men facing each other challenged each to combat and began a series of evolutions so suggestive of their actually thirsting for blood that Takelau women rushed up to the actors and stopped the dance. The men then divested themselves of their grass and tapa armor and, wrapping themselves in mats, sang a number of native songs.

There are old men who sit dreaming in the sun,
Waiting and wondering until their day
is done;
Not caring then how the chain is wrought,
That holds them but how ease can be bought.

CIGARETTE'S SWAN SONG IN AUSTRIA

The swan song of the last cigarette has been sung in Austria. In the cigar shops of Vienna, Prague, Budapest and other cities the cases that formerly held cigarettes now are pathetically empty. This is due to the fact that imports of cigarettes and cigarette tobacco long have been stopped and the quantity that remained on hand was bought up to be sent to the soldiers at the front. As a consequence the slaves of the weed are suffering considerably.

In Prague the last cigarette obtainable was smoked by a habitue of one of the well known coffee houses while his companions surrounded him and sang the swan song from "Lohengrin." Dealers in Austria are making arrangements to import cigarettes from Turkey, but the railroads at present are so congested carrying supplies and ammunition that the chances of getting any cigarettes through are very slim for some time to come.

18 MEN 3 DAYS TAKING SICK MAN 20 MILES.

REDDING, Cal., Jan. 11.—Sixteen men, nine horses and seven dogs were three days in conveying Adrian Bridge, superintendent of the Ballibokka Club on the McCloud River, over mountain trails a distance of twenty miles, to the home of his parents, Captain and Mrs. A. G. Bridge, at Windham Ferry. The trails were so narrow in places that only two men could take hold of the stretcher on which lay the superintendent seriously ill, weak and exhausted.

The ill man stood the trip well, but those who took part in the strange cavalcade were exhausted when their task was done.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts, which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Surprise Attack By Germans Resulted in Complete Failure

Huns Attemptsd Assault in Great Force But Were Hurled Back With Heavy Losses---Gas Attacks Also Resulted in Failure---Naval Noose Around Germany's Neck is to Be Tightened.

CANADIAN PARLIAMENT OPENED TO-DAY

PARIS, Jan. 13.—The Germans in great force attempted a surprise attack against our positions between the Somme and Avre Rivers last night, but were hurled back with heavy losses, leaving scores of dead and wounded between the trenches. Lighter attacks have also been made in Champagne. Yesterday and this morning, in various sectors, the enemy used poisonous gases, which, however, were blown back to the German lines by a sudden change of the wind.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Anglo-French troops from Gallipoli are being landed at Salonica to reinforce General Sarail's army, according to Sofia despatches to-day.

The Bulgarian authorities estimate that 250,000 Anglo-French forces are now in Greece, and that more than 300,000 will be concentrated between Salonica and the Greek border before the end of another week.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The National Federation of Miners to-day voted to postpone action on the proposal to call a national strike against conscription until after the compulsion bill has finally passed Parliament. District reports, however, showed overwhelming majorities against the conscription measure.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Probably before the week is over there will be developments of prime importance in the world war, directly affecting all neutral powers. First and foremost, the policy of starving Germany economically and otherwise, as recently enunciated by the Right Hon. Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, will be carried to a further extent than has hitherto been found possible, in view of the necessity of reconciling it with the preservation of neutral interests. In other words, the naval noose around Germany's neck will be tightened to the point of strangulation to further prevent supplies reaching Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Duke of Albany and Saxe Cobourg Gotha, whom the Commons wants expelled from the Lords, is a cousin of King George.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The National Federation of Miners, the strongest labour union in the United Kingdom, this evening voted unanimously to oppose the Government's Conscription Bill.

The delegates, however, refused to act on the proposal that a national strike be called at once in protest against the compulsion measure. Instead, a substitute resolution was adopted, authorizing the Executive Committee to call another conference in the event of the Conscription Bill is passed, to take further steps. Delegates reported the sentiment overwhelmingly against conscription in every district.

SALONICA, Greece, Jan. 13.—An important railroad bridge over the Struma River at Demirhissar has been blown up by the French engineers as a precautionary measure.

An attack by the Teutonic Allies on the Entente positions has begun with the bombardment of the British lines in the Doiran zone, which lasted all Monday. The attacking troops include Bulgarians, Germans and Turks.

TOKIO, Jan. 13.—Count Okuma, the Japanese Premier, had a narrow escape from death early to-day at the hands of assassins. He was returning from the Royal Palace shortly after midnight, and was approaching his residence when two bombs were hurled at his automobile. The chauffeur speeded, and the bombs exploded just behind the auto. It is presume the assailants were German agents. They escaped.

TORONTO, Jan. 13.—A News Agency cable from London to-day says that the suggestion has been made in the British House of Commons that the Dukes of Cumberland and Albany, now fighting against Great Britain, be removed from the British peerage. Premier Asquith replied that this would be a slow process, as special legislation would be required, and the Government at present is not prepared to initiate it. The Duke of Albany years ago accepted the throne of Saxe Cobourg Gotha in Germany after the Duke of Connaught, now Governor-General of Canada, had refused it. This is the first intimation, however, that the Duke of Cumberland, who spent many years in America, is fighting against Britain. He is 71 years old. His son, the Duke of Brunswick, is the Kaiser's son-in-law.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The third war session of the twelfth Dominion Parliament and the sixth consecutive session since the last election was opened at three o'clock this afternoon with the usual ceremonies, including the reading of the speech from the Throne by His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught.

As was expected, the speech was rather brief, and was almost entirely confined to matters relating to the war. The usual references were made to trade conditions and the finances of the country; but there was no announcement as to important general legislation, except that the business of the session would be confined largely to war measures and to voting of war and other budgets.

The weather conditions were not favourable for the opening, the ground being covered with a sheet of ice, as the result of a heavy fall of rain last night. His Royal Highness was, as usual, accompanied by a mounted military escort, and was received at the buildings with a guard of honour.

The scene, although quite brilliant, was not on so large a scale as on other occasions. The presence of a number of officers in uniform lent war colour to the proceedings. His Royal Highness was attired in the uniform of a Field Marshal.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. ERNIE LAWRENCE

Was in Good Health at 11:30 Last Night But Was Dead Ten Minutes Later

The death occurred very suddenly last evening at her home, 431 Bethune street, of Mariese Lafave, wife of Mr. Ernest Lawrence.

The deceased lady was apparently in her usual health at 11.30 o'clock and 10 minutes later succumbed to heart failure. She had simple attacks previously, but they were not thought to be serious. She was 45 years of age on Christmas Day, having been born in Peterborough, her mother surviving her. The deceased also leaves her husband and one son, Harold, now at the front, two sons, William and Alfred both in Toronto and one daughter, Viola, at home.

Four brothers and three sisters also survive.

The funeral will take place Saturday morning at 9 o'clock from the family residence, 431 Bethune street, and proceed to St. Peter's Cathedral, and thence to the Roman Catholic cemetery for interment.

A report of the inspection will be submitted to the Council at the January session of the County Council, which will commence on Tuesday, January 25th.

Two members of the present Council are slated for the wardenship. They are B. Squire of Norwood, and M. Brown of Asphodel.

COLD SPRINGS S. S. ANNUAL MEETING

Reports of The Various Departments Presented and Officers Elected

The annual meeting of Coldsprings S. S. was held on Tuesday evening. The reports of the various departments were read and shows a steady progress in the work carried on during the year. There are 72 members on the roll with an average attendance of 63. The Sunday school contributed to the Red Cross fund $35.40, $20.00 to the Upper Canada Bible Society, $10.00 to county and provincial work, $6.25 to the Children's Aid Society, and $4.50 to temperance work. In addition to the above they have purchased a new organ.

After the reports had been read the election of officers for 1916 took place. Mr. Alex. Long acted as chairman. Miss Laura Bennett was again elected superintendent, Mr. Frank Kitney assistant supt. Miss Jane Huston recording secretary, Mr. Ernie Kitney secretary-treasurer, Miss Emma Welch, superintendent of the home class department, Miss F. Kitney organist, Mrs. W. Sedgwick assistant organist, Miss May Reid librarian, Mr. H. Peters assistant librarian, Mr. J. Pammett and Mr. Frank Kitney were again elected as a hall committee.

Westen Hanger Camp,
December 25, 1915.

Dear Brother Hugh,—As this is Christmas Day, and after a good big dinner of turkey, raisins, oranges, and cigarettes, I thought I would write to you, and let you know I am well, hoping this letter finds you the same.

I got your box of cigars O.K., and enjoyed a good smoke, as well as many others of my old pals around our little camp fire. We all join heartily in thanking you for your kind Christmas box.

Tell Will I got his parcel, also Hugh and thank them for me; I will write to them when I get a chance. I got a lot of nice Christmas presents. You may thank my friends for me, as I cannot write to them all; we certainly get put through our exercises over here.

Well, Hugh, I can't tell you all that happens over here, as you understand we are not allowed to do so. But if I live to see you again I will take a week and we will count up all the Huns that I have killed. Believe me, Hugh, that the Canadians are doing their bit over here. I have had several chats with wounded fellows from France.

I am going to Ireland, as I get a week's holidays before leaving for France. I will be in Ireland about the time you get my letter, perhaps before.

This brigade will leave for France soon; then, Hugh, it will be our turn to face the Huns, and do our bit, and it is the spirit of every man in our camp to save the old flag, or die.

Well, I think this is all the particulars for now. Write soon, from your

CANUCKS HAD A TOUCH OF THE GERMAN GAS

Lance Corp. Alan MacNab of Peterborough, Gives the Particulars of a Lively "Scrap Somewhere in the Mud"—Enemy Lost Heavily

GAS DID NO HARM

From Lance Corp. Alan MacNab of Peterborough, son of G. T. R. Station Agent A. MacNab, comes a most interesting letter. He is with the 2nd Canadian Divisional Cyclists in France, and the two boys referred to in the latter part of the letter are Lance Corp. Jarrett and Signaller Percy Gray of Peterborough:

Somewhere in the Mud, Dec. 21, '15.

Dear Folk at Home,—Your letter of Nov. 29th and parcel containing slippers, etc., came to hand, on 19th and 20th. You mentioned sending the parcel in your letter and I was quite surprised that it should arrive next day after the letter. It made good time, and the slippers are very acceptable, also the English coins.

We have been having some excitement along here for the last three days. It began with a heavy bombardment by the Bosches, at about 4.00 a.m. of 18th, and continued until about 5.30 a.m., when their infantry advanced under cover of a cloud of gas which they had loosed at 5.00 a.m.

Our artillery then opened up, dropping a curtain fire behind the advancing Huns, thus preventing their reserves from coming up. Our infantry and machine guns took care of the advancing line, driving it back with great loss.

This scrap occupied a front of about six miles from Y—— to D——, but none of the Canadian troops were engaged, the extreme right of the scrap just touching the extreme left of our flank. However we did suffer from the gas, which is certainly devilish stuff. It reached our post about 6.00 a.m., and started everyone coughing, while it made some sick. The strength was pretty well gone from it, however, so it did no real harm, although many of the boys got rid of their last meal in a hurry.

Apparently a general engagement was expected as ammunition and supplies were going up all day. One limber waggon slewed passing our corner, the hub of one wheel caught our sentry box, and nearly ruined our happy home.

During the morning we witnessed three air combats, but no machines were brought down. While one of these scraps was in progress, I heard the sizzle of a bullet, spotted where it struck the earth, and retrieved it after some digging. It proved to be a machine gun bullet, evidently from the aircraft above us. Shortly after a fragment of shell screeched past us, but we could not locate it. This was probably from our anti-aircraft guns, as they were very busy all about us at the time.

I was on duty with Buchanan at the time, and these missiles dropped within a few yards of our post.

The action of the two following days was merely our retaliation for Sunday's work, which took the form of a

MEETING OF THE YOUNG PEOPLE

A meeting will be held in St. Andrews' Lecture Room to-morrow, Friday evening, of all the young people of St. Andrew's Church, for the purpose of organizing the young people of the church. TWENTY-TWO DEATHS FROM TUBERCULOSIS

Deadly Disease is Responsible For High Death Rate—Good Work Accomplished by the Two District Nurses Under the Auspices of the Peterborough Health Association.

ANNUAL REPORTS

The report of the two districts nurses covering their work for the year 1915 proved interesting to the representative gathering that attended the annual meeting of the Peterboro Health Association last evening. Following the presentation of the reports a number of lantern slide views were shown depicting patients in various stages of illness and subsequent recovery. All the pictures shown represented cases actually treated by the district nurses within the confines of Peterborough. Those not actually in touch with the work would find it difficult to realize the destitute condition of some of the patients treated under the auspices of the Association. One picture showed a house that was condemned by Sanitary Inspector Spence and which was said to present a better exterior appearance than was the case inside. The pictures included scenes of the summer camp held at Jackson park while others suggested ways and means of converting porches into breathing places for the accommodation of patients.

Rev. Father Phalen commended the nurses for the admirable work they had performed and expressed the hope that the Association would continue the good work.

The report of Miss Edith Hamilton one of the two district nurses follows:

Report of Miss Edith Hamilton, General District Nurse.

I beg to submit the following report for the year 1915.

During the year 1915 there were one hundred and thirty-three patients:

Obstetric	98
Surgical	12
Medical	23
	133

which had to be visited once or twice a day, making one thousand seven hundred and thirty-six visits in all. Three hundred and forty were paid for by the patients themselves, making the sum collected Eigthy-five dollars. In most cases, the patients bought their own dressings, even the free ones being more than willing to do this, as they realized the great benefits they received, and thus the Health Association was saved a great deal of expense. The following dressings have been supplied by the Association for the free patients:—

20 yards Gauze.
15 pkgs. Absorbent cotton
1 yd. Adhesive Plaster
16 oz. Lysol.
32 oz. Tr. Green Soap.
Old Linen.

Donations.

The work has also been aided by the following donations:

Horlick's Malted Milk & Mellin's Food—Dr. Sutton.

Clothing and old linen—Mrs. Dunsford.

Quilts and Milk Tickets—Miss Dixon.

Also a supply of magazines for distribution among convalescents.

I have been called on eighteen times for night duty.

The ones who have benefitted the most are the children and little babies. Many a life has been saved by the nurse's daily supervisions of its food, care and medical treatment, and teaching the parents the priceless value of cleanliness and sanitation. Especially has this been seen in the foreign element of the city. Several Italian children have been ill with pneumonia, and cholera infantum and where the nurse has been called in by the doctor the women have shown themselves hopelessly ignorant of sanitation. When the nurse, however, showed them how it was absolutely necessary and everything be clean and that the patient have fresh air, they were more than willing to follow.

THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

The reports presented at the annual meeting of the Peterborough Health Association show what has been done during the year in bringing nursing, healing, encouragement and hope to homes where circumstances were not favourable to providing these things in the regular way. The significant point is the reports of the nurses, which show that altogether during the year, the two nurses paid 5,410 visits of cheer and comfort and healing. This is equivalent to an average of more than nine visits every day in the year. The value and importance of these visits consist largely in the fact that, in a vast majority of cases, these visits, and what they represent of help and hope, would not have been made but through the instrumentality of the Association. And when we consider that all this work was done—including $1,500 for the scant payment of trained nurses—at an expense of a little over $2,000, including new eggs, milk, etc., one can recognize how exceedingly worthy the Health Association is of the support and sympathy of the public. With all the appeals to our liberality, the claims of the Health Association should not be neglected. Let any reader sit down of an evening and think over the work done by the Association and think what it means and he will have a new idea of the value of its work and a new feeling of responsibility in respect of helping promote its work.

RECRUITING.

It is mighty easy in a moment of oratorical elan for a speaker, even a member of the government, to declare that Canada is to bring the numerical strength of her military contingents up to the 500,000 mark. The total enlistment in the Canadian forces up to the present is about 216,000. This leaves 284,000 men to be enlisted in order to reach the total of 500,000. It is a far easier thing to say we will raise 500,000 soldiers than to do the raising. We must recruit one by one 284,00 individual men; that number of men must be persuaded, coaxed, urged, or morally compelled to join the ranks. This is no easy thing to do. Men, though they are convinced of their duty, don't come rushing to the recruiting booths. As in all other things in life, even though we feel constrained by a sense of duty to do our duty, we often need some little extra incentive, some deciding factor; so the men that would enlist, feels that he ought to enlist, needs a little handling and encouragement. It is all very well to talk of raising recruits by the hundred, but when we think of the many influences that have to be applied, the many expedients adopted, the many turns to be taken, we see that the aggregate work of getting, 284,000 men together is a tremendous one. It is easy to think and talk in round numbers; but if one reflects that to raise 284,000 is to get into the ranks, examined, passed, armed, equipped, the entire population of fifteen cities the size of Peterborough, the extent of the trouble may be realized. It is easy to talk of enlisting men by the half million, but we see in Peterborough that it is no child's play to enlist a regiment of 1,180. We have been at it for months and have practically only covered half the ground. It is not because there are no men eligible or willing to enter the service, but it is a lack of the application of some deciding influence. What interferes with a great deal of success in life is lack of decision. What interferes with recruiting is lack of individual decision; it is not lack of loyalty, nor lack of a sense of duty, but lack of decision that keeps many a man out of the ranks.

IN A NUTSHELL.

At the preliminary opening of Parliament the place of Hon. Dr. Sproule, who as speaker did violence to his personal convictions by learning to say the prayers in French, was supplied by the appointment of Mr. Albert Sevigny, a rabid Nationalist. Sir Wilfrid in a few words of playful, but flaying sarcasm, thus compressed the situation into a few words. He said apropos of Sevigny replacing Sproule:

"Extremes have met again. The ardent Tory, Dr. Sproule, is succeeded by the ardent Nationalist, Dr. Sevigny, whose repentance since 1911 has not yet gone so far as to make him confess to his electors that the 'nefarious policy of Borden' was after all not so bad as the 'nefarious policy of Laurier.'"

JOHN REDMOND.

The National party in Ireland may be thankful that it has not given John Redmond reason to retire, as it was forecasted he would. It might never again have secured such a leader. John Redmond has always been thoroughly Irish, and he has been truly loyal to his party. But he has declined to go to the dangerous partizan extremes to which sections of that party would have gone. He has been a fighter through and through, but he has declined to fight when there was nothing to fight over, or when a fight would injure instead of help his party and his country. His careful judgment, and his sound political sense have done more for the National cause than the belligerency that men like Dillon have attempted. Redmond has fought for the cause of his party, and has fought intelligently, but he has never sought to gain his ends at the expense of that which he holds above any party—the British Empire. The trouble which it was said, might lead to his retirement, indicates the nature of the man. He would have Ireland subject to the same war conditions as the rest of the United Kingdom, because before anything else he desires success in the war.—Ottawa Free Press.

AN INSPIRING SPECTACLE.

British manhood, as a whole, has stood the test of the war very well. There is certainly no general "sabotage" against the war. The fact that no fewer than 2,829,263 men came forward and offered themselves for service in the twenty-three days prior to December 15 last is positive proof of that. Never before in any country—certainly not in the United States during the Civil War—was there ever any such record as that of the uprising of the people. It is an inspiring spectacle for the whole human race, and particularly for the Anglo-Saxon part of it. It foretells the eventual success of the Allies' cause.—Boston Transcript.

THE PESSIMISTS.

A preacher in an Ottawa pulpit yesterday declared that the war pessimists were chiefly to be found among "the over-fed, the over-groomed, and the over-read"—in the trenches and among those suffering most from the burdens of the war there was only optimism. This is so absolutely true that it is surprising that those who have listened to words of pessimism haven't always marked who the speakers were.

It is the men who are sitting in easy chairs, suffering not at all from the war, with no cares but selfish ones, who are lamenting most that the German armies are still in France and who say that the Rhine will never be crossed and that the allies have made a fizzle of the war. It is the same in ordinary affairs. The man who doesn't do anything to make matters right himself is always the one who thinks the other man is making disastrous mistakes. Henry Ford, for instance, went to Europe to tell the governments there what mistakes they were making, but somewhere on the way he discovered that he had failed to do his own share at home.

The people who are actively helping to win the war have no fear as to the outcome. Being active people they know that in all action there is bound to be mistakes, but they know also that all obstacles can be overcome by perseverance.

A cure for pessimism, then, would be a treatment of active effort towards assisting the war to a successful conclusion. Why don't some of the overfed, lazy gloom-expellers try it as a New Year's medicine? —Ottawa Free Press.

NEW BRITISH EFFICIENCY CHEERS FRENCH TROOPS

PARIS, Jan. 12.—The year 1916 has already cheered Paris. There has been a noticeable change in public sentiment since Christmas. The decline in mark exchange is prominently featured by the press as the first positive sign of German exhaustion. The Russian offensive, coupled with the more favorable situation at Saloniki, is considered hopeful, while the prospect of the adoption of conscription by Great Britain is welcomed as finally giving the lie to the German assertion that she is saving herself at the expense of her allies. Reports also filter through from the front that the British are now adequately trained, equipped, and fully reliable.

Here is an extract from a private letter from a French officer, who has been at the front since Charleroi, and is now holding an important position near the allied junction point north of Arras.

"We are delighted by the enormous progress of the British in recent months. It is now a wonderfully organized army, composed of the finest elements. A fortnight ago the enemy attacked them with a great volume of gas, the attack lasting three hours and being followed by a heavy cannonade, but their protective measures were so effective that the Germans had hardly left their trenches before they received a withering fire, and the assault literally melted away. The British had only thirty put out of commission by the gas, all being men whose hoods had been torn by bullets, a proof of the deadliness of the gas and the efficacy of the hoods. We all now have the utmost confidence in our allies, who work desparately hard and have improved proportionately."

CIVILIAN SELF-SUFFICIENCY IMPAIRS OUR MILITARY AND OUR NAVAL EFFICIENCY

With the complete retirement of British troops from the Gallipoli peninsula ends the story of the greatest and the most humiliating disaster to British forces in all history. This despite the unsurpassable courage of the men engaged. The humiliation comes in part from the nature of the conception of the enterprise, and in part from the manner in which it was attempted to be carried out. Perhaps this humiliation, if not inevitable in some great episode of the war, was at least likely both at the Dardanelles and elsewhere owing to our British inexperience and British civilian self-sufficiency. The British Empire had not had for the sixty years since the Crimea any experience of large war; and so between inexperience and self-sufficiency had no adequate brains ready for war—in other words, no adequate military General staff. Premier Asquith has told of how the cabinet—the cabinet, heaven bless the mark!—discussed the proposition to attack at the Dardanelles. The Cabinet!

And will it be believed—it is the fact—that until two years before the war there was practically no General Staff or its equivalent for even the British Navy? This, notwithstanding that some of the ablest admirals had again and again remonstrated that in the event of war, no plans were laid down for any course of immediate naval action anywhere? Nigh thirty years ago Lord Charles Beresford resigned from the Admiralty to denounce this shortcoming; he subsequently attacked it again and again in Parliament; he deplored it while he was himself commanding admiral of the whole navy; but it was not until 1912 that steps were taken to remedy the deficiency. "In August, 1886," says Lord Charles Beresford in his recently published Memoirs, "I was appointed Junior Lord at the Admiralty . . . . I speedily discovered that there was at the Admiralty, no such thing as organization for war." He set to work first to get a Naval Intelligence Dept. created. This was to cost £2251 in salaries. His colleagues on the Admiralty Board (a civilian at the head of it) turned him down. They couldn't afford £2361 a year to promote the efficiency of a navy costing hundreds of millions. Beresford went personally to Lord Salisbury, the premier, and gained his point. Beresford tried to get in addition either a War staff or to have the responsibility of the Naval Intelligence Board extended to include preparation of plans to be followed in the event of any war. He failed. He carried on a campaign for it both in Parliament and by speaking at public meetings. To Lord Charles Beresford, as to Lord Roberts, the British Empire owes a tremendous debt. But in 1868, the Admiralty decided even to cut down the salaries of the just-created Naval Intelligence Department. Beresford resigned from the Admiralty. He kept on for twenty four years, in season and out of season, demanding a naval War staff, so that British warships would not be in case of sudden war be running around for a time like chickens with their heads cut off; and, thank Providence and Beresford, a War staff was formed in 1912—just in time.

A General staff existed in 1914 for the British army; but it was small in numbers, as well as beyond doubt uncalculating about such a war as developed; and even at that, most of the officers are said to have gone to France with the earlier expeditionary forces. So, the civilian cabinet with its Sir John Simons who think one volunteer as good as three trained soldiers, decided upon how to send an army against the Turks—and we now have our complete answer to that.

Our British civilian self-sufficiency prevented us from figuring prudently about the possibility of this war; and that same selfsufficiency is now denouncing a civilian cabinet for not possessing more military sense and more military apparatus when the war came. Also we denounce some generals; but the first civilian duty as regards generals is to give them a reasonable job to do and enough troops to do it with.

An American paper remarks:

"The corpses of a hundred thousand gallant men, whose lives were literally thrown away in the hopeless campaign on the Gallipoli peninsula, are a dreadful commentary upon this inexplicable and almost incredible folly of subordinating military establishments to the authority and direction of civilians who are the mere accidents of contemporary politics."

Fortunately, now, the direct conduct of the war has been committed to military councils.—Ottawa Journal.

STAMPS ARE USED AS COIN IN RUSSIA

Because of the practical disappearance from circulation of small silver coins, of the domination of ten, fifteen and twenty copeks, stamps similar to the ordinary postage variety are being used in their place by the people of Russia.

The small silver coins which were plentiful a year ago now are practically gone from circulation. What has become of them is a question puzzling the authorities, but is probable that they have been hoarded by the poorer classes, who fear the result of the war and who feel that they will be better provided for if they cling to the silver money.

Under the Russian monetary standard 100 copeks are equal to a ruble, which in normal times is valued in exchange at fifty-one cents American money. Now, however, a ruble is valued at twenty-nine cents American money. Ordinarily therefore, the ten copeks piece corresponds to the American five cent piece.

The stamps which have taken the place of the coins are a trifle larger than the American postage stamps, perforated, but not adhesive. The reverse side is of ordinary paper, on which is printed government authority for the acceptance of the stamp in place of a coin.

The ten copeks stamp is blue, the fifteen copeks stamp brown and the twenty copeks stamp light green.

So strict are the Russians about their money now that the war is on that the authorities will allow no person to take from the country more than 500 rubles, which under the present rate of exchange approximates $180.

FOREIGNERS IN SHANGHAI.

They Now Number More Than Eighteen Thousand.

Shanghai now has a foreign population of 18,518, a gain of 4,968 over the last census, which was taken in 1910. The official census which the city has just completed shows that the increase in the foreign population since 1890 has been 14,798.

Japanese outnumber any other nationality in Shanghai. There are now 7,169 of that race in this city. The British come second with 4,982. The Portuguese population numbers 1,833. Americans rank fourth with 1,307. Germans have 1,135. Indians rank sixth with a total of 1,009. There are 361 Russians and 244 Frenchmen, 181 Spaniards, 146 Danes, 129 Austro-Hungarians, 114 Italians and 108 Turks. The remainder of the foreign population is divided among Norwegians, Swiss, Swedes, Dutchmen, Greeks, Persians, Koreans, Belgians, Roumanians, Egyptians, Armenians, Brazilians, Montenegrins and Bulgarians. None of these nations has as many as 100 citizens in Shanghai.

These figures do not include the French concession, and a very considerable foreign population living in the outside roads under the control of the French council.

JAPAN RUSHING MANY NEW SHIPS TO INCREASE NAVY

TOKIO, Jan. 12.—While the nations of Europe have been piling up armaments and the United States has prepared for big naval and military increases, Japan has been building dreadnoughts and battle cruisers to the limit of its financial ability, according to the best information obtainable here.

Vice-Admiral Kato, minister of the navy, has announced in the Diet that the fundamental naval program for years between now and 1930 is to increase the fleet by eight superdreadnoughts and four battle-cruisers at least. If finances permit, eight battle cruisers are to be built. The auxiliary fleet will be increased proportionately, Vice-Admiral Kato has said.

Statements Misleading.

It must be remembered, experts point out, that Japanese naval and military plans are intricate and secret, and that public announcements regarding these plans are conflicting and misleading. For instance, Vice-Admiral Kato's announcement is not taken here to mean that only twelve or sixteen capital ships are to be built by 1930.

He said that the fleet would be kept up to the latest standards. This is interpreted by experts as an intimation that as fast as ships become obsolete they will be replaced by superdreadnoughts in addition to the vessels designed to enlarge the number of capital ships in the navy.

Of superdreadnoughts authorized heretofore, the Fuso has completed her trial runs; the Yamashiro is ready for launching and the Ise and Hyuga are nearing completion. Four battle-cruisers have been completed in the last two years.

Available Finances Unknown.

The present Diet appropriated 47,000,000 yen (about $23,500,000) for the construction of one superdreadnought, two battle cruisers, one destroyer and some submarines, the number of which was not stated. To this sum, available to build warships, must be added the unexpired conappropriations made by previous Diets.

The war department states it will not now increase Japan's field army of 21 divisions, but the ultimate goal is 25 divisions.

The attack on Japanese merchantmen by the U-boats has revived the report that as Great Britain's ally Japan would re-enter the war, in which she has taken no part since the capture of Tsing Tau, the fortified fort of German Kio Chow, China, in November, 1914.

CHARRED RUINS MARK THE FRENZIED MOB'S WORK IN EAST YOUNGSTOWN RIOTING

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Jan. 11.—With three regiments of the Ohio National Guard, under the command of Brigadier-General Speaks, patrolling the smouldering ruins of the town of East Youngstown, or encamped in the steel mills nearby, the civic and military authorities here to-day expressed the belief that for the present at least, an end had been put to the wild scenes of rioting and looting which left the thriving little city a mass of embers. One life is known to have been lost, fully ten blocks of the town, including the entire business section, were burned and several thousands of people were driven from their homes. The loss was placed at no less than $1,000,000.

Scores Wounded.

Physicians who were called to look after the wounded placed the number at 100, although but 15 had been brought to hospitals here. While the majority had been shot, there had been many wounds from knives, bearing out the statement that when the rioters were finally driven from Wilson avenue, the main street of the town, they began fighting among themselves.

Mayor Thornton, of Youngstown, two miles from the burned town, was expected to issue an order to-day closing all saloons in the city, while arrangements were being made to restrict, and perhaps prohibit the sale of firearms, if the military did not act. There was no liquor question to settle in East Youngstown, for of the 120 saloons all but two had been burned and they had been looted.

How it Began.

The trouble began late yesterday, when the day shift at the plant of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company quit for the day. The plant is located on the flats of the Mahoning river, several hundred feet from the hillside, on which is built East Youngstown, where most of the work men live. The mills are reached from the town by a high bridge spanning the railroad yards, which has been carefully guarded by private watchmen since the laborers at the plant several days ago joined the laborers of the Republic Iron and Steel Company and other mills for an advance of 25c a day.

Shots Start It.

A crowd of men and women, estimated at 900, had gathered at the East Youngstown end of the bridge, and jeered the workmen as they crossed. Suddenly a shot was fired, and guards taking this as a signal fired over the heads of the crowd. The mob replied and another volley came. A number of persons, including two women, fell to the street, and the mob broke and ran up the hillside. A block away they reformed the almost immediately set fire to the building occupied by the Tube Company's employment bureau. A little later they fired a small warehouse and then turned their attention to private property.

Looted Saloon.

A saloon stood on the corner and a rush was made for the door. In a minute a shouting crowd filled the little room and helped themselves to what they saw. When the looting was complete the match was applied, and the mob went wild. Kauffman's clothing store nearby was next entered, and the stock passed out to the constantly-growing crowd in the street by those inside. Clerks fled for their lives and when the looting was finished the place was fired.

A Frenzied Mob.

By this time the mob was in a frenzy. Men danced and sang and women joined them. Liquor was passed around as freely as water, and those who had no cups scooped it up in the hollows of their hands, for within half an hour other saloons had been looted and the fire was spreading rapidly. Wilson avenue, the main street, parallels the railroad track at the foot of the hill and streets led out of it up the hill to the residence district. For fully an hour or more the mob was content with the small shops and saloons on the side streets, but then it turned its attention to the more pretentious stores on Wilson avenue.

Fire Fiend Loose.

By this time it had lost all semblance of leadership, and splitting up into bands of a dozen or more, went madly about the work of destruction. Saloon after saloon was broken into, looted and fired, the flames spreading to the other business blocks on the street. Fanned by a strong wind, the fire tore its way up the hill, and many residences, some occupied by the rioters, were burned.

Police Powerless.

Mayor Cunningham and the ten policemen who make up the protective force of the town early realized the situation was beyond them, and gathered at the police station, at the west end of the business district, or wandered along the streets, unable to do anything. Sheriff Umstead earlier in the evening had been blinded temporarily by red pepper thrown into his eyes by a rioter, and later conferred with the mayor, who admitted he was unable to stop the rioting. This condition the sheriff reported to Gen. Speaks, who had been sent to look over the situation, and to Lieut-Col. Weybracht of Alliance, who accompanied him. It was then the call was sent for state troops.

Drink-Crazed Mob.

Meantime the rioting had been in progress for several hours, and it was seen that the business section could not be saved. Every minute the crowd seemed to grow until there were hndreds of drink-crazed men and women roaming the streets. The fire department had been called out at the first alarm of fire, but the hose was quickly cut to pieces and East Youngstown helplessly called on the Youngstown fire department. Chief Wallace had men and equipment ready to send from the city, but found it was useless to risk lives and property as long as the mob held the town.

Wildest Disorder.

Scenes of the wildest disorder were everywhere enacted, and the fires mounted higher and higher until toward 10 o'clock Wilson avenue, the entire length of the town, was in flames. Absolutely no attempt was being made to extinguish the flames or save the thousands of dollars in property being carried away or destroyed.

Early in the evening the mob had attacked the post office. It was a small building and the dozen or more men who entered it made short work of it. Additional excitement, if such were possible, was created by the report that the mob had dragged the safe into the street and blown it to pieces. Later it was stated that the men had been content with robbing the strong box before applying the torch to the building.

At a dozen or more places in Wilson avenue, barrels of whisky, with the heads gone stood in the roadway, and surrounding them were many men and women, gulping down the raw liquor, or passing it to friends in the crowd who could not get close enought to help themselves.

Rioters Frightened.

Once the rioters were frightened. A passinger train, steaming along the railroad tracks at the foot of the hill, slowed down as it approached the burning buildings, a shout "The militia is coming!" rang out, and for a minute or two there was a pause. But when it was seen the train did not stop, the orgy went on.

A Posse Formed.

By this time so much property had been destroyed and the mob had become so inflamed, that the better citizens of the town had fled. Many families came to Youngstown, and others took the street cars to communities farther away, as the conviction was growing that if the disorder spread to Youngstown, nothing could save the city. Finally a dozen or more citizens, led by Oscar Diser, city solicitor of East Youngstown, and former member of the Ohio Legislature, gathered, at the police station, as the fire had not been carried closer than a block to that structure, and pleaded with police and other city officials to attack the rioters. It was almost midnight before a force of some forty armed men had been gathered in Wilson avenue.

Rioters Shot Down.

Only a block away the rioters were looting the last building in the block, and the citizens fired over their heads. The mob broke and ran, but finding no one had been killed, they turned and sent shot after shot toward the posse. No one was hurt, and the posse fired again. This time half a dozen or more rioters went down, and the mob tore down the street. The panic gathered strength and scores of men, their pockets bulging with loot, stumbled over each other in a mad rush to get away. The posse followed closely and wherever possible, chased the rioters into side streets, men being detached from among the citizens to round them up. In half an hour Wilson avenue had been almost cleared of the mob, but small squads were scattered about the hillside. As fast as possible these men were driven by main force to the police station, and automobiles took them to Youngstown. Some were taken to the Mahoning county jail and others to the city prison.

Many Arrests.

By 2 o'clock more than a hundred had been rounded up and brought here, while the police station in East Youngstown was filled to overflowing.

The majority of the men taken were armed, and many of them were under the influence of the liquor they had stolen from the looted saloons.

Clearing the streets gave the Youngstown fire department an opportunity to get into East Youngstown and men and equipment made the run of three miles as quickly as possible. There was still some work for them to do, and water was thrown on the ruins the rest of the night, but the wreck wrought by the mob was most complete. By daybreak the walls of many of the brick buildings burned began to fall, and the principal streets were robbed off and sightless excluded.

What became of the mob when it fled before the posse has not yet been determined, although it is known that hundreds of men streamed along the country roads leading out of East Youngstown while many others made their way into Youngstown. At 4 o'clock it was reported that the mob was reforming on the hills back of the town, determined to attack again, and the posse, which had been helping the fire department, was reassembled, this time with reinforcements, and guards were set until the soldiers could arrive.

Gen. Speaks had been in communication during the night with Gov. Willis at Columbus, and anxiously awaited the coming of the troops at daybreak. The troop train came without any definite announcement to the public, and not until persons passing along Front street saw the long trains stretched out along the tracks did they realize that the military had taken the situation in hand.

QUERIES HURLED AT THE REPORTERS

These are given as some of the reasons why reporters become bichloride fiends:

1. I should think newspaper work must be awfully fascinating.
2. Now, I'm just telling you what happened. You can write it up to suit yourself.
3. Remember this is confidential.
4. Will this be in to-morrow's paper?
5. The linotype must make things a lot easier for you reporters.
6. I just think it's a shame you can't sign your name to your articles.
7. Give us a good write-up, won't you?
8. Don't know the latest news from the Balkans? What kind of a newspaper man are you anyway?
9. I just called up to give you an item for the paper.
10. Don't you have a lot of exciting experiences? Or can't you?
11. Yes, I'm an old newspaper man myself.
12. Have a cigar?
13. Now try to get the names right, won't you?
14. I want to see the editor.
15. I have nothing to say.
16. Who wrote that piece in the paper?
17. All reporters have to know short hand, don't they?

PEERS OF BRITAIN ARE GIVING LIVES ON BATTLEFIELD

Many British Nobles Have Lost Their Only Sons—The House of Lords Will Be Greatly Altered

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Britain's prospective peerage is being rapidly wiped out. Of every 10,000 casualties in Flanders and in Gallipoli one heir to a seat in the house of lords is reported killed. Forty prospective wearers of the purple have already made "the great sacrifice" have proved by their example that the aristocracy of Britain, in the supreme test, is not degenerate. No other class in the country, proportionately speaking has paid so big a price. The house of lords, three years ago distrusted by the nation, discredited by the politicians, humbled by the house of commons and threatened by the cabinet, has, on the bloodstained fields of France and Turkey, won a new charter to-day, the upper chamber is stronger in the affections of the people than it has been for many generations.

But what a price to pay! Hardly a great family in the country is unvisited by the Angel of Death. Two dignified house of lords seems crowded with noble peers who have to mourn the loss of their first sons. The personnel of the upper house of the next generation is being made over and, in many cases, men, who previous to the war were three or four times removed in succession to about 20,000 per month for the first titles, are now presumptive or prospective peers.

England's sacrifice of the immediate past will be as nothing to her contribution of the next few months. Already her casualties, averaging year, have jumped to 80,000 every thirty days. In the early spring when there will surely be great fighting, casualty lists of 100,000 per month are not improbable. That means, if the prospective peers are to maintain their average, that every four weeks ten men who look forward to one day holding their places in the house of lords and succeeding to the broad acres and the high distinction of their families will lay down their lives for their country—and their caste. Compare this with the Boer war in which in two and a half years only six heirs to titles were killed.

It has been reckoned that no less than 200 heirs to peerage are serving with either the army or the navy. When it is realized that the peers number only 600 it will be realized how great is their immolation. Yet a few days ago when Lord St. Davids—who, by the way has lost his only son—proposed that a record be compiled of these two hundred men in the two services, half a dozen peers indignantly opposed the idea, while Lord Parmoor repudiated any suggestion that the peers were doing more than their simple duty.

"Our sons are only doing their duty, as are all other Englishmen at this time," he declared. "We do not claim to be doing more than our fair share."

The proposal was eventually withdrawn because many peers claimed that in such a return no mention would be made of the hundreds of sons of peers who in other ways besides service in either or the active branches were equally doing their duty.

Only one who knows English life intimately can adequately realize what this revolution in the peerage succession means. These eldest sons who are dying have been trained from the days they were born for the important position in life they were expected to occupy.

The disappearance of these boys will work a curious change in the peerage of the immediate future. The succession will fail to second and third son, to brothers of advanced age, to cousins and to nephews, who but for the Great War, would have had but a remote chance of ever enjoying the distinctions of an hereditary title. It will, perhaps lower in class dignity the house of lords of the next generation, but on the other hand, it may democratize that institution, and to a considerable degree, make more real and intimate the links with the common people of England. And perhaps it will result in a more binding sympathy with, and realization of the aspirations of those struggling masses who crowd the slums of England.

It is beginning to be realized too that the heavy toll of depth will have another interesting, though wholly temporary, effect. It will bring into the peerage a number of female holders of great titles in their own right. Already there are five such cases, but the war is sure to add materially to the number, and the coronation of Prince Edward of Wales will probably be attended by a goodly gathering of peeresses in their own right. It will be remembered that, after the Boer War, when the late Lord Roberts was made an earl, a special remainder was granted by which his daughter later succeeded to the title. Similarly, the daughter of the late Lord Strathcona, the aged Canadian peer who died while representing his country in London, succeeded to the title of her father.

In yet other cases it will be necessary to grant a special remainedr in favor of some relative not in legal succession. At the present time by such a special reminder the heir of Lord Kitchener, who is a bachelor is his brother, Col. A. E. C. Kitchener. In Great Britain under existing laws, succession to a title is limited to direct male descendants of the last or of a former holder of the title, except that in the higher peerage of Scotland succession may be in the female line.

England's low birthrate is bearing especially hard on the peerage at this moment. A score of peers have lost their only sons in the terrible fighting. Such is the case of Viscount Hardinge of Penshurst, now viceroy of India, incumbent of the almost regal position once occupied by Lord Curzon. Edward Hardinge was a holder of the distinguished service won in August of 1914 for great ability and gallantry in reconnaissance under machine gun fire in the terrible retreat from Mons. He was severely wounded at the time and finally died December 16.

Lord Riddlesdale, the picturesque peer whom the late King Edward was fond of calling "The ancestor," because of his world-wide manners and style of dress, has lost his only remaining son, Charles Lister. The latter's eldest brother, Captain Thomas Lister, after being three times wounded in the Boer war, was finally speared and shot to death at Jidhaili.

By the death in action of Captain Richard Long Dawson, of the Coldstream Guards, the only male member of his family of this generation, the earldom of Dartrey threatens to become extinct.

Bruce not only deprived Lord Aberdare of his heir, but as well it robbed a one-time popular American actress, Camile Clifford, of her husband and the chance of one day wearing a coronet.

Lord Stamfordham also has lost his heir. J. N. Bigge Lord Stamfordham is the king's closest personal friend and acts as his private secretary.

In the death af Lieut. Spencer Douglas Compton, a son of the late and brother and heir-presumptive of the present Marquis of Northampton, the prospective perage has lost one of its most important personages. For the title carrier with it almost unlimited wealth.

One of the most interesting cases is that of Major Crichton, heir of the late Earl of Erne. In the heavy fighting at Ypres after the battle of the Marne and when the British forces had taken up their present position in Flanders Crichton was reported as missing and then as a prisoner in the hands of the enemy. December 8, the Earl of Erne died and Crichton was supposed to have succeeded to the title. However, it subsequently became known that instead of being captured Crichton had died and had never succeeded to the title.

Chicton was a member of the Victorian Order and an equerry of the king. He and his three brothers served through the Boer war. His widow is an aunt of the Duke of Westminister.

Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, also mourns the loss of his heir as do the Marquis of Lincolnshire and Lord Knaresborough, the Viscount Bridport and Lord Valentia. Among the actual holders of peerage who have given their lives is Prince Maurice of Battinburg, brother of the Queen of Spain and cousin of King George.

LOS ANGELES' AREA OVERTOPS NEW YORK

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 11.—Greater Los Angeles is now larger than Greater New York by 22 square miles. This fact was explained to the City Council by City Engineer Hamlin, when he asked for an appropriation of $736 for the purchase of a theodolite for use in mapping the city, and for $493.25 for an automobile to carry on the work.

It was explained by Mr. Hamlin that Los Angeles, since the annexation of the San Fernando Valley has an area of 298.2 square miles, while that of New York is 276 square miles.

REPORT OF CHARLOTTE ST. LADIES' AID SOCIETY

Society Closed Its Record at the End of the Year—Membership of Over One Hundred Will Be Turned Over to Trinity Church —The Financial Statement

Report of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Charlotte street Methodist church for the year 1915:

It is with some degree of sadness we present our report for 1915, which might be called our valedictory, this being the last report of the Charlotte street Ladies' Aid Society. We have closed our record as such and soon old Charlotte street Methodist church will only be a sacred memory. We are reminded that the former things are passing away and also of the promise, "Behold I make all things new." We have for the last time decorated the old church for special occasions, Christmas with evergreens, Easter with its white lilies of hope, flowers to commemorate the passing away of our late sainted pastor; flowers that from Sabbath to Sabbath have reminded us of God's love to us in making the beautiful things of this world for our enjoyment. We have let them speak messages of love from us to the sick, sorrowing and bereaved of our church and congregation.

Thankful For Co-operation.

We as a society are thankful for the co-operation extended us by the rest of our congregation—the gentlemen of the church for the donation of the proceeds of their banquet and for help when called upon; the members of the C.L.A. in helping our entertainment, "The Last Loaf," the Sunday school orchestra for music; the congregation for their thank offering of money and for their donation of provisions whenever needed.

Membership Increased.

The year has witnessed the consumption of our desire in bringing our membership up to the one hundred mark and now we present to the Trinity Ladies' Aid Society a membership of one hundred strong. This is timely, as we hear so much of the "Committee of One Hundred," and the great things that can be accomplished by such and we are confident in God's strength he Trinity Ladies' Aid will verify that expectation.

In this red letter year of our church we are thankful our society has been permitted to do its bit financially as with the closing of 1915 we handed the Building committee the last one hundred dollars of our obligations for the year. This is especially satisfying when we are all being called upon from every side to assist our country with our means at this trying time in her history.

Meetings Held.

We have held during the year 10 regular and 4 special meetings. We have through the year watched our new church grow stone upon stone until its beautiful completion, and we have prayed that God would so build our characters day by day that when our life is completed here we would be able to receive the "well done" of the great Master Builder.

We pray that all our mistakes as the Charlotte street Ladies' Aid Society, may be more than atoned for by our faithfulness, zeal and earnestness in the work of the church as the Trinity Ladies' Aid Society.

M. E. LANE,
Sec'y Charlotte street Ladies' Aid.

SECOND TRIAL NOT LIKELY

$800,000 Spent in the Fruitless Prosecution of Railway Directors.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.— Though it has been announced here that the Government will again press to trial the cases of the five New York, New Haven and Hartford defendants who failed to secure an acquittal on the charge of conspiracy to restrain trade, the opinion prevailed at the Federal building that no further action would be taken.

Observers of the trial declare the acquittal of six of the defendants would probably convince Attorney-General Gregory that it would be useless to try to secure a conviction against William Rockefeller, Lewis Cass Ledyard, Charles F. Brooker, Edward D. Robbins and Charles M. Pratt.

The trial lasted 56 days and the jury were out 51 hours. It is estimated that the trial has cost the Government $300,000 and the defendants $500,000. The jurymen will each receive $168. C. S. Mellen, star witness of the Government, who was on the witness stand for many days, receives $49 in fees.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY PETERBORO' HEALTH ASSOCIATION SHOWN IN ANNUAL REPORTS

Association Continued Its Work Despite the Abnormal Conditions Caused by the War—District Nurses Made 3410 Visits and Attended 213 Patients—Eggs and Milk Were Supplied According to the Need—Vote of Thanks Extended to Mrs. R. W. Travers, Secretary of the Association, Who Is About to Leave the City.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Optimism was the keynote of the annual meeting of the Peterborough Health Association, which was held last evening in the City Council Chamber. Despite the world conflict, which among other things has given rise to a spirit of retrenchment, the Association has succeeded in promoting the work of caring for the sick. This work involves the maintenance of two district nurses—one for tubecular cases and the other for general cases—whose individual efforts must be supplemented by a large and continuous supply of milk, eggs, etc. Financial difficulties proved the chief problem of the Association during the past past year and necessitated the elimination of the summer camp for children. One appeal was made by means of circular letters, and the sum of eight hundred and fifty dollars was raised as a result. The City Council also made a monthly grant of fifty dollars. This year's Council will be asked to make a similar grant.

VOTE OF THANKS.

Major G. S. Cameron, M.D., who occupied the chair, outlined the progress of the Association during the past year. Reference was made by Dr. E. P. McNulty to the near departure of Mrs. R. W. Travers, Secretary of the Association. The latter has taken a deep and consistent interest in the organization and was unfailing in her efforts to further its progress. Dr. McNulty embodied in his remarks a vote of thanks, which was seconded by Major J. O. Davidson, Chaplain of the 93rd Battalion.

In reply Mrs. Travers expressed the hope that the work of the Association would continue and that the citizens would wake up to its many needs.

The following will constitute the executive committee for the ensuing year:—Major G. S. Cameron, M.D.; Dr. E. P. McNulty, Dr. F. C. Neal, Dr. J. B. Mann, Mr. W. H. Dunsford, Rev. Father Phelan, Mr. E. F. Mason, Mr. G. L. Goodwill, Mr. G. W. Powell, Mr. J. S. Knapman, Mr. E. A. Peck, Mrs. Vincent Eastwood, Mrs. (Dr.) Scott, Mrs. (Dr.) W. H. Young, Mrs. J. A. Aylmer, Mrs. Nelson, Miss Archer and Mrs. Gardiner.

REPORTS SUBMITTED.

The reports of the Nurses' Supervision Committee and Relief Fund is as follows:

Bal on hand in Bank of Nova Scotia Jan. 9, 1915	$42 36
Deposit from Treas. of P.H.A. for year ending Dec. 31, 1915	550 00

Bal. in Bank of Nova Scotia	33 04

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

During the year ending December, 1915, the work of the Health Association has been to some extent curtailed owing to the existing state of war. So many other very necessary calls have been made upon the purses of our citizens, that we have felt diffident in asking for more help than that which we really must have. The Summer Camp for Children, which we had oped would be an annual affair, had to be eliminated last summer, and we did not inaugurate any enterprises for the relief of suffering other than our usual work. The two nurses are still employed with very good results, and the distribution of food, clothing and drugs, and other comforts, continues. About 700 dozen of fresh eggs, and 1760 quarts of milk have been given out.

In the month of June our finances were almost at the zero mark, and it was decided to launch a campaign for the purpose of raising funds, we appealed to the public by personal circular, stating our need, and were rewarded by an increase of $650, by which we were enabled to continue the nursing work.

At the same time the City Council very generously promised to contribute $50 per month towards the relief work of the Society, so that at this date we still have a few dollars in the treasury,—but not many. Another appeal must be made in the near future to enable the Association to live as an active factor in the struggle for the public health.

MRS. R. W. TRAVERS,
Secretary.

3410 VISITS MADE.

As secretary of the Nurses' Supervision Committee, I beg to submit the following report:

The total number of visits made by the nurses during the year 1915, was 3410; in attending 213 patients. Of these 44 were tubercular, 28 were obsterical, and the remainder were general cases.

Owing to the unsettled conditions caused by the war and the very large demands on the generosity of the public for assistance in the upkeep of the Patriotic Association and the Red Cross Society it was deemed wise not to attempt to carry on the excellent work done in the preceding year by the Children's Camp at Jackson's Park.

Only the necessities of the regular work of our visiting nurses, and the supplying of eggs and milk and such other articles as were demanded by the very needy cases has been attempted this year and of that a fuller account will be given by the individual nurses in their reports.

Although greatly hampered by war conditions much good work has been accomplished by this committee and we feel assured that with the return of more normal conditions, interest in, and donations to this work will increase and that projects that have had to be discontinued will be re-established and new avenues of service entered upon.

DR. J. B. MANN.
Sec. Nurses' Visiting Committee.

BRAZIL UNCOVERS RIFLE SCANDAL

RIO JANEIRO, Jan. 18.—Dr. Lauro Muller to-day handed to President Braz his report about the scandal resulting from the negotiation of a sale of arms to the Allies, fully confirmed the fact that Senhor Lafayette Carvalho, availing himself of his position as secretary to the President, wrote to Senhor Camara Canto, saying the government was willing to sell 400,000 Mauser rifles and 1,000 rounds each at $53.50 cash.

Senhor Canton pretended to be an official agent of the government and obtained from agents of the allied governments $126,000, his commission to be £2 (£10) for each rifle. The government ignored the matter until it was exposed by secret agents.

Mr. Muller recommends a judicial investigation. Senhor Canton is now in Montevideo.

ELLIOT'S PETERBORO

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Sir,—In the published subscription list of donors to the Patriotic Fund I find an oversight which I wish to draw your attention to. One can quite understand how such could occur among so many names. The employees of the "Calcutt Brewing and Malting Company" are down as subscribing thirteen dollars ($13.00), whereas this is only their monthly subscription for a year, and which, as is stated on the printed subscription card furnished by the canvasser and which they each signed, they authorize their employer to deduct monthly, from their regular wages, and pay to the Treasurer of the Fund. When the fact, that many of these men are working on reduced wages, and are all married men, have given a dollar per month, or twelve dollars a year, is considered, it certainly looks as though they appreciated the sacrifice the boys at the front were making for them more than many professional men, merchants, and others, whose incomes are many times greater than these working men. Every man in the brewery gave, (with one exception), and the total amount for twelve men is $156.00.

Thanking you, I remain,

Yours truly,
CANVASSER.

A Well Known Actress Tells How She Darkened Her Gray Hair and Promoted Its Growth With a Simple Home Made Mixture.

Miss Blanche Rose, a well-known actress, who darkened her gray hair with a simple preparation which she mixed at home, in a recent interview at Chicago, Ill., made the following statement: "Any lady or gentleman can darken their gray hair and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe, which they can mix at home. To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Orlex Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the required shade. This will make a gray haired person look 20 years younger. It is also fine to promote the growth of hair, relieves itching and scalp humours and is excellent for dandruff and falling hair."

INSTITUTE MEETINGS HELD IN HAVELOCK

Interesting Addresses Concerning Rural Topics—Dr. Caroline Brown of Toronto Was One of The Speakers

HAVELOCK, January 13.—The meetings of the East Peterborough Farmers' Institute held here were fairly well attended, but not to the extent that they should have been. J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., speaking in the evening, criticised the people for not turning out in larger numbers.

The men's meeting in the afternoon was addressed by F. C. McRae of the Department of Agriculture, who spoke on "Seeding and how to test Grain." Mr. Ferguson gave an illuminating talk on "Dairying and Cow Testing."

The meeting of the Belmont Women's Institute, held in the council chamber in the afternoon, was well attended, and the ladies were delighted with the address of Dr Caroline Brown of Toronto, on "How to keep well," and "Home Nursing."

At the evening meeting, which was presided over by Reeve-elect James Ketchen, of Belmont, Mr. McRae gave an interesting account of the Rural School Fair movement, and outlined the various steps and benefits of such organizations. He announced that the Department of Agriculture would be only too pleased to take hold and conduct a School Fair in Belmont, provided that the scholars, teachers and parents would cooperate in the matter. Under such a movement rural school children gain invaluable information in up-to-date agricultural methods, besides acquiring a knowledge of public speaking, fair board organization, etc.

CHARACTER BUILDING.

Dr. Brown who is a member of the School Board of Toronto, spoke on "Character Building," and dealt exhaustively with the training of those valuable assets, children. Dr. Brown does not believe in the old maxim, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." She said that it was useless to attempt to mould character by whipping. Obstinacy in a child is developed by persecution and corporal punishment is not a deterrent from wrong doing. Ridicule also will never reform a culprit, and rewards for good conduct will tend to develop in a child an improper motive to do right, besides giving them a wrong idea of the future, because in real life good is not always rewarded nor is vice punished. The tendency of the times is to train the will of the child instead of suppressing it, to develop individuals rather than automatons. Develop self-respect, self control, self-discipline—three of the best qualities in character building.

Mr. Ferguson of Osgoode Station, though ill from la grippe, gave a good address on "How to make Farm Life More Attractive." He told how the homes of farmers could be improved by the removal of the stones and rubbish, levelling of lawns, planting of trees, flowers and shrubs, especially the planting of an evergreen shelter belt for the home. He said that the farmer who fails to provide conveniences in his home, who allows his wife to lug in water, split and saw the wood, and perform other properly masculine tasks, may be laying up for himself treasures in heaven, but that he runs a terrible risk of failing to connect with them. Every farm should have a name, he said, and every farm should be worthy of that name.

He touched on book-keeping, improved road sides and more amusement and entertainment for the young people.

Mrs. F. Quinn, Mrs MacFoley and Miss McDonald, contributed delightful solos between the addresses, and J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., and Charles O'Reilly, the veteran secretary treasurer of the Institute, gave short addresses, where the latter announced that this would be the last time that meetings would be held under the Institute auspices, the government having decided to alter the method of arranging the meetings.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON.

The blood must be filtered, otherwise the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

How extremes meet—"What I mean by an upright man," he said, "is a downright honest man."

Davey—"So he has at last led her to the altar?" Scones—"I don't know whether he led her or she pushed him."

She—"Are your intentions towards the widow really serious?" He—"They are!" "I intend, if possible, to get out of her clutches."

Captain Singleton—Do you believe in divorce, Miss Yellowleaf?" Miss Yellowleaf—"Oh, you men are just awful. You haven't asked me to marry you yet."

SMART PRODUCTION OF "SAN TOY" WILL BE REPEATED TO-NIGHT

Splendid Success of Favorite Musical Comedy By Peterboro Musical and Dramatic Society and Under Auspices of 93rd Battalion and Speakers' Patriotic League.

"Velly Goodee" Show

The production of "San Toy" at the Grand Opera House, last night, sparkled with a bright blend of Oriental and patriotic effects in music and colouring that left a lingering desire to see it repeated. As an example of the entertaining abilities of local talent it was a splendid success; the measure of which finds expression in its enduring, pleasurable memories. Handsomely and appropriately costumed, nicely staged and the company well drilled in regard to their positions and movements, the setting was all that could be desired. The moon scene in the first act presented a beautiful ensemble, and suggested that the lighting combinations might have been more extensively employed throughout the whole production. The chorus was numerous, nicely balanced, and made a fine impression. Augmented by a squad of 93rd Battalion men they gave a stirring rendition of the new patriotic song "Motherland" Mr. Fred Hartshorn singing the verses. But the real strength of this amateur production lies in the finished work of the principals. Miss Mollie Young and Mr. Fred Hartshorn approached professional skill in their lines and vocal selections. Mr. Hartshorn was great. He has an easy, pleasing presence, a voice that carries well across the footlights, and fitted his part perfectly. He is easily one of the most satisfactory amateurs the Grand has seen. Miss Young acted with becoming reserve and refinement, and at the same time presented her role in a delightful manner. She displayed a soprano voice of good tone, range and control, and altogether carried off the honours of the evening, ably supported by Mr. Hartshorn.

The Comedy Parts.

In a sense, Mr. George Lynch made the hit of the evening, the comedy of the piece rolling in with his every entrance. It was probably the best part Mr. Lynch has ever had and he showed the results of his experience and talent. As Captain of the Guard he had a rich opportunity for fun-making, and would doubtless have made more of it had the drill been introduced earlier. Miss Lila Waterman made a favourable impression. She had a big share in the action, especially with Mr. Lynch whom she ably supported. Her dancing was exceedingly graceful and her work with Mr. Lynch was cleverly done. Her singing voice was a trifle light, but she presented her vocal numbers with very pleasing effect.

As the British Consul, Mr. Fred Jamieson, was completely disguised behind an "imperial," he contributed largely to the gaiety of the evening, not to mention the turtle joke, and was right at home in his part.

A dignified Mandarin was Mr. Wm. Barry, with his six little wives whose share in the performance deserves mention. Mr. Barry handled his songs very satisfactorily, especially the "Six Little Wives."

Mr. Frank Whitehouse as Emperor of China, upheld the majesty of the state, and got all there was out of a rather limited role. There are not many dramatic passages in "San Toy," and Mr. T. E. Gilchrist, doubling in the first and second acts, flashed through several strong scenes with an impressive presentation of somewhat difficult parts. Mr. Cyril Devey's part was not exacting, but he more than met its demands.

Vocal Numbers Good.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the music of San Toy.

Mr. Barry had several songs particularly the catchy "Six Little Wives" number. Miss Young and Mr. Hartshorn's "A. B. C." duet was delightfully rendered, and with the "moon song" was probably the best in the entire piece with the exception of the patriotic song. Mr. Lynch and Miss Waterman had several duet skits smartly and cleverly presented. Miss Waterman's "Rhoda and Her Pagoda" went well, and Mr. Lynch contributed one of his extravaganzas in the "Chinese Sojer Man." Miss Kathleen Moore sang with fine effect "A Posy from Over the Sea," and Miss Dorothy Fenwick displayed a nice soprano in her duet with Mr. Gilchrist, "When You are Wed to Me."

These are only a few of the numbers, San Toy being replete with melodies. The drill by the "Emperor's Guard," with Miss Mabel Young as Captain, afforded the 93rd men in the audience an opportunity of witnessing intricate manoeuvres. An interpolated dance by Miss Annie Bickersteth and Miss Daisy Wood was gracefully executed.

"San Toy" was rehearsed and presented under the direction of Mr. R. J. Devey, whose "Geisha" of five years ago was another of his successes. Mr. Devey deserves every credit for the successful production last night. It can be safely recommended to those who missed it last night as a bright, cleverly-acted musical comedy. Besides, the proceeds are contributed to the 93rd Battalion Band Fund.

The good taste of Mrs. Devey, who was stage manager, was evidenced in the rich costuming, the clustered Chinese lanterns and various other effects. Altogether "San Toy" ranks high in the list of productions by Peterborough talent.

ICY CONDITION OF THE SIDEWALKS

Two Gangs of Men Were Out This Morning Sanding The Streets

Complaints are heard all over the city regarding the icy condition of the sidewalks. If these complaints were referred directly to Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Board of Works or City Engineer Parsons they would receive prompt attention. So far the city has used twice as much sand as was used all last winter. It is almost impossible to keep the streets sanded all the time as the weather is so changeable. The sand is no sooner applied that the weather turns soft and then freezes. This necessitates another application of sand. This morning two gangs were out sanding the streets. Some of the streets in the north end of the city are extremely difficult to negotiate as the grades in many cases are very steep. Bethune street and Benson avenue are among the worst.

KILL BERLIN LIONS AS MEAT IS SCARCE

Owing to the war and the scarcity of meat a result ten fine specimens of loins from the Sahara were put to death in Berlin recently.

The beasts had long been the pride of Bellermannstrasse and drew big crowds, who viewed them with interest. For some time the experiment was tried of feeding them with condensed food preparations, but they refused to eat it. As meat is now so high in price in Germany no money was available with which to purchase the food for the lions. A public collection for their subsistence was then tried, but as the residents of Berlin have all they can do to purchase meat for themselves the money thus received was barely sufficient for a meagre supply and it was then decided to poison the animals. This was done as painlessly as possible and many in Berlin now mourn the deaths of these handsome beasts from the Congo.

St. Pierre Sends Fourth Quota To French Front

ST. PIERRE, Miquelon, Jan. 12.—The fourth contingent of young men at St. Pierre, left this afternoon by way of Sydney, N. S., for France to join the colors. The boys embarked amid great cheering and enthusiasm, showing to the vast crowd accompanying them their courage and assurance by singing the national anthem and patriotic songs.

Many others from this colony also have rejoined the colors from Canada, while some enlisted in the Canby a theatrical performance with a subscription held recently resulted in the collection of 9,000f. ($1,800) for the benefit of the French soldiers' day. The present administrator is greatly appreciated and good feeling and general satisfaction reign through out the old colony.

Italy Prohibited Albanian Invasion

ROME, Jan. 13.—General Ricciotti Garibaldi today denied a report that his son, Peppino, was organizing a Garibaldian expedition for Albania, but admitted that such a scheme once had been contemplated. The scheme to have a body of 50,000 "Red Shirts," strengthened by the regular army, invade the Balkans through Albania last June, he said, was supported by the British and French governments, subject to Italian approval, but it was opposed by Barone Sonnino, Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs, who told him "We cannot in any way accept or favour your proposal."

Such an expedition still could be organized, although not under the same favourable conditions, but the Minister of Foreign Affairs maintains his unfavourable attitude.

Mistress—"I see that another soldier has called for your, Mary. I thought that you had only one sweetheart?" Cook—"Oh, no, mum; two. You see, on'e a regular and the other's a reserve."

She—"And knowing my sentiments on the subject, did that odious Mr. Binks insult you by offering you drink?" He—"Yes." She—"And how did you resent it?" He—"I swallowed the insult."

MORE IN DUTIES FROM COX ESTATE

TORONTO, Jan. 11.—As a result of Judge Middleton's investigation into the estate of the late Senator Cox the Ontario Government will collect an additional $575,000 in succession duties over and above the taxes due on the basis of the original valuation. The Government's announcement that the judge's valuation is acceptable will be made in a short time.

In round numbers, Judge Middleton places the true value of the estate at about $5,000,000, instead of $800,000, as given by the executors at the time the will was filed for probate. Although the tremendous difference in the two valuations is so striking as to cause much comment, there will be no prosecutions, as Judge Middleton, in his report, exonerated from criminal intent those interested in the estate.

Judge Middleton's report on the value of the estate is virtually a decision. It is a finding which has been accepted by the solicitors and the Cox family. The Ontario Government will approve of the report and accept the valuation also.

Judge Middleton, it is understood says that the original valuation of the estate would have stood had Senator Cox legally transferred the loan company shares that he intended his son to secure. But although these shares were given the son, Senator Cox continued to draw the dividends and thus they still remained part of the fathers' possessions, and therefore after his death, part of his estate.

WOMEN CONDUCTORS IN BERLIN DON TROUSERS

The women who have taken the places of the men on the Berlin elevated railroad will, beginning this month, discard their usual dress and wear trousers.

This step is taken for safety sake. The officials of the road have observed that skirts greatly hamper the movements of the women and in opening and closing the gates of the cars, the edges of skirts are often caught, which is dangerous. When the train is crowded the movements of the women conductors are also greatly hindered.

To obviate all this, all women working on the trains will hereafter wear tight-fitting coats and trousers. It is believed that this innovation will be very popular, especially among Berlin's male population.

No doubt the doctor spoke rashly. An inquisitive niece, seeing him return from the funeral of a wealthy patient, innocently inquired: "Uncle Tom, do you attend the funerals of all your patients who die?" "Good heavens, no," said the doctor. "Do you think I have nothing to do but go to funerals?"

PRESENTATION MADE TO MR. R. W. TRAVERS

Members of Peterboro Club Said Farewell Last Evening—Mr. Travers Presented With a Beautiful Clock.

Departure Regretted

A farewell and presentation was tendered Mr. R. W. Travers, former manager of the Bank of Montreal here, who is shortly leaving for London, by the members of the Peterborough Club yesterday evening. Members in large numbers gathered in the Club quarters with Mr. W. H. Denham in the chair.

Mr. R. R. Hall was called upon to make the presentation address, which he happily did. He spoke very strongly on the loss to the community at large in the transfer of Mr. and Mrs. Travers to London. In the social and business life of this city and in the charitable and hospitable activities they would both be sadly missed. In the work of the Children's Aid Society their labours have been immeasurable and their energies on its behalf have been a noble example for all men and women in Peterborough to follow.

In presenting Mr. Travers with a handsome grandfather clock Mr. Hall stated that it carried with it the very best wishes of the members of Peterborough Club for the welfare of Mr. and Mrs. Travers in their new home.

Mr. Travers responded feelingly and thanked the members for the good will shown and kind words spoken of Mrs. Travers and himself. He drew attention to the fact that he was born in Peterborough in the building in which they were gathered and regretted exceedingly the loss of so many warm friends he had in this city. He also referred very kindly to his successor, Mr. Abbott, and he knew that he would be a decided acquisition to the city.

Mr. Peter Campbell was called upon and in his remarks stated that the banking profession here would miss Mr. Travers greatly and reiterated the previous remarks regarding the work of Mrs. Travers among the sick and in the hospitals.

He presented Mr. Travers for his wife a handsome basket of flowers from the members.

Canon (Major) Davidson and Mr. D. Hughes Charles also made very appropriate remarks. Everywhere and by everyone it was shown that the removal of Mr. and Mrs. Travers from the city is much regretted.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

"My nerves were very bad, and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my arms or legs," writes Mrs. Robert Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. I cannot describe what I suffered, but now I am entirely cured."

her instructions and did their best to improve.

Three deaths alone have occurred; two the result of cancer and one of spinal meningitis, and this statement alone will speak for the success of the work.

MISS MERCIER'S REPART.

Following is the report of Miss O. A. Mercier:—

During the year 1915 I made 1674 visits. These were made to 90 patients —36 of these were general cases and 44 were tuberculous. Of these 44, seven were fathers and twelve were mothers of families. Sixteen were "new" cases. There were six deaths among those under the supervision of the Association. I collected $36.00 during the year.

We are indebted to Mrs. J. C. Davidson, the Misses Dickson, Mrs. Wm. Davidson, Mrs. Gemmell, Mrs. J. C. Sullivan, Mrs. B. Morrow, Mrs. John Butcher, Mrs. Hickey, Mrs Doris, Mrs. Conroy, Mrs. Edwards, Miss McCabe, Mrs. Collins, Mrs. Hummill, Mrs. McQuillen, Mrs. Huycke, the Misses Delaire, and Mrs. C. Moore for donations of old linen; to Mr. Patrick Hogan for a donation of simple tonics and prepared foods, and to Mrs. F. C. Neal for a collection of magazines.

Articles Supplied.

As in previous years we have been able to supply articles of personal clothing, bedding and other useful articles, as well as prescriptions, absorbent cotton, gauze, alcohol, disinfectants and all necessary dressings to the poor.

The association has supplied 1165 sputum ups, I would like to call your attention to the significance of this—1165 sputum cups have been provided besides the large amount of old linen that has been distributed for similar purposes. When we consider that the great source of infection is from the sputum, we realize the importance of this means of sanitation. The great aim of anti-tuberculosis work is the prevention of tuberculosis, especially among the children. We know that childhood is the period of life when we are most apt to acquire the disease, and that all children exposed to an infectious case for any length of time, in the majority of cases, show signs of the disease later in life. Therefore it is necessary that these children should be relieved of all physical handicaps, such as enlarged and diseased tonsils, bad teeth, or any condition that tends to lower their resistence. They also need additional nourishment and proper instruction.

We feel considerable uneasiness when we have an epidemic of measles in the city, yet the deadly enemy tuberculosis goes on its way almost unnoticed, except with those directly interested. Our city register's show that during the past four years we have had three deaths from measles, eight from diphtheria, eleven from typhoid and 104 from tuberculosis.

We look forward to the time when our City Fathers will see the advisability of paying the Medical Health Officer sufficient salary to devote his entire interests to Public welfare. The work of prevention cannot be carried on to any appreciable extent unless the infectious individual is under proper care and control.

There are 22 deaths from tuberculosis recorded for the past year. The Association was able to assist in the care of six of these cases. All of these were far advanced cases, clearly showing the regrettable tendency to delay taking remedial measures until the time is passed when the best assistance can be rendered, and also making it plain that if the war against tuberculosis is to be carried to a successful issue some better method than at present exists must be found of getting into touch with the sufferers at an earlier stage of the disease. How this can be done I am not so sure.

Tubercular Poor.

I trust, Sir, that the Association may see fit to devise some means by which the nurses may be called to the poor other than by the physician. Especially in case of the tubercular poor, who have no proper medical care and are thus an unchecked menace to the rest of the community. Our work is not that of infringing, but of helping those to get medical assistance who otherwise would be unable to have it. Until such time, the work of the Association will be impeded.

I do not think that by means of humanitarian regulations we shall be able to banish all sickness, but I believe that a great many troubles are due, not so much to the dispensation of Providence, as to obstinate ignorance and wilful neglect, and believing this, I feel that the Association has a large field of achievement ahead.

In conclusion, I desire to state how keenly we feel the loss of Mrs. Travers. It has been Miss Hamilton's and my privilege to come into close touch with her ministrations, and we feel deeply, with the poor,, the loss of their friend. Her work has been an inspiration to us, especially in times like these when public interests are so diverted—it seems so easy to follow the larger thing—especially, I say, in these times has her council and optimism been invaluable in our work.

Respectfully submitted,
P. A. MERCIER.

American Engineers Assemble Engines For the Russians

Twenty American engineering experts are busily engaged at Harbin erecting locomotives shipped from the United States to the Russian government. Both the Baldwin Company and the American Locomotive works have experts here, assisting the Russians in their efforts to get adequate locomotive power for the Trans-Siberian Railway.

The locomotives coming from America are unloaded at Vladivostok. They are knocked down into as small pieces as possible, and boxed in America for shipment. Upon their arrival in Vladivostok the engines are rushed on to Harbin, where the facilities for erecting them are better than at Vladivistok.

Because of the slides in the Panama Canal, the delivery of the locomotives was much delayed. It requires several weeks to erect an engine and the first of the American engines to reach Siberia will be put into commission this week.

All told four hundred and fifty locomotives have been sold by American manufacturers to the Russian government. These are not coming to Vladivostok by way of the Suez, but will doubtless be routed via Panama as soon as the canal is clear. It is estimated that the delivery of these locomotives will extend over one year.

Meeting of the Havelock Council

J. W. Bryans, New Clerk and Treasurer—Alex. Mathison Gets Assessorship Plum—Other Appointments Laid Over

HAVELOCK, Jan. 13.—The inaugural meeting of the town council was held when the city fathers took their declaration of office, solemnly declaring that they would truly, faithfully and impartially, to the best of their knowledge and ability, execute the office to which they had been returned by acclamation.

Reeve Fennell inaugurated a new and pleasing departure when he made an excellent address outlining the duties of the council and asking that the officers to be appointed be selected with a view to efficiency, ability and willingness to perform their duties.

Rev. C. W. DeMille also addressed the council, asking the co-operation of that body in the spring in a "clean up day," at some time in the spring, when all would unite to clean up the streets, walks and property in an effort to brighten up our village.

An adjournment was made until evening, when the important duty of appointing municipal officers, was taken up.

The salaries for the respective offices were fixed as follows: For clerk, $95; treasurer, $15; auditors each $10; assessor, $70; collector, $35.

The constableship provoked a merry war between Couns. Jones and Wright. The former could see no good in the constable and the latter no complaint. It ended with the decision to lay the matter over, the same course being pursued with the poundkeeper and the naming of a collector.

W. T. Curtis, J. W. Bryans and George Chiles applied for the clerk and treasurership.

Chiles got a nominator in Couns. Wright, but J. W. Bryans was the pick of the other three members for both positions.

P. J. Hill, Alex. Mathison, and C. E. Brewster applied for assessor.

Mathison was the only good bet in the three, and he got the plum, an office by the way, which at $70 is by far the best in the gift of the council considering the salaries attached to the others.

Rev. James Shaw and George Chiles were appointed auditors.

In the hope of settling the matter of a caretaker, etc., the clerk was instructed to advertise for applications to fill the positions wanted, and in the meantime Constable McNichell was re-engaged for another month.

Representations were made to the council that a factory was liable to locate here and the committee in charge of the negotiations were instructed to continue and report to the council from time to time.

T. P. Lancaster addressed the council in reference to securing the billeting of recruits here for the winter, and the cost of heating a suitable building was assumed by the council.

The following have enlisted but are in hospital, and not yet on the strength: Pte. R. Killingbeck, Jacob Killingbeck, G. H. Graham, Wm Teal.

Pte. Jacob Kurr is to be transferred to the Company Base at Peterborough where he will be Battalion Shoemaker.

Great praise is due to Jacob Killingbeck and family who have given a father and three sons to their country. This example should point out to the mothers of this vicinity what is expected of them.

The Havelock Standard says:

The following is a list of the Havelock recruits in training here: Chas. Taylor, E. T. Williams, Harry Washburn, John Ruttan, J. Dewey, Ross Hart, Harry Balfour, Geo. A. Quackenbush, Edw. Dulmage, Wm. Carrol Ticé Post, Wm. Livingstone, S Wright, W. Althouse, S. Whitney, D Shorter, Rich. Cowan.

The Havelock Standard says:

Recruiting has received a noticeable stimulus in town this week. Eight of the recruits quartered at Peterborough, who had enlisted in that city were transferred to Havelock on Saturday last, and Sergt. F. Traynor of the 93rd has been sent here to instruct the squad in army drill. About thirteen young men have enlisted here during the past week, making a total of twenty-one, and Recruiting Officers Lieuts. Quackenbush and Worth are sanguine that the number will reach 40 or 50 without any difficulty. Every effort should be put forth by our citizens in assisting in the work and show to the officers in charge that Havelock and Belmont will be ably represented in the new County Battalion.

Sergt. Frank Traynor of the 93rd Battalion, who is at present in charge of the training at Havelock, has broken into poetry. The following verses by him appear in the Havelock Standard:

When you turn back the pages of memory
And gaze on your friends tried and true,
You may not recall my friendship at all,
But in France I'll think of you.

For who is the man we're proud of
As he walks along the street?
He's the man that is dressed in khaki
And his uniform is neat.

We are out to defend our country,
Our homes and loved ones dear;
To fight for you we've enlisted:
For the Germans we have no fear.

But we want another man, sir,
That man is reading this verse
For the sake of Edith Cavell, boys,
Resent the German curse.

In Havelock we want to do our share,
Like Dewey, Post and others.
You can have a dandy uniform
The same as the Williams Brothers.

So come, enlist and do your bit
This war, it must be won.
And when the 93rd get to Berlin,
They'll make the Germans run.

Havelock Standard: Lt.-Col. T. J. Johnston, commanding the 93 Batt., was in town on Thursday last, accompanied by Major Eastwood and Lieut. Widdifield. Lt.-Col. Johnston was well pleased with the outlook for recruits in Havelock and pronounced the headquarters comfortable and spacious. He was also pleased to make complimentary remarks upon the interest the citizens are taking in recruiting.

Norwood Register: Lieut. Walter Thomson has succeeded Capt. H. S. Neilson at Norwood and Havelock. Capt. Neilson's services are required at Peterborough, where the base of the Company has been established.

OTTAWA, Jan 13.—The Canadian transport, Metagama, with various drafts and reinforcements aboard, totalling in all 134 officers, 27 nursing sisters, and 1,931 other ranks, has arrived safely in England. The detachment includes two officers and a hundred men of R.C.H.A., Kingston, also a large detachment from the Toronto University Corps.

Lieut. Wilfrid Stratton arrived safely on the Metagama a cable states.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

LINDSAY'S WEIGHT AND SCIENCE TOO MUCH FOR THE LOCAL YOUNGSTERS

Biggest Crowd of the Season Saw Cap. Simpson's Team Victorious Over Electric Colts By 7-2 in a Hard-Fought Junior O. H. A. Game.

300 LINDSAY VISITORS

Cap Simpson's sturdy Lindsay juniors, looking even better than last year's semi-finalists, carried too much weight, experience and system for the Electric Colts, and the visitors handed the local youngsters a 7-2 beating in the first junior O.H.A. game of the season at Brock street rink last night. That the better team won goes without saying, but the score hardly indicates the hard-fought nature of the play. Getting the jump on their inexperienced opponents, the Lindsay seven jammed in three goals in the first 8 x minutes, practically winning the game then and there, but the Peterborough youngsters rallied and fought them back, holding the visitors at evens from then until well in the last period. It was 3 to 0 at the head of the first period and the Electrics split four goals with Lindsay in the second stage, leaving it 5-2, when the teams squared away for the last leg of the journey. For the first ten minutes of the final session there was no score and then Lindsay came on with two more counters to wind up the proceedings.

The visitors got the breaks that usually accompany the winning team getting four of their goals when the Petes had to drop a man through injuries. This gave Lindsay a chance to lay off Scott, who was subbing for Flavelle and who was decidedly the weakest member of the team and the visitors gained by the shift each time. On top of this the Electrics had no luck when in close. Half a dozen times with only Mitchell to beat, they either hit the post or shot right at the goaler, throwing golden chances away. By far the biggest crowd of the season was in attendance. Lindsay brought down 300 fans, including many soldiers from the 109th Battalion, and they gave their team the maximum amount of vocal encouragement. The prediction that the game would be the contest of the season was borne out in the battle that the teams put up, and the fans went away satisfied.

While regretting that their team did not pull out a win, the Peterborough people who saw the game were delighted with the gameness shown by the Petes who, behind from the drop of the hat, never stopped trying. Outweighed many pounds on the forward line especially, they stuck to their guns and fought until they were ready to drop from exhaustion. For five of them it was their first O.H.A. game and the only two, Rose and Legros, only broke into the game last year, so that they have no reason to be ashamed of themselves. The fans were satisfied that the youngsters gave all they had to win the game.

The Lindsay team on the forward line looked better than last year. Their defence was not up to the advance guard owing to the absence of Flavelle, but with the forwards backchecking as they did last night, the deficiency in the defence was not much in evidence, although it was noticeable that when the Petes succeeded in breaking away from the Lindsay forward, the rear guard was not so hard to negotiate. Art Carew, the left wing of the visitors, is as last year, the star of the team. He has a great burst of speed, is a hard worker and carries a bullet shot that he gets away quickly. Over on the other wing Griffis has improved 100 per cent. over last year. He showed some fine stickhandling last night and his shooting was on a par with that of Carew. Both wing men bored them in on a line and each notched three goals. Read, the Bobcaygeon boy, who played for Trinity College School last year, is a fast, sturdy rover and little behind the other two. Haugh was much the better of the defence pair and Mitchell did well in the nets.

The visitors had a fine system in their attack, making few mistakes around the nets. There was always someone to take the pass from the corner and they shot quickly from all angles.

The Peterborough defence had naturally a lot of work to do and they handled themselves well. Legros and Lowes waded into the Lindsay attacks in good style and it was rarely that they were cleanly beaten on a rush, nearly all the goals being scored on passes from the corner or on shots from the side. Montgomery in the nets handled a lot of shots and had many clever stops to his credit. That seven beat him was no disgrace to the youngster with the deadly shooting the Lindsay wings uncovered.

The forward line were all good individually, but they lacked the team play that distinguished the Lindsay advance guard. They had little or no combination and in spite of their speed and clever stick handling the lack of system told against them in the final analysis. Lornie Rose at left wing gave as clever a performance of stick handling as any man on the ice, but the Electrics' captain had hard luck in his shooting, twice hitting the posts when he had worked inside on beautiful rushes. Little Graham at rover had all kinds of speed and rushed and back-checked without a let up, while Cherrett, the fifteen year 110-pound centre, won his spurs by his speed and stick handling. Incidentally he notched both Peterborough counters by pretty shots. Hamilton at right wing, in spite of a crack on the nose in the first few minutes of play, which necessitated his absence from the ice while Lindsay scored two goals, never let up trying. He was up against Art Carew, the star of the visitors.

Lou Marsh of Toronto, handled the game in faultless fashion.

The teams and summary follow:

2 Lindsay, Mills.
3 Lindsay, Griffis.

2nd Period.

4 Peterborough, Cherett.
5 Lindsay, Griffis.
6 Lindsay, Griffis.
7 Peterborough, Cherrett.

Third Period.

8 Lindsay, Carew.
9 Lindsay, Carew.

Lindsay won the game in the first few minutes. From the face-off they let loose a fierce attack on the Peterborough nets and Montgomery was called upon several times in the first minute. Then Lornie Rose was fenced for holding, and with the odd man advantage, Lindsay came on harder than ever. Carew sniping from a scrimmage, secured a loose puck and whanged a hot one into the nets for the first goal.

Hamilton got a crack on the nose and had to retire for repairs, Lindsay dropping Scott. The absence of the right wing did not help the Electrics any as it gave Carew a chance to run free. After several dangerous shots which Montgomery warded off, Carew passed out from the corner to Mills, who slapped the rubber into the cage.

Shortly afterwar Griffis made it 3—0 on a neat shot from the side.

Hamilton came back at this stage and the teams were even again. The Electrics rallied after the disastrous opening and had as much of the play for the balance of the period as had the visitors, but could not score, losing several golden chances. Legros got right inside once with only the goalkeeper to beat, but Mitchell kicked the shot out. He also saved a counter a minute later when Hamilton brought the rubber out from behind and tried to warp it around the post.

Opening the second period the Petes tried hard to pull down the lead. They were holding Lindsay out well at this stage, while Rose, Graham, Cherrett and the defence pair led raid after raid into Lindsay territory. The attacks were mostly individual, but they were dangerous in spite of that. Rose had wretched luck in his shooting. He wound up one beautiful rush by a bullet shot that hit the post and soon after dodged through the whole Lindsay team again, and trying for the open side of the net, hit the post again, losing goals on both occasions by half an inch. Finally Cherrett sent Peterborough into the scoring column when he went up centre ice alone and bored a beauty into the nets. He shot from well out and the puck whizzed off Scott's stick past Mitchell before the latter could move.

With the score 3 to 1 and the Petes coming strong it looked as if the home youngsters might have a chance, but the elation was short lived. Griffis, who had been penalized, stepped out of the penalty box just in time to grab a loose puck and slip one past Montgomery. A few moments after Griffis went down the side again and made good with another beauty. Just before the end of the period Cherrett got it back for Peterborough by a lightning shot from a scrimmage, and it was 5 to 2 at the end of the period.

Both teams opened strong in the last period and for the few minutes it was up and down hockey, with the teams working to the limit. Mitchell and Montgomery both had hot shots to ward off, Mitchell making a fine save once when Hamilton broke inside. Finally Graham hurt his arm in a mix-up and retired, and while he was off Lindsay slipped in two more counters, Carew doing the trick on both occasions, one on a beautiful shot from the side and the other occasion on a lone rush. Graham got a round of applause when he returned to the ice. There was no further scoring and the game wound up 7 to 2.

SOLDIER TEAM PLAYS FIRST HOME O.H.A. GAME HERE TO-MORROW NIGHT

Another good game of hockey is on the cards for to-morrow night, when the 93rd Battalion Intermediates will clash with Cobourg in an O.H.A. game. There should be a large crowd out to cheer the boys in khaki in their first home O.H.A. fixture. The soldiers will have a big bunch of rooters in khaki, while the band of the 93rd will be on hand to provide music. The game is called at 8.15 o'clock and the 93rd will line up as follows:

Goal—Widdifield.
Defence—Matthews, Dupuy.
Rover—Montgomery.
Centre—de Puyjalon.
Right wing—Blewett.

THE RAH-RAH ARTISTS' GUIDE

Anybody can write a story about college life. If he has not attended a college, so much the better. His imagination is less trammeled. A few simple rules must be observed.

1. All heroes are named Jack, Stanley or Dick.

2. All college men wear sweaters, always smoke short, fat-bowled pipes.

3. There is always a "Fatty," who is a funny fellow.

4. Any four college men make up a quartette which can sing "Merhileeee we rohull alonnng" at any time.

5. All college men are wooing a girl named Dorothy or Betty, who is "sweet" and pure as an angel."

6. All college men address one another as "old hoss."

7. College men never study, but spend their time in tossing repartee back and forth.

8. All college rooms are adorned with pennants.

9. All college men call their fathers "Pater" and speak of the "honor of the dear old school" in a husky voice.

When a man is looking for trouble few of his friends are too busy to assist in the search.

GALLANT LITTLE SERVIA

A Resume of Events Which Led Up to The Invasion of Servia, When Germany Crushed Another Little Land—A Nation Retreats to the Mountains.

Written for the Examiner by Frank Russell

PART ONE

The heart that possesses any feeling of humanity must have been sorely tried during this war. First there was the treatment of that small, but brave, little country, Belgium. We all know, how fresh it is in our minds, how the treaty to which Great Britain, France, and Germany, were signatories was treated by Germany, when she designated it as

"Only a Scrap of Paper.

And just because it suited Germany to violate the neutrality of Belgium, which was guaranteed by that "scrap of paper," when to gain her ends in an attempt to subjugate France, she poured her hordes of Huns across that quiet, peaceful and peace-loving little land. Then there was the attack made on defenceless women and children — non-combatants bear in mind—when the "Invasion of England"

was begun, by bombarding unfortified pleasure resorts on the East Coast of the Old Country. Then there were her piratical acts, such as the sinking of unarmed ships on the high seas, without warning, the firing on the boatloads of innocent passengers endeavouring to escape their death—and so-on. Perhaps the best idea of their delight in atrocities, which have already horribly shocked the whole civilized world, may be summed up in what is now known as

"The Chant of the German Sword."

Not even the singing of the "Song of Hate" can now bring comfort to the German troubled souls.

The Berne correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette gives a translation which shows that the Chant, while German in spirit, is decidedly Turkish in style.

Here Are a Few Specimen Phrases:

"It is no duty of mine to be either just or compassionate; it suffices that I am sanctified by my exalted mission. I have slaughtered the old and the sorrowing; I have struck off the breasts of women; and I have run through the bodies of children who gazed at me with the eyes of the wounded lion. It is meet and right that I should cry aloud my pride, for am I not the flaming messenger of the Lord Almighty.—When Germany the divine is happy, then the rest of the world basks in smiles; but when Germany suffers, God in person is rent with anguish, and wrathful and avenging. He turns all the waters into rivers of blood."

The "Montreal Herald," commenting on this vile production, remarks —"The Chant . . . looks like the kind of fool thing a German would like to sing when about half drunk."

* * *

But never has the human heart been so sorely wrung as by the appalling spectacle presented during the past few months in Servia. It has been

More Like a Nightmare Than a Reality.

A brave little nation, which has fought, not for territory, nor gain, nor revenge, but simply for liberty to live, it has been assailed by four nations—Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria—all attacking her at once—four nations against one little peasant people.

* * *

Before I go on with the subject matter proper of my article, it might be as well were I to tell you a little about the brave little country, whose woes I am about shortly to detail.

Area, Population, and Religion.

Servia is the name by which this country is properly known in the English tongue. In the Servian language it is Srbija. It has an area of slightly less than twenty thousand square miles, and a population of barely thre millions. Belgrade (Biograd) or "The White Fortress," is the Capital City.

The population is of a mixed type, for instance about two and a quarter millions are Serbo-Croatian-Slavonians; about one hundred and sixty thousand are Roumanians; there are somewhere about forty-seven thousand gypsies; eight thousand Austro-Hungarians and Germans; and about six thousand Jews, etc., etc.

In religion the bulk belongs to the Orthodox Greek Church; there are about fourteen thousand Moslems, or followers of Allah and Mahomet; about nine thousand Roman Cathdlics, and members of various Protestant communities.

* * *

Now having posted my readers, somewhat, as to the area, population and religion of this little country, let me give them some idea as to its geographical surroundings.

Boundaries.

Servja is situated in the northwest of the Balkan Peninsula, being bounded on the north by Hungary, on the south by Turkish dominions, on the east by Roumania and Bulgaria, and on the west by Bosnia. The Transylvanian Alps, the Balkans and the Rhodope ranges extend from Roumania and Bulgaria into Eastern Servia, while outlying portions of the Bosnian and Albanian highlands cross the western and southern borders, the highest peaks being Rudisti (6,909 feet), Golia (5,909 feet) in the south, and Etani (5,134 feet) in the east. The country is thus generally mountainous, and consist of extensive forest-clad slopes, uncultivated heaths, and fertile meadows and valleys.

Hydrography.

The Rivers Drina and Save, which form the west and north-west boundaries of Bulgaria, effect a confluence at Belgrade with the Danube, which forms the remainder of the northern and part of the north-eastern frontier. It is joined on the north-east by the Timok, which is also a frontier river for part of its course. The chief inland river is the Morava, which rises in Bulgaria, flows through Servia from north to south into the Danube, with tributaries named, respectively, the Ibar and Nishava. The most fertile districts of the kingdom are situated in the valleys of these rivers.

Historical.

The earlier Servian kingdom was extinguished by the Turks at the battle of Kossovo in 1389, and from that date until the early years of last century the country was dominated by Turkey. After heroic struggles, the country was recognized as an autonomous State (principality) by the treaties of Adrianople (1829); and by the treaties of San Stefano and Berlin (1879) the complete independence of the country was recognized, a kingdom having been proclaimed on March 6th, 1882.

On October 19, 1912, the

Balkan League

consisting of Bulgaria, Servia, Montenegro and Greece, declared war against the Ottoman Empire, and the forces of the latter power were defeated in almost every encounter.

The White City.

Belgrade, the Capital, is in the vernacular Biograd, which signifies the White City. It is now a modern European City, with electric tramways and light, and wide streets. It contains a university, a national museum and library, and the old Turkish Citadel, and has a population of about ninety-one thousand.

Nish contains about 23,000; Kragojevatz, 20,000; Leskoviaz, 15,000; Podjeravatz, 14,000; Vranya, 11,500; and Kralyevo, 4,000, respectively.

Railways.

There are about 600 miles of railway open for traffic, the main lines crossing the Danube at Belgrade-Semendria, and uniting in a single route as far as Nish, where they run to the Bulgarian boundary and Sophia, and via Vranya across the Turkish frontier towards Constantinople.

Servia Is a Little Place for big events to spring from, and yet the murder of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the throne of Austria, at Serajevo, the Capital of Bosnia, on Sunday, June 28, 1914, was the match which lit the great torch of War, which is now ravaging the world.

The Archduke was

though his life had had a sad cloud shadowing it for many years; for the imminence of a fatal disease hung over him like a dread oppression and saddened all his days. Had he lived, calamity might have been averted; with his death the reign of statecraft went out and the

Reign of the Sword

came in.

We most of us know the story by heart; the first bomb which failed in its purpose as the Archduke was on his way to the Town Hall; the pride or obstinacy, which in spite of entreaties from the Duchess, the Mayor, the Governor, and the Police, made him insist on driving back through the narrow streets where no effective guard was possible, and—

The End.

Few amongst those who read the tragic tale dreamt of the mingled pride, and heart-break, it was to bring to hundreds—nay thousands—of our own people, or that more than a year after we should still be struggling in the trough of the sea, waiting for the proverbial ninth wave on whose crest we shall presently ride on to victory.

The Balkan Peninsula has always been between Russia and Germany, as it has for long been clear, that, in time, the semi-rule of "the sick old man," Turkey, must be driven out, and when that happened, who were to be the heirs to his lands?

Servia, separated only by the rivers Danube and Save from Hungary, has naturally been coveted by the Austrian Empire, which, with Germany behind her, would have liked to have seized or assumed a protectorate over her. Russia, on the other hand, desired to see the whole Balkan Peninsula turned into a group of strong and independent States. So,

Up and Down the Struggle Has Gone,

now in full view for all the world to see, now bidden away, but still alive, and ready to spring into the open again at any moment. War after war has come of it, plots, intrigues, murders and sudden death, almost from the moment the Servian history started in A.D. 600, when the Croats and Serbs migrated from the country adjoining the Carpathians into Illyricum.

(To Be Continued.)

One-Third of Soldiers' Pay Goes to Their Kin

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—The amount of assigned pay and separation allowance now being sent out monthly by the Militia Department to dependants or relatives of the men at the front totals about $2,000,000.

There are some 90,000 names on the list of recipients. The total monthly pay roll of the department is now something like $6,000,000. Consequently about one-third of the pay earned by the men on active service is assigned to the kin they left behind them.

CANADA'S FIGHTING FORCES

WONDERFUL PICTURES OF OUR BOYS ON THE BATTLEFIELD. AUTHORIZED BY CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

OTTAWA EVENING JOURNAL says: "Lieut. D Dwyer, of the 30th Victoria Battalion, C.E.F., and official staff photographer for the Canadian Government, was called to the Royal Box and Complimented by His Royal Highness on the excellence of the pictures secured"

Received Box in the Trenches On Christmas Day

Armourer-Corporal W. Angus McIntosh in a recent letter to his parents wrote that on Christmas morning he received a big box forwarded by the ladies of George Street Methodist Church. Its arrival was most timely and the ladies will be pleased to learn that their holiday remembrances reached their destination on Christmas morning. Corporal McIntosh with his pals decorated their dug out with holly, pansies and violets—the country is blooming now — and built an arched door of boxwood as an entrance to their quarters. A Christmas box from Mrs. Veitch, Downie street, was also received by Corporal McIntosh. The present sport in the trenches in Belgium is rat catching. Corporal McIntosh sent his father a cross which he fashioned in his spare moments from a French bullet. It was the second one he made, the first having appealed to an officer who bought it and sent it to his own parents. In his letter, Corporal McIntosh mentioned having received a quantity of Indian rice sent by W. H. Hamilton and Company. The armourers have been very busy making repairs and doing other work.

A VERY INTERESTING CALENDAR

The Manufacturer's Life Assurance Company of Toronto, for which the genial Mr. Thomas Mark, of 374 1-2 Water street, in this city, is the General Agent, has issued a calendar which is particularly useful at this juncture. It is in the form of a sheet map of the world on Mercutor's projection, thoroughly up-to-date, in which the commercial and strategic position of the British Empire are well defined. The British possessions are coloured in red, and it makes the average British proud to see how very largely the red colour predominates. In fact the little country of England has "painted up," not the town, but the whole world, red. And in another year's time, when, we hope and trust, the present terrible—and unjustifiable and unrighteous on the part of its promoters — war is over, there will be some more red "splotches" to add to those already shown, notably in South Africa.

In addition to the map is a tear-off monthly calendar, as well as one for the whole year at sight. It is a very nicely got up piece of lithographic work.

FELL HEAVILY ON ICY SIDEWALK

Yesterday afternoon Mr. John Craig, 376 Stewart street, was returning from town, and met with a painful accident. On the east side of Simcoe, near Hunter street, his feet suddenly went from under him, and he fell heavily backward and striking on the back of his head was, in addition to being severely cut and bruised, rendered unconscious for several minutes. He had to have, and still has, medical attendance, and it will be some time before he recovers from the shock. His fall was due to the exceedingly slippery state of the walk, upon which he declares, not a single handful of sand has been placed this year or another means adopted to lessen the danger to the public from the extremely icy and slippery nature of the walk.

NURSE TELLS OF 50-DAY FLIGHT WITH SERBIANS

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—A graphic story of the Serbian retreat was told yesterday by Miss Cissy Benjamin, a pretty English nurse. She arrived here on the White Star liner Adriatic.

"I joined the British Hospital at Kragujewacv eight months ago," she said. "There we had a field hospital with seventy tents. When the Bulgarian invasion began we were transformed into a flying hospital, and moved to Pirot, near the Bulgarian border.

"We fled before the Bulgarian advance to Semendria, on the Austrian border, and in October we moved to Dobredora. Here the Serbs were defeated, and from that time for fifty days our hospital fled daily. In seven weeks we rarely slept in the same place twice.

"The patients were brought to us in automobiles, and after we had patched them up they were taken to the base hospitals. On November 21 I rejoined the base hospital at Pristina, and then moved to Prizrend. At the latter place we lost all our equipment and our hospital ceased to exist.

"In the retreat that followed we were generally six hours ahead of the Bulgarians. The courage and patience of the Serban wounded was the most wonderful thing I ever witnessed. The most severely injured, seemingly dying, walked for weeks at a time. They marched with us over the mountains into Montenegro.

"Hundreds died of cold. Austrian prisoners by the thousand retreated with us, and they were in a pitiable condition. The Serbs had little or nothing to eat, but what they had they shared with their prisoners. One man lived for five days on a small piece of stale hard black bread. A small loaf of black bread cost 10 dinars—about six dollars."

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

EYE TALKS SERIES

No. 7.---A Question Of Appearance

THERE is an idea in some peoples mind, that glasses are no improvement to the looks. Just consider this—If you have to make an effort, even the slightest, to see clearly, just take the mirror and try to see an imaginary speck in your eye. Then notice the drawn up appearance of your forehead, the wrinkles around the eyes, and the tense look of concentration there is on the whole face. Be honest in your judgment. Then drop in to A. A. Fowler's Optical Parlors, and let him put a pair of suitable Peblo Glasses on you. A look in the mirror then will show you a smooth, placid, face, with no appearance of strain, actually seems ten years younger. Which is the best looking? Your friends will say give us the smiling care-free face with the Peblo Glasses on it.,

WANTS WHEAT ON FREE LIST

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—Placing wheat, wheat products and potatoes on the free list is one of the principal proposals to be placed on the initial order paper of the session, to be made up to-morrow. The mover, is J. G. Turriff, of Assiniboia, who wants the American market thus availed of.

W. J. Northrup will renew his resolution for reform in the divorce laws and for amendments session extending the authority of the courts to divorce cases.

In addition to his recently published resolution that the Liberal Advisory Committee should be put out of business, J. H. Burnham will propose that the powers on the Trent Canal system should be employed for the public benefit.

Machine Gun Muddle.

J. H. Sinclair will inquire how much was received by the government for machine guns, how many guns were paid for out of such contributions, and also if the Government intends to return the money to the donors. If not, what does it propose to do?

Mr. Sinclair will also ask details of expenditure at Port Nelson, and whether it is the intention of the Government to provide a Minister of Munitions.

Mr. Buchanan wants information as to amounts spent for seed, grain and feed.

Naval Brigade.

E. M. Macdonald of Pictou will ask for the return showing Government vessels which are on service under the Canadian Naval Act, and those that are not on service, along with petitions regarding the establishment of the Canadian naval brigade. He also asks for a list of all disabled soldiers under pension in Canada.

BRONCHITIS SUFFERER

Cured by a Simple Remedy.

Columbus, Ga. "I am telling everybody what Vinol has done for my husband. He had a bronchial cough, his system was run-down and I felt sure he would die. His father insisted on his trying Vinol, and I am so thankful he did, because it cured his cough and built him up. My doctor highly recommends it and said he could not take anything better." Mrs. Thomas Monk.

Vinol, you know, contains the real cod liver curative extract, together with peptonate of iron, and beef-peptone, it enriches and revitalizes the blood and conveys to the system the vital elements necessary to strengthen the body and throw off the disease. That is the reason it was so successful in Mr. Monk's case.

Anyone in Peterborough who has bronchitis, a chronic cough, or needs building up, may try a bottle of Vinol, with the understanding that his money will be returned if he is not satisfied.

Central Allies Begin Attack On Salonica Lines

General Offensive Against the Anglo-French Positions Reported From Rome—Four Powers Are Jointly Engaged

LONDON, Jan. 14—A Rome special to the Daily News says a general attack against Salonica was begun on Tuesday by a bombardment of the British positions in the Doiran zone. The Austrians, Germans, Bulgarians, and Turks participated in the attack. The attack, the correspondent says, came from the Germans on the west, with Monastir as their headquarters, and from the Austrians and Bulgarians on the centre along the Guevgheli-Doiran line, while the Turks on the east concentrated at Tani Gunulgina.

The press of the Entente capitals is pointedly asking why Italian assistance was not sent long ago to Montenegro and especially to Lovcen, captured on Tuesday by the Austrians. Military observers say that comparatively small reinforcements for the impoverished Montenegrin army could have made Lovcen "the Gibraltar of the Adriatic," virtually impregnable to assaults. Its capture by General von Koeness, however, will enable Austria not only to command the Adriatic but also threaten any allied advance from Salonica and prevent any effective move by the Entente Powers through Albania.

For Italy the new Austrian success has a most serious aspect. The long narrow Italian peninsula is peculiarly vulnerable to an attack from the sea. Any really great Austrian naval base in the magnificent harbour of Cattaro would have been impossible without Lovcen, but in the new circumstances Austrian possession of Cattaro is regarded almost as great a menace to Italy as the German conquest of Calais would have been to Great Britain.

The battle that resulted in the fall of Lovcen has extended to the outskirts of Cettinje, the Montengerin capital. It seems fated to go the way of Belgrade, Nish, Brussels and Warsaw and suffer the inconveniences and dangers of occupation with those other capitals. Fighting is proceeding [illegible] ment, however, moved into the central mountains nearly a year ago and is not yet in danger.

Never before in the long history of the little Montenegrin kingdom has it been compelled to bow to a foreign conqueror, but there seems little hope that it can long withstand the overwhelming strength of the Austrians in men and guns, massed on the east north, west and southwest. The country literally is in a ring of steel, which every day is growing smaller. It is cut off from all hope of outside relief except through a trail directly north from the middle Drin Valley through Albania, a trail possessing no military possibilities and which probably could not be made practicable for a single company with its equipment.

Bagdad's British Colony Seized

Taken Away by Turks and the American Ambassador is Asked For Information

LONDON, Jan. 14—The British colony at Bagdad consisting of two men, nine women and children, has been taken off by Turks in the direction of Mosul, three hundred miles distant.

News of the deportation of the colony was transmitted to London through the American Ambassador, Mr. Morgenthau, and the American Consul at Bagdad, and these officials have been asked to obtain all available information.

The members of the colony were removed in he latter part of November, when British troops were threatening the city.

The Scot was noticed to help himself very liberally to the champagne during the early part of the dinner, glass after glass disappearing. For all that, he seemed rather downhearted and morose. COME AGAIN, HIS IRONICAL REPLY

Vice-President of the Turkish Parliament Writes of the Evacuation of Gallipoli

BERLIN, (by Wireless to Sayville, L.I.) Jan. 14.—"The vice president of the Turkish Parliament, Hussein Djahid, has contributed an article to a Turkish newspaper under the ironical caption 'Come Again, Gentlemen,' under the evacuation of Gallipoli by the Allies," says the Overseas News Agency.

"He sees in this event not merely the withdrawal of British and French troops but a turning point in history. He predicts that a new, victorious Turkey will emerge and take up her position at the gateway of Asia. This new period will bring liberation for oppressed Turks from English influence.

"Exultant shouts of joy, the vice president says, already are heard in every wretched corner of Asia. The basis for an independent Asia has been laid by the sacrifices of the Turkish army, and therefore all Moslems, and with them all Asia, greet with shouts of derision the retreat of England and France from the Dardanelles, driven out by the Moslems."

Railroads Solve German Problem of Food Supply

Products Sufficient Until Next Harvest is Statement in Reichstag

LONDON, Jan. 14.— Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent sends the following account of the debate in the German Reichstag on Tuesday on the food situation:

Herr Schmidt, socialist, said he was of the opinion that the supplies of provisions were sufficient and that only the way in which the distribution of food had been organized was to be blamed. The Minister of the Interior Herr Delbruck, then arose and said:

"The words of Herr Schmidt confirm the fact that all the parties agree with the government. We agree that under the special conditions of the war it is necessary to intervene with a firm hand as regards providing markets and fixing prices. Our products, when economically dealt with, are sufficient until the next harvest.

"The scarcity of foodstuffs and the irregularity of their distribution are general phenomena accompanying the war. The enemy and neutral countries are battling with similar difficulties. The prices are higher than with us, though they have a free market and open seas at their disposal. The feeding of our population is dependent solely on the products of our country, but the volume of our production and the excellence of our organization have made us stronger than foreign countries, although these apparently can operate in more favourable circumstances.

'In France, Great Britain and Italy the difficulties, due to insufficient carrying capacity and inadequate organization of traffic, are greater than with us. If we are mastering these difficulties it is primarily our railroad organization which must be praised."

Herr Delbrueck gives a detailed account of the organization which had been effected, and closed by saying the entire population must support it in a firm determination to get out of it all that could be got, inspired by a resolution to win a victory, which must be gained at home as well as abroad.

BATTALION'S LIFE ESTIMATED AT SEVEN MONTHS

Liberal Member Contrasts Irish Boycott and Labour Strikes With the Government's Course

LOSSES IS PER CENT.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—In resuming the debate on the second reading in the House of Commons, Ellis Griffith, member for Anglesey, attacked his fellow-Liberals who are opposing the Military Service Bill.

"I care nothing for the traditions of my party when the interests of the country are at stake," he said. "Do the opponents of the bill realize that the official figures of wastage at the front show that the life of a battalion out there is only seven months; that men are being wounded, sent home, and sent back again to the front repeatedly, instead of everyone being sent once before others are sent twice?"

Boycott and Conscription.

Mr. Griffith spoke of Irish boycotts and trade union strikes to compel men to join their organizations as forms of compulsion.

"When, however, we want to compel men to join the army it is treason," he declared amid loud cheers. "These men are necessary in order to free Europe from the menace of German tyranny and dominion."

Dillon Follows Redmond.

The opponents of the bill received another blow when John Dillon, one of the leading members of the Irish party, accepted the decision of John Redmond against further opposition to the measure. Dillon said, however, that he would have continued resistance to the bill if half of the Liberal party and all the Labour members had stood with him.

"Conscription has laid like a wet blanket over recruiting in Ireland," he continued, "but if the advice of the Irish party is taken I can assure you that Ireland after the war will have no cause to be ashamed of the part she has played. Ireland is with Great Britain in the desire to maintain adequate numbers for the army."

Losses 15 Per Cent. Monthly.

Infantry losses on all fronts now average 15 per cent. monthly, Under Secretary of War Tennant informed the House of Commons, in explaining why the Government found it necessary to adopt conscription to fill the ranks.

These figures take into account soldiers relieved from duty because of wounds, but who afterwards recover and return to the front.

Sir Owen Seaman, in "Punch."

We rocked ourselves in balmy sleep,
Knowing Britannia ruled the waves,
And while her watch dogs held the deep,
Never, oh, no, should we be slaves!
Others in less enlightened lands
Had lords to drill and drive and bleed them,
But, we, thank God, could fold our hands
All in the blessed name of Freedom.

By that most comfortable word
We claimed, as only Britons may,
The right to work, if we preferred;
The right, if so we chose, to play.
Under that flag we danced and dined,
Lifted the lusty patriot chorus,
And paid a few (that way inclined)
To go and do our fighting for us.
So when the sudden war-bolt fell
We still kept up our games and strikes,
True to the law we loved so well
Let everyone do what he likes.
This was a free land; none should tramp
In conscript lines, dragooned and herded
Though some might take a call to camp,
If the request was nicely worded.

And now we learn—at what a price,
And in an hour how dark and late!
That never save by sacrifice
Men come to Liberty's estate.
No birthright helps us here at need,
Each must be taught by stern proclamation
That they alone are free indeed
Who bind themselves to serve the nation.

He was a good twenty pounds heavier than Jakie and head and shoulders taller, but as he grabbed Jakie by the shoulders and violently propelled him into the hall nothing remained to the latter but to defend himself. Then it was that his training at the Neighborhood club on Willett street stood him in good stead.

No doubt it was James Walsh's intention to end the matter in one terrific onslaught, for the blows he aimed at Jakie in force and number were sufficient to have reduced him to the consistency of beef extract. But Jakie avoided them all. He sidestepped and clinched like a veteran and in the breakaway managed to plant one or two short arm jabs where they would do the most good. Just as Mr. Branscomb stepped from the elevator Jakie brought the conflict to an abrupt close with a stinging blow on James Walsh's upturned nose. It followed three wallops to the same member and James took the count.

"Here, you young rascal," Mr. Branscomb exclaimed, "what's all this about?"

Walsh rose sullenly to his feet, and Jakie, smoothing his hair with one hand, maintained a discreet silence.

"James," asked his employer, "how did you get into this mess?"

But James was making a desperate effort to cope with his rising emotions and merely shook his head.

"Come inside, both of you," said Mr. Branscomb, and the two culprits followed him into the directors' room.

"Now, what's all this about?" he repeated.

"Well," Jakie commenced, "he called me outer me name. Ain't dat right?" He turned to James Walsh for corroboration, since he deemed it best to make common cause against the foes of their jobs. James nodded sullenly.

"So," Jakie went on, "we got mad an' scrapped."

Mr. Branscomb sat down at his desk with an air of decision. "You'll both leave on Saturday," he announced. "We can't have any loafers fighting around here."

The two unfortunates filed out, exchanging malevolent glances, and passed into the anteroom. They sat in silence on opposite ends of the bench for a quarter of an hour, when Jakie rose to his feet and walked rapidly into the directors' room. He had made a brave resolve and was afraid to give himself thinking time.

"Mr. Branscomb," he commenced, "tain't I say sumpin'?"

The second vice president waved his hand in permission.

"Now, I ain't got no kick comin' because I gets fired, see," he continued, "but James Walsh, outside, is up against it."

"How so?" Mr. Branscomb asked.

"Well, he's engaged," said Jakie.

"Engaged?"

"Dat's right, Mr. Branscomb; he's engaged to Miss Doty."

Jakie looked hurt at the peal of laughter with which Mr. Branscomb greeted his announcement. Several minutes passed before the second vice president recovered his composure sufficient to pronounciate.

"Call him in," he said.

In response James shambled into the directors' room and blinked solemnly out of his one open eye. His snub nose was swollen to such dimensions that it vied even with Jakie's Hebraic organ.

"James," Mr. Branscomb commenced gravely, "what is this I hear about your proposed alliance?"

"Huh?" James Walsh grunted.

"I understand that Miss Doty is the fortunate lady," his employer continued.

The rest of James Walsh's puffed features assumed the hue of his nose. "Say, Mr. Branscomb," he protested, "I don't know wot dis kid has been givin' yer, but"—

"To put it more plainly," Mr. Branscomb interrupted, "he says that he thinks I ought to give you back your job because you're engaged to be married to Miss Doty."

"Aw, he's daffy!" James Walsh blurted out.

Jakie turned an astonished face toward his confrere.

"Why," he exclaimed, "ain't youse engaged?"

"Aw, cut it out!" James Walsh rejoined and abruptly left the room.

Jakie shifted from foot to foot in his embarrassment. He certainly had made a mess of it, he cogitated; but, then again, weren't their actions those of an engaged couple?

"I guess you'd better go outside," Mr. Branscomb interrupted, "and tell Miss Doty I'd like to see her."

Sorrowfully Jakie departed and delivered his message. Then he repaired to the outer office to sit with the sulky James Walsh, whose presence alone stemmed his impending tears. How was he to know that Miss Doty and James Walsh were just friends and nothing more? Surely appearances were against them; but then Miss Doty was such a lady, nicer than the teacher of 6A grade in the Maugin Street school. Yes, she certainly was a—

Here the tide of his reflection was interrupted by the person herself, who bounced into the outer office with her hat pinned on awry. As she passed by Jakie she hissed the one word, "Sneak!" and to James Walsh the equally offensive term "idiot!" Then she banged the bell door behind her and was gone. Mr. Branscomb followed on her heels, smiling grimly.

"James," he said, "you're a pretty good judge of women for a boy your age. On your way home tonight stop in at the International Typewriter company and pick out a homely stenographer. Tell her to come early tomorrow morning."

He turned from the hulking James Walsh to Jakie, whose eyes were bright with unshed tears.

"And you, Jakie," he said, "the next time you want to fight pick out a man your own size." He started to enter the inner office. "Oh, by the way," he called out, "I forgot to say that you both keep your jobs until further notice."

Jakie sat on the bench swinging his legs, too stunned to realize his good fortune. Soon he recovered his wits, and again the thoughts chased one another through his brain. If Miss Doty and James Walsh embraced, he reflected, it must have been on account of motives of friendship. On the other hand, he was friends with many girls in the neighborhood of the delicatessen store, but never once had he put his arms around them. Then, like a thunderclap, the true circumstances of the affair overcame him. He had spoke it all.

"Say," he croaked, "youse two wuz secretly engaged. Ain't dat right?"

James Walsh surveyed the agitate Jakie with his remaining useful eye. "Shurrup," he bellowed, "or I'll lift dat face off'n yer!"

And when after moments later Mr Branscomb departed for the day he found them sitting on opposite ends of the bench, giving vent to their emotions in comforting tears.

Lay Low For the Undine

Submarine Commander Who Won the Cross of St. George Tells of His Experiences in the Baltic

The submarine that sank the German cruiser Undine in the Baltic was the E-19, commanded by Lieut.-Commander E. N. A. Cromie.

Lieut.-Commander Cromie's bag includes about ten merchants ships besides the Undine. He received the Cross of St. Vladimir with swords for his feat in forcing a way into the Baltic, and later was personally decorated by the Czar with the St. George's Cross, the Russian V. C.

In a letter to his mother, Lieut.-Commander Cromie gives a humorous account of submarine adventures in the Baltic. He says:

On Wednesday the Czar came to inspect the fortifications and the submarines. I had a very pleasant surprise in being decorated by him with the St. George's Cross, the Russian V.C., and the best war Order they have, and five of my crew got the Silver Cross.

We did another 1,500 miels this last trip. I went to bed for the first two days out with "flu" and so directed operations from my bunk. We met a German submarine and had to dive in a hurry, and found ourselves down at 140 feet before I could get out of bed to take charge.

"A Lovely Bonfire."

The third day we found a lot of "wood" outside neutral waters, and after a short chase we made a lovely bonfire, being unable to sink the stuff. The "inhabitants" left hurriedly, leaving a small puppy dog, which we rescued.

Nothing travels by daylight since our last raid on the "hen run," so my special haunt was very dull, and I gave it up after four days, and tried another spot where I knew train ferries must pass.

We had an exciting chase, but it was spoilt by two destroyers and a cruiser turning up. Guessing that they would come back again, I lay low, and sure enough I caught the Undine in the afternoon.

The first shot stopped her and put her on fire, but she was not going down quickly enough, so, avoiding the destroyer that was after us, I dived under the Undine's stern and gave her another from the other side. It was a very fine sight, and made one feel that one did not care a——for the destroyers firing at one all the time. We arrived in covered with ice, of which I will send a photo.

The Emperor was very polite and nice, and said our work in the—— had made all the difference to the country. The little boy was very nice but rather naughty. I gave him some photos of ships sinking, which pleased him, and he has promised to send me some he took of us.

"Dined With The Kings."

In the evening we "dined with all the kings and princes," etc., in the train, which was a palatial affair. We sat down twenty-eight at one table, and still left room for waiting. Nearly all spoke English, and said all sorts of nice polite things, and I sneaked a menu card as a souvenir, but had not the cheek to ask for signatures.

Being a chevalier of St. George, I am pretty safe, as no one can arrest me without an armed escort and a band to take me to prison, and both of these are pretty scarce now. I think I told you that the other cross gave me the right to go into girls' schools and taste the food and express my opinion.

It was a very hard frost during the Emperor's inspection, and all were very much surprised to see us without greatcoats, but the cold is so dry here that one does not feel it so long as you move about.

Belgian Primate Going to Rome

Cardinal Mercier Obtains Guarantees From Berlin Permitting His Return to Belgium.

ROME, Jan. 11.—The Belgian Minister to the Vatican has been informed that Cardinal Mercier, Primate of Belgium, intends to leave for Rome after presiding at the consecration, to take place in a day or two of the new Bishop of Tournai.

Cardinal Mercier abandoned the idea of coming to Rome last month for the Consistory because he was unable to obtain guarantees that he would be permitted to return to Belgium. Having applied to General von Bissing, Military Governor of Belgium for guarantees, he was informed that they could come only from Berlin, although the General gave him such assurances as he could. The response from Berlin came too late to enable the Cardinal to attend the Consistory, but he has now been informed officially from Berlin that no obstacle will be raised to his return to Belgium.

"It is expected that the Cardinal will arrive here about January 15. He will reside at the Belgian College during his sojourn here. Pope Benedict has been notified of his expected arrival.

Suffered Constantly FROM HEADACHE.

To suffer from headache makes life miserable, and it takes a person who has been or is subject to headache to describe the suffering and agony that goes along with it. The dull throbbing, the intense pain, sometimes in one part of the head, sometimes in another, is caused by some disturbed condition of the system. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but whatever the cause, the presence of headache clearly shows that there is something wrong somewhere, and unless the cause of the headache is removed, some serious trouble is very liable to assert itself.

The fact that Burdock Blood Bitters reaches the seat of the trouble, and banishes the headache is due to its success in first relieving, and then permanently curing the cause of the trouble.

Mrs. Wallace J. Boyd, Milltown, N.B., writes: "Several years ago I was a constant sufferer from headache. I was all run down, and nothing seemed to do me any good. I read of Burdock Blood Bitters, and decided to give it a trial, and the result was marvellous. The headache stopped at once, and I feel better in every way since. I recommend it to all sufferers."

B.B.B. is the oldest and best known blood medicine on the market to-day, having been manufactured for the past forty years by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

TERRAZAS TELLS OF HIS TORTURES WHILE IN MEXICO

Held For $500,000 Ransom, a Bribe to a Villista Jailer Freed Him —Was Threatened Daily

EL PPASO, Texas, Jan. 13.—Tonight Luis Terrazas, 2d, in the private dining room of his father's home on Golden Hill, told the Times correspondent the story of his confinement as a hostage of Villa, in the Chihuahua prison.

"My story is only the plain taile of torture which hundreds of Mexican citizens could have told had they lived," he said. "As you of the border know, political affairs in Mexico. My brother Alberto and my father have been active in political affairs, but during all of my life, I have been too busy with the affairs of my father's estate to participate in any political movements. Villa knew this, as did his counsellors. It was for this reason that I consented to remain behind in Chihuahua when General Mercado and my aged father led the exodus from the capital before Villa's advance. I was assured by the foreign consuls who controlled affairs in the interim that I would not be molested and they promised to present these facts to Villa, which they did.

"While I was in the Foreign Club talking with an American friend, I was arrested, and thrown into the filthy State penitentiary by Villa's guards. Protests were filed by the Foreign Consular Corps, which were ignored by Villa, who announced that he was the only man in Mexico who had the right to say who should be put in jail and who liberated. No hearing before any court was given me. I was not told the reason for my arrest. In truth, I do not know to this day why I was tortured as I was, except that my father was wealthy and I was the tool for extorting money from him.

No privileges were permitted me other than those given the poorest peon who was confined in the State penitentiary. Fleas infested the cells, coming from those occupied by the poorer people, and against them we could do nothing, for we had no water for bathing, no way to get a change of clothing, and only what food we received from the filthy garbage cans. At times I was permitted to have food brought to me, but this was not often, and then I shared it with my fellow prisoners, for I never could have eaten it and seen them look at me with their hungry eyes.

"My wife, who had been accustomed to all of the comforts of our home, suffered more than I, from the things I was forced to undergo. When she came to me, which was as often as the keepers would permit, she would weep and lament the fact that fleas climbed over my clothing and other vermin crawled on the floor, while flies shared my food. Acting on an impulse inspired by her sympathy for me, she went to Villa, in spite of his known reputation in regard to women, and asked as a wife that I be permitted to have clean clothes and wholesome food.

His Wife Thrown from the Palace.

"Do you know what Villa did get an answer to her entreaties! Turning to two of his guards he said with a vile oath: 'Throw this woman out,' as if my wife were an animal. Accustomed to obeying every command of his, those guards actually threw my wife from the palace—the palace to which she always had the entree as one of the social leaders of the city and State.

"I became accustomed to my confinement; my mental tortures were deadened by frequent repetition over two years; but that one act of Villa so cut deep in my heart that I will never forget or forgive him in this world or the next."

"Senor Terrazas, how much did Villa extort from you and your family in the course of your imprisonment?" the correspondent asked.

"That is a question I have always evaded in the past for fear it would complicate matters," Cenor Terrazas answered. "But now that I am free I feel that I can speak frankly to you.

"When I was first arrested Villa made an arbitrary demand that my father pay $500,000 gold for my release. This he consented to do, although it meant the conversion of all his available property and wealth, even to the last penny. And my father, like the great man that he is, consented without an instant's hesitation, although he was past 80, and it meant his pauperization in his old age when he was expatriated and his property had been seized. But, like the shrewd business man that he is, he demanded that I be delivered at the border, and, as an evidence of good faith, placed money and securities in an El Paso bank to cover the amount of the demand. But Villa refused and, knowing that the payment of any sum while I was a prisoner in Chihuahua would be of no benefit to me, my father refused payment until I should be set at liberty across the border.

Tortured by Hanging.

"Then came the awful day when I thought my life had come to its end. A detachment of troops removed me from the prison. And that command was in charge of Raoul Madero, brother of Francisco Madero. I was taken from the penitentiary to an abandoned abode house and there hanged by the neck until the world was a blur and I thought I had seen my last day on earth. I succeeded in moving my head sufficiently to make my executioners understand that I was willing to reveal the hiding place of the gold of the Banco Minero which they sought. In the rush of the hurried departure it was impossible to take the gold from the bank, and it was hidden in a hollow steel column supporting the beamed ceiling. A hole had been cut and the money, all in Mexican gold, lowered into it. There they found it, and it was transferred to Villa's treasury, I was told.

"For three days I was unable to eat because of the contraction of the muscles in my neck due to the rope, and to this day I carry the scar of that rope mark on my neck. I was unable to take solid food for a week, and my health was permanently injured by the awful experience.

"That was one single incident. Not a day passed during the two years that I was not threatened with death in one form or another, either standing against the execution wall at the penitentiary, or at the hands of drunken guards. Finally, when my health became impaired, I was permitted to go to our town house; but the guard was not relaxed.

"Worse than this nervous torture and constant fear of slow death were the sights I was forced to witness. Day by day the men with whom I was associated in the prison were taken out and shot before my eyes. Ignacio Trigugin went first, and a faithful friend he was; then Governor Felipe Gutierrez, and another day Juan Prieto, one of the brightest legal minds in Mexico and a relative by marriage of my family. The victims died like men, but the sound of the shots and the dull sound of the flesh striking the flaggings in the patio will be with me until I die.

"Villa being bitter against my father for no better reason than that he was wealthy, naturally made my captivity as hard as possible for me.

Through the Bars to Freedom

"Then came the escape. We arranged with a keeper to let us out for a consideration, and we succeeded in sawing two bars. This left an opening barely large enough for a small man to get out. As I had grown stout with confinement, it was necessary for me to go through the opening second in order that one might pull me from without and the third man push from within. Then we made our way to the hills, taking the keeper with us, and I stayed at the home of a poor man who was a friend of my father's until I could make my way to the border.

"To me as a Mexican the United States has always stood for freedom in the abstract. But yesterday morning when I crossed the international bridge I realized for the first time what freedom really meant, and I said to my brother: 'Now, at last, I am free in the land of the free.'

"Never will I be able to repay those Americans who have assisted me. Myself and my family are under everlastingly obligations to those who kept my case before the Washington Government. In this, my father has informed me, The New York Times had no small part.

"My only plan now is to remain here, let my nerves relax from their awful strain, and try to forget the sounds of the dying and the weeping of many women. Some day I hope to return to my own country. Now I am with my family in a free country, and I am happy for the first time in two years."

Integrity is the foundation of a man's life; sincerity the mainstays.

Chivalry is not dead with men and will never die as long as men and women remain what they are. It requires a little more seeking to find it, but it is here, the same as ever.

A frank, candid, expression is best when you are dealing with people of that nature. People of opposite disposition think they see sinister motives in that attitude, and freely suspect others.

The aggressive person may be intellectually superior to persons that they come in contact with. The idea of thought to be conveyed may be better in hand with them than with others, but this very aggressiveness causes a certain amount of resentment that would not have to be overcome if more tact were used. The average person, convinced of the soundness of an aggressive person's thought, dislikes in a way to have things forced upon them. A person with less mentality could succeed, where an aggressive person would fail, although the idea or thought was not clearly expressed.

LLOYD GEORGE AND LORD MURRAY—Former Liberal Whip is in the left of the picture. The Minister of Munitions is on a tour of inspection of factories.

Getting Together for the Common Good

The war has caused a great change in the attitude of the general public towards the use of alcoholic beverages. Many people who formerly looked upon the sale of intoxicants with indifference or toleratibn are now awake, and realize the tremendous importance of the liquor evil.

What Caused It?

What caused this awakening? Well, the public learned from newspaper reports the grave effects of liquor on men who were working on munitions in England—how intemperance reduced the output of shells. They learned that, for military reasons, Russia had prohibited the sale of vodka and France that of absinthe, that England had reduced the hours of sale of alcoholic beverages. They saw, too, that the Canadian military authorities realized the danger of intoxicants, as witnessed by the recent restrictions put on the sale of intoxicating liquors in Ontario.

All these things, and others, combined to make people think.

And to-day people are asking themselves and one another if it is not time to make a great step forward and banish the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario.

Premier Hearst

Extract from speech of Honorable W. H. Hearst in the Legislature during the debate on the Liquor License Amendment Act, March 30th, 1915:

"We are laying the basis for a steady forward movement."

"The policy of the Government is to minimize as far as possible the evils of the liquor traffic, and the Commission will be instructed to carry out that policy, and that policy alone."

"The leader of the Opposition is well aware of the dangers of going in advance of public opinion in temperance legislation."

Hon. W. J. Hanna

Hon. W. J. Hanna, in the Legislature, March 30th, 1914:

"In their temperance legislation for Ontario Mr. Hanna maintained they were keeping pace with the mind of the people, they were going as fast with their legislation and with their administration of law as the condition of things in the Province warranted."

Toronto World

The Toronto World, Dec. 16, 1915:

"The nation and the Empire is not only in a gigantic struggle with the German menace, but a mightier struggle seems to be going on within the great British mind as to how the Empire and its peoples are to be best fitted, even regenerated, before the war can be brought to a successful issue. . . . And does this struggle turn, for one thing, on the drink evil? . . . The King has pledged himself to abstinence; Parliament and the bodies to whom it has delegated power have started in to regulate the habits of people, to restrict the use of drink, thereby to force the entire nation, high and low, to conserve its whole resources, energies and earnings for the successful ending of war.

"Is universal sobriety to be forced on everyone, from King and politicial chief down to laborer in the munition plant? Something portentous is under way, and the bottle may have to go."

Billy Sunday

"The saloon is a liar. She promises you good cheer. She sends you sorrow. She promises you health. She sends you disease. She promises you prosperity. She sends you poverty. She sends the husband home with a lie on his lips to his wife. She sends the son home with a lie on his lips to his mother."

Non-Partisan Organization

Realizing the present state of public opinion, a non-partisan organization has been formed, with the object of securing the enactment of a measure for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario. The Citizens' Committee of One Hundred is the name of this organization, and it represents the whole Province. It numbers men on both sides of politics—men who believe that the liquor question should be taken out of politics—men who are getting together to work for the common good.

The Committee of One Hundred recognizes that no one political party can claim a monopoly of temperance principles. Both parties, being responsible to the people, realize the necessity of enacting temperance legislation in harmony with public opinion. At the session of the Ontario Legislature on March 8th, 1913, the late Sir James Whitney, in speaking on the temperance question, used the following language:—

"We will stand by our pledges, as we have during the past eight years. We will never cease so long as political life is in us to do everything that reasonable men can do to minimize and make less from year to year the almost unimaginable evils of the liquor traffic."

Premier Hearst and other members of the Cabinet have from time to time declared that the Government will keep fully abreast of public opinion in temperance legislation, as in other fields. The Committee of One Hundred believe the Government to be thoroughly sincere in this stand. The Committee have confidence that the Government will move forward in this important matter as rapidly as public opinion will support them.

The function of the Committee of One Hundred is to crystalize and give expression to the present state of public opinion on the question of prohibition. The Committee further believes that it can demonstrate to the Government that Ontario to-day is overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition. After doing so, the Committee intends to ask the Government for the enactment of a measure for the total prohibition of the liquor traffic in the Province of Ontario, in so far as the Provincial Government has the power to prohibit it, or to submit the same to the people for ratification or rejection.

The Committee of One Hundred asks all patriotic people to join this big new prohibition movement. The Empire to-day is demanding great sacrifices in men and money for the welfare of the nation. The colossal expenditures for liquor in Ontario should be conserved for other more vital needs—and the manhood of this great Province saved from alcohol's devitalizing effects. We want to hear from people everywhere who are interested.

N. W. Rowell

In addressing the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada Mr. N. W. Rowell said:

"If we have in our midst an institution which is demanding from us immense sums of money for its perpetuation, and is giving no value, but is impairing the efficiency of the men who go, as well as of the men who stay, there is one clear duty for every patriotic citizen, and that is to say, to the full measure of his power, that the curse shall be wiped out."

Sir Geo. E. Foster

Hon. Sir Geo. E. Foster, in speaking at the banquet of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada, said:

"We have the unemployed, we have distress in some homes in Canada. There is food enough, animal and vegetable, in this country, allowed to waste, or actually wasted, to feed every hungry mouth in the whole Dominion if it were saved, if it were conserved. I confess to you that every time I see an open bar and see young soldiers going into it and coming out of it, every time I pass an open bar and see one of the unemployed, who, perchance, has got a day's employment and has waited only to get his wage and then make a bee-line for that bar—I confess my soul cries out for the closed bar in this great Dominion of ours."

Lloyd George

In the House of Commons, March 29, 1915:

"We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink, and so far as I can see the greatest of these foes is drink. . . . I have a growing conviction that nothing but root and branch methods would be of the slightest avail in dealing with the evil. . . . I believe it is the general feeling that if we are to settle German militarism we must first of all settle with drink. . . . I am permitted by his Majesty to say that he is very deeply concerned on this question."

Toronto Health Bulletin

The above publication is issued monthly by the Toronto Department of Public Health, of which Dr. C. J. Hastings is the head. The October, 1915, number says:

"Of the various habit-forming drugs alcohol stands out pre-eminently as the greatest universal curse to humanity, and has practically no redeeming features. In the light of modern knowledge, alcohol, which once occupied a prominent place in the treatment of disease, is becoming more and more discredited every year. . . . In the first place, through the economic effects on the home. . . . In the second place, we have the influence of alcohol on the users themselves forcefully presented to us by life insurance companies. They have demonstrated in a very clear way the influence of alcohol on the duration of life, and have, of late years, been giving special attention to this source of danger."

Mr. Flammarian Explains Reasons For Variation in Length of Day

One is often asked what is the shortest day in the year and why the variation in the length of this day is irregular.

The variation in the length of the day throughout the year is the result of the inclination of the axis about which our planet effects its diurnal rotation. If this axis had been perpendicular to the plane in which the earth makes its annual revolution about the sun the hemisphere illuminated by the sun would have regularly, from day to day of the year to the other, twelve hours of solar light and twelve hours of darkness, the circle of illumination passing at the poles.

But our planet revolves when an obliquity of 23 degrees 27 minutes, and at the two extremities of the grand axis of the eclipse of its annual revolution about the sun each of the two poles is alternately illuminated and in the darkness. This is what happens at the two solstices.

The winter solstice is reached on December 22. This day, therefore, is the shortest in the year. If the calculation were made to the nearest second the date of the solstice would correspond with the minimum of solar light for our latitudes. When the approximation is merely to the nearest minute this minimum lasts for four days, as our globe describes in space a long curve whose solstitial region forms a harmonious arc and not an angle.

From December 21 to December 25 the day is eight hours and ten minutes long. On December 25, the day has already drawn out a little, and its duration is eight hours eleven minutes the same as that of Dec. 20. The days then grow regularly longer until the summer solstice.

This increase is not the same for morning and evening. As the earth does not describe an annual circle about the sun but a long ellipse, the seasons are not of equal duration. From the autumnal equinox until the spring equinox the sun remains eight days longer on our hemisphere than on the austral hemisphere during the corresponding period. The hour indicated by the sun constantly varies, but for everyday convenience clocks should be regulated and noon as indicated by the sun dials does not correspond with noon on the clocks. Thus, for example, the real noon at the beginning of November is at thirty-four minutes past eleven A.M. That is to say, there is a difference of twenty-six minutes between solar time and the conventional measure of time, this difference having been increased four years ago owing to the substitution of the Greenwich meridian for that of Paris, 9 minutes 21 seconds more to the west.

There are consequently singular irregularities both in the hours of sunrise and sunset. Thus at the present time the dawn begins at a quarter past seven and night falls at a quarter past four. At this period of the year the difference between solar and legal time diminishes from day to day. The difference was 20 minutes on December 8, 18 minutes on December 9, 16 minutes on December 12, 15 minutes on December 16, and it is now only 11 minutes, while by Christmas the difference will have dropped to 10 minutes. This explains why the time of sunset grows later before the arrival of the solstice.

It should be noted in conclusion that from the time of Louis XIV, the Paris watchmakers' guild took a clock for its coat of arms, with the following proud device—"Solis Mendace Argute Horas" (It proves that solar time is unreliable.)

When They Wept.

The lady was complaining to her dairyman some time ago regarding the quality of his milk.

"Short o' grass feed, mum; short o' grass feed this time o' year," said the jocular milkman. "Bless you, them cows o' mine are just as sorry about it as I am. I often stands and watches 'em cryin', reglar crying, mum, because they feel as bad their milk don't do 'em credit. You don't believe it?"

"Oh, yes, I believe it," said the lady; "but I wish in future you'd see they don't drop their tears into our can."

British Fleet Shows Instant Readiness For Action Says Hollander

Once, at a time when all appeared to be peaceful and Germany's future who threatened neither on the water nor beneath it, when Field-Marshal Von Moltke stood on the roof of St. Paul's cathedral and cast his military eye over the almost unlimited extent of the Metropolis, he is said to have cried out with emotion, "What a city to sack."

If Admiral Von Tripitz (writes Mr. J. C. Van der Veer, the London correspondent of the Amsterdam newspaper, Der Telegraff) had been our companion as we, on board a destroyer, steamed through a part of the British fleet, he would certainly have cried out, "What a fleet to sink!" Well, his country has now a fine opportunity to send the whole of the British fleet to the bottom. But this task does not appear so easy as the German novelist, Gerard Seeliger, describes it not seven years ago in his word romance, "The Terror of the Nations." According to his account, a single airship was sufficient to send the whole British fleet to the sharks. With one explosive bomb the biggest Dreadnought could be destroyed. This war will have disillusioned Herr Seeliger, for in practice Zeppelins appear only to be able to attack defenceless towns and destroy dwelling-houses and ware-houses. They have never ventured an attack on the British fleet. Sic transit gloria mundi—Germania.

Praise for Bravery.

Under water the Germans have attempted many times to teach the British fleet manners. In the beginning things looked rather bad. I have now heard with my own ears British naval officers praise the bravery of German submarines, but are they able to do any palpable damage to the sea power of this country? The only torpedoed warships were of an out-of-date type, and not capable of much speed. No modern British warship has been lost in the North Sea, which has been the fate of certain enemy submarines which lie buried in the sand at the bottom of the sea.

What struck me above all the conversation with many British naval officers afloat is that they all take great pleasure in hunting submarines. "Lucky chaps," a young first lieutenant called his comrades on a torpedo-destroyer, which he saw set out in the misty darkness on this dangerous chase. It is to them the sport of the real war. It is also a change after the monotonous cruising on the open sea, where no enemy's ship shows itself on the surface. Sir John Jellicoe can also cruise round the North Sea with a broom at the mast of his flagship, as did our Tromp, of whose heroic deeds the above mentioned admiral reminded me good-humoredly. It seems to me that the British naval officers still to-day respect our naval heroes, Tromp and De Ruiter. Is that strange?

Britain's Part.

When the British destroyed conducted me through long lines of warships, passing out of sight on either hand, I thought involuntarily how proud our great sea hero would have been of the command of such a mighty fleet. Oh, say no more, never more that Britain has not done enough in this war. Her historical war tactics lie on the water, and if she equipped the greatest army in the world the war could not be won by it, but only by her strength at sea.

The inestimable importance of the fleet in the world-war is very often underestimated and unappreciated, not only aboard, but very often here, in its own country. People talk constantly about the British army, but seldom ever of Britain's fleet. That is due partly to the fact that the enemy does not allow the fleet to do more than fulfil the services of watching and patrolling, and refrains from an important naval engagement. I can well understand this on the part of the enemy now that I have been officially allowed a glimpse of the British fleet.

When I steamed in the midst of it I said to a companion, "This wants beating," and indeed I cannot conceive conditions in which the British fleet would get the worst of it, not only on account of the number of the various theatres of war, but also on account of the intrepid and cool crew that yearns for the battle, and, inspired by its famous traditions, is confident in the outcome.

Anxious to Fight.

The eyes of the British naval officers and sailors sparkled when I expressed the perhaps rather curious hope that this war should not finish without a great sea battle. Their frank glances confirmed their words: "We want nothing better." And a warlike sailor brought up to war can wish for nothing better in a just cause than to show his mettle—to show what he is worth.

In my memory there remains unforgettable the well-meant and indescribable words which Rear-Admiral Sir R. Fremantle spoke to me. While we stood together on the pitch-black torpedo-boat destroyer which shot ahead like a greyhound cleaving the fog and the stormy salt water, Rear-Admiral Fremantle said to me, "Since the beginning of the war I have not left my post with the fleet for a single day. Several times the Admiralty gave me the opportunity of a short holiday with my family on shore, but I was not willing to take advantage of it. I served 36 years uninterruptedly with the fleet. No one should grudge me taking part in another war, and I should never forgive myself if I were absent during a sea battle."

A Waiting Armada.

The two things which struck another writer most vividly on a visit to the grand fleet were its magnitude and its movement, its multitude and its mobility. He writes.

A naval officer on board one of the ships said to me that there are, in addition to the war fleet, between two and three thousand ships of the mercantile marine employed upon transport and supply duties, and quite as many more engaged in the work of the patrol. In those portions of the fleet which I have visited all these classes of ship were represented. Of course, we saw the celebrated map whereon are marked the places where German submarines have been captured, destroyed or believed to have been sunk.

Not less significant than the impression of unseen power stored up in these potent war machines was the sense of instant readiness for anything indicated by continual movement which prevailed.

Every now and again, some unit—a division, a squadron, a flotilla or maybe a group of smaller vessels—would exhibit signs of activity, then quicken into movement and finally pass out of the anchorage.

What their errand none might tell, but again my informant assured me that no part of the North Sea had not been constantly swept by some section of the grand fleet or its satellites, nor had a German vessel of any size or importance been seen outside their minefields since January 24, when they paid so heavily for their temerity.

The Lion and Tiger.

The Germans must be somewhat tired by this time of being told that the Lion and the Tiger are still above water, but I must add my testimony. I saw both vessels, and on board the Tiger, as the guest of Captain H. B. Pelly, verified her identity with the ship that helped to sink the Blucher I talked with an officer who was in the control position on that occasion and had heard the whistle of the German shells, and with bluejackets who worked the gun which did such marvellous execution at long ranges. Here, as elsewhere, I found the men to share the enthusiasm and confidence of their officer. They have all but a sole desire and that is to see the enemy again. Of course, I found on board the Tiger the unmistakable scars of war.

Steaming down the line in a destroyer under the courteous guidance of Rear-Admiral S. R. Fremantle, I was able to get a further idea, not only of the numbers but of the diversity of vessels which go to make up the grand fleet. In outward appearance there was no great difference to be noted in the ships from that which they exhibited on many occasions on which I have seen them. But only in appearance; on board every one of them the preparations for action were numerous and varied. Each vessel had her fires alight, and was ready to move at a moment's notice. Nothing was wanted but a signal to send them to sea ready for battle.

The life, they told me, was not monotonous because of the frequent cruises, with their succession of thrills and the almost ever-present instinct of danger. Little trace I saw of the strain of watchfulness and never-ceasing vigilance. The feeling is rather an expectant curiosity as to what will happen next, but there is no doubting. When the enemy is in sight the silent navy will become articulate to some purpose.—Winnipeg Post.

BALED HAY FROM AMERICA BULLET STOPPERS IN WAR

GALVESTON, Tex., Jan. 14.—Many thousands of tons of Texas hay are being used as a bulwark against bullets on the lines of defence by the British and French governments.

This fact has just come to light by the statements of foreign buyers of hay, who also direct the compression of the bales before shipment from this port, to make them as nearly bullet proof as possible.

Three ordinary field bales are compressed into one bale before being loaded on a vessel. This process gives the bale a density that is said to make it equal to steel plate in stopping bullets. It is stated that trenches are being lined with bales of hay.

WOMAN 50 YEARS INVALID IN BED STILL CHEERFUL

BROOKLYN, N.Y., Jan. 14.—In a little room in a modest brick dwelling at 160 Gates avenue is a woman who has been in bed for almost fifty years. The fifty years will have been completed on Feb. 3 next, and her friends are preparing to remember her on that day by bringing as much happiness as they may to this patient woman. In fifty years she has not been able to stir from the left side of the bed to the right.

She is Mollie Francher, America's most famous invalid, the most talked of sick person, perhaps, in the whole civilized world. She has been the enigma of physicians and scientists, the wonder of every man and woman who has been to see her.

There are moments when Mollie Francher longs to be at peace. She is now an elderly woman of 66 years, and her curly hair has become thin and grey. In the fifty years that she has lain helpless she has never once moved from the ancient rosewood bed that has been a family possession for a century and a half.

Her World Within Walls.

The world, as she has known it in that time, has been compressed within the four walls of the little room on the second floor rear of the brick building.

In these days, when men grow despondent over trifles, it is a rare example that is set by Mollie Francher whose disposition is as sunny now as when she suffered the grievous hurt which condemned her to an invalid's life.

The clouds may overcast the skies, but they never intrude into her bedroom except when she thinks of the many friends who have passed on before, and now stand on the further side of the river, beckoning to her. Then she weeps quietly.

"The best that any one could wish me is that I shall be at rest," she said the other day.

Then the clouds melt suddenly as the mists roll away before the onslaught of the morning sun and she is even gay as she speaks of her approaching anniversary.

RAISE GERMAN BATTALION.

May Go From Canada to Fight for the Allies.

OTTAWA, Jan. 13.—A battalion of Canadians of German extraction for overseas service may soon be formed. General Hughes stated that several officers of German descent had made proposals to him, and he is considering the plan. He pointed out that his chief intelligence officer, Captain Hahn, was a native-born German who had made Canada his home, and was fighting for her.

Captain Hahn's father is a German officer and his mother is the daughter of an Austrian general. His brothers are officers in the German army.

LOOKING AFTER SOLDIERS FAMILIES

(2) Filing room. (3) Office staff.
(4) Miss Helen Reid, the presiding spirit of the Relief Committee, Montreal. (5) Reception room.

MONTREAL was the birthplace of the Patriotic Fund. Montreal made the record of over $1,613,000 collected in the six days whirlwind campaign, September, 1914, and the organisation under which the Montreal Branch distributes relief is considered a model of effective and economical administration.

Montreal and the Island of Montreal have been divided into twenty-seven districts, the interests of which are looked after by fifty-six ladies acting as Ward Heads, under the supervision of Miss Helen Reid. These are assisted by about six hundred lady visitors who undertake to make periodical visits to the families of soldiers at the front, investigate and report on cases where relief is requested, and generally act as friends to those who might otherwise be friendless. Although there are certain Government allowances, these are often found to be insufficient for large families, and at times, especially in the case of illness, immediate relief has to be given. The mothers are given expert advice on hygiene and the care of infants, and encouraged to keep their children regularly at church and school (twenty prizes are given for the best school reports), are taught principles of thrift and given free legal advice. The slogans under which the lady visitors work are such as "Provide Opportunity not Charity—and be a friend," "Guard the Fund—do not patronize—do not promise" and "Your service is personal, patriotic and civic. Let it be kindly, loyal and efficient."

The French speaking families are cared for by French speaking ladies, each ward having a French-Canadian, as well as an English-Canadian head. During the summer months lectures have been given in the both languages on hygiene and domestic economy, and the Parish Priests, the Ward Alderman, Ministers and Teachers are encouraged to take an interest in cases in their district or parish. There is a Patriotic Burial Fund and Cemetery Lots, a storage for furniture, and baby outfits and clothing for special cases. Over 300 doctors give their services without charge.

A wonderful system of card indexing and filing enables the Relief Committee to handle all cases with promptness and efficiency. There are between forty to seventy-five advices each day of changes in address, desertion, births and deaths, illnesses or discharges. In one single month 1,500 removals have been notified. The average daily attendance is about 300 mothers. Great care has to be taken that the Fund is economically spent and that no duplicate or unnecessary payments should be made, and this is only possible when the office organization is business-like. The filing room alone occupies the time of three ladies. So efficient, however, has been the Montreal administration, that the Boston Charity Organization Society has asked for a report and it is likely that the Montreal methods will be adopted in this and other cities of the United States.

Mr. Justice St. Pierre, Soldier-Jurist, is Dead After Remarkable Career

The Hon. Henri Cesaire Berrier St. Pierre, judge of the Superior Court of the district, of Montreal, who recently died at his home in Montreal had been ill for some time, but continued to discharge his judicial duties until six weeks ago. Since then he had been confined to his home.

One of the commanding and picturesque personalities of Canadian life was Mr. Justice the Hon. Henri Cesaire Berrier-St. Pierre. He was born at Ste. Madeleine, Que., September 13, 1843, the son of Joseph Berrier and Domitilde (Denis) St. Pierre. He was educated at Montreal College. Of splendid physique and dauntless courage, young Berrier-St. Pierre was filled with the spirit of adventure excited by the stirring times of his youth. The great Civil War was going on in the United States. More from the spirit of adventure than through any sentimental attachment for the northern cause (for many of those in the British provinces sympathized with the South) fifty thousand British-Americans fought in the Northern armies. Among these was young Berrier-St. Pierre. He was with the 76th New York Volunteers. At the Battle of Mine Run, Virginia, in the autumn of 1863, he was wounded and left on the battlefield. He was picked up by the Confederates and remained a prisoner of war in the South until the close of hostilities. During much of this time he enjoyed the discomforts of Libby prison, in Richmond, Va.

On his return to Montreal Berrier-St. Pierre studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1870, was made Q.C. of Canada in 1899, and Q.C. of Quebec in 1899. His splendid eloquence and thorough knowledge of law gave him a commanding position in his profession. He was especially noted for his work in criminal cases. He defended Shortis, the notorious Beauharnois murderer, and Caza, also tried for murder. He was chief counsel for the late Hon. J. I. Tarte in the famous Grenier libel case in 1897.

He was appointed a puisne judge of the Province of Quebec in 1903, and was transferred to Montreal in 1909. His decision for the defendants in the famous case of Mrs. Langstaff vs. the Bar Association was the occasion for much comment.

He was a frequent and vigorous platform orator, and at the general election in 1878 was an unsuccessful candidate in the Liberal interests. His advice to all his fellow Canadians was summed up in this utterance: "Be English, be Scotch, be Irish if you will, but above and before all let us be Canadians."

The late judge was married in 1874 to Marie Adeline Albina, daughter of Adolphe Lesieur, merchant of Montreal. She died in 1908.

He is survived by three sons and two daughters, W. Saint Pierre of the firm of Pelissier, Wilson & St. Pierre, George Pierre, C.E., of Montreal; Henry Pierre, Prothonotary at Bryson, Ontario, and Mrs. L. Belanger and Mrs. A. Prudhomme, both of Montreal.

The funeral will take place Tuesday at 8.45 a.m. from the residence, 2330 Park avenue, to St. George's Church, corner of St. Dominique and Bernard streets.

Some of His Reminiscenses.

In an interview a few years ago, Mr. St. Pierre gave some of his war reminiscenses. He had been sent to Kingston, Ont., to study after leaving Montreal College, and then to Toronto, where he was to have taken his matriculation. He was then 20 years of age, and an inherited impulse to be a soldier became irresistible. He crossed the border, enlisted in the Union army, and was placed in the 76th New York infantry. This was in the spring of 1863. For five months he was in several skirmishes and minor engagements.

General Lee attempted for the third time, a movement along the Shenandoah Valley to turn the right flank of the army of the Potomac, with a view to resuming his invasion of Maryland and Pennsylvania. The Union commander, General Mead, at first rushed his right wing in the direction of Richmond, but seeing that Lee was threatening Washington, he hastily retraced his steps and pushed the whole of his army with the utmost speed to head him off. He not only did this, but drove back the Southern army step by step until Lee retreated to the wilderness. Heavy fighting continued all through these operations.

At Mine Run, the young Canadian was twice wounded, and had to be left on the field. Stewart's Confederate cavalry picked him up and he was removed to Belle Island, opposite Richmond, Va. This was in November, 1863.

His name was given in the Northern papers as that of one of the dead. The news reached Montreal and mourning was very general. He was counted as dead by his relatives. Solemn funeral services were held at Montreal College, and in Isle Bizard, his native parish.

In the meantime the wounded man partially recovered and was transferred from Belle Island to the Pemberton building opposite. Libby prison, where he was kept for a few days. From there he was taken to the terrible prison pen of Andersonville, Georgia. The blockade of the coast and the destruction of Southern crops had brought about the most misery. The South was starving. While Southern soldiers and Southern families were often without food, sixteen thousand Union prisoners starved to death in the Andersonville prison camp.

There he was taken to Savannah with the greater number of his comrades and they were confined in the city's jail yard. From there to Charleston then in October, 1864, he was sent with some 7,000 or 8,000 prisoners to Florence. Again he was near to Charleston. He managed to plan his escape and remained [illegible] in the lower part of the city, which was under fire of the northern batteries at Fort Angel. He largely owed his safety to the protection of two Southern friends, Major Dubose and Louis Levasseur. The first was an old country Frenchman, and the second was a French-Canadian who had gone there from Quebec.

His liberty had been recovered the day that the city of Charleston was evacuated by the Southern troops, March 1865. Exposure and lack of food brought on an illness which laid him up under the care of the two friends named until November of the same year. Then, the war being at end, he made his way back to Canada. On Saturday evening he reached his native place, Isle Bizard. For two years he had been mourned as dead. The news of his return spread like wildfire and the whole country side flocked to greet him the next day, Sunday.

Then he was persuaded to resume his legal duties, entered the office of Sir George Cartier in 1866 and in 1867 continued his legal training in the office of Sir John Abbott. He terminated his legal course under Edmund Barnard, K. C., and Mr. (afterwards Justice) Pagnuelo.

MANIA FOR SUICIDE LEADS AUTHOR TO KILL HIMSELF.

STROUDSBURG, Pa., Jan. 14.—The body of Dr. Albert E. Hancock, author and a former member of the Haverford college faculty, was found near Delaware water gap, and by his side was the revolver with which he had taken his life. He disappeared from a hotel in Stroudsburg, leaving a note saying he intended to commit suicide.

Another note was found in Dr. Hancock's pocket which said:

"In the third year of the struggle to regain health the disease developed a mania for self-destruction. A current of suicidal matters passed through the brain by night for more than a year. Then came a period of [illegible]

Last September [illegible] broke out in a more continuous form, and during the night [illegible] spread into the afternoon and now the [illegible] for death."

Local advertisers unanimously endorse it for its result-getting efficiency. It invites correspondence regarding the Peterborough zone as a business possibility in 1916; the possibility of dealer cooperation, etc.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Comforter

A Story of President Lincoln Founded on Fact

By F. A. MITCHEL

When the great struggle between the northern and southern states came on Allan Fitz Hugh, twelve years old, was at school in Virginia. He was a boy of delicate physique, but was full of fire, and, hearing that Abraham Lincoln was coming southward at the head of an armed force, was much troubled because he was too young to shoulder a musket and repel the invader. He found it difficult during those exciting times to attend to his studies, and had it not been for the influence of his mother, whom he dearly loved, he could not have been kept at school at all.

In those days the passion attending war ran high on both sides. The songs, the gibes, the speeches and what was written concerning the great struggle were very bitter and usually far from the truth. In the north it was "We'll hang Jeff Davis on a sour apple tree," and in the south President Lincoln was called "the baboon." The northern schoolboy conceived the idea that President Davis was an ogre, not realizing that he was an educated gentleman, had commanded a regiment of United States troops in the war with Mexico, had been a United States senator and secretary of war. The southern schoolboy considered President Lincoln a wild man from the western woods who delighted in bloodshed. Children whose minds are not developed must concentrate upon one head all the movement in which they are interested. So Allan's thoughts dwelt upon Mr. Lincoln, embodying in him the whole northern army, which was to him a terrible horde coming down to destroy the south.

When Allan was fifteen he begged his mother to let him go to fight for the Confederacy. Naturally she clung to her son, and the matter was compromised between them in this wise: If the war was not over in another year Allan was to enlist with his mother's consent. Many boys of his age, both in the north and in the south, broke away from parental restraint and enlisted without permission. Food for powder was in demand, and the recruiting officers often winked at the fact that the recruits were under age. But Allan was his mother's only child, and, being of an extremely affectionate disposition, the bond between them was doubly strong.

So Allan continued at his studies, though he read more about the battles that were being fought than the subjects treated of in his textbooks. He lived in Richmond and at one time had listened to the roar of cannon during the seven days' battles that had been fought between Lee and McClellan. His admiration for soldiers wore away some of his bitterness against the Federal generals, but President Lincoln was still the embodiment of his repugnance for the northern people. The two heads—Davis of the Confederacy and Lincoln of the Federal Union—throughout the war continued to represent the bitter antagonism felt by either side.

In the early spring of 1865 Allan Fitz Hugh came to be sixteen years of age, and his mother reluctantly consented to his doing his part to fill the gaps in the southern ranks made by northern missiles. When the time came for him to leave his mother he was seized with a foreboding that he would not see her again. It is questionable which suffered the more at the parting, mother or son.

Allan enlisted in time to take part in one of the last battles of the war. He saw a dark line of blue on the edge of a wood behind earthworks. With the Confederate line of battle he moved toward it. Suddenly a storm burst in his face. He felt himself collapse and sank down on the ground.

His companions in arms went on, but were soon driven back and over him, leaving him there with a stream of blood flowing from his side.

Later he was picked up by a Federal ambulance corps and placed on a stretcher. He believed himself to be dying, and, oh, how terrible not to be able to bid his mother goodby!

"Mother!" he cried. "Oh, mother!"

A tall, spare man in citizen's apparel heard the wail and directed the carriers to put down the stretcher and, kneeling beside it, asked tenderly:

"What can I do for you, my poor boy?"

"You are a Yankee. You will do nothing for me. I wish to send a message to my mother, but it will never reach her."

"Give me your message and I promise you that I will send it for you."

The next morning Mrs. Fitz Hugh heard of the battle and knew that her son had been in it. While she was wondering what might have been his fate a man rode up to her and gave her a message, stating that it had come by flag of truce.

Starting for the front at once, the anxious mother succeeded in bringing her boy home. He hovered for some time between life and death, then began slowly to recover. Not long after this Richmond was evacuated by the Confederates, and President Lincoln went down there from Washington. When he was riding through the street on which the Fitz Hughs lived Allan was propped up in an easy chair on pillows, and his mother pointed out Mr. Lincoln to him.

"Oh, mother!" exclaimed the boy.

"What is it, Allan?"

"He's the man who comforted me when I was carried off that dreadful battlefield, and he sent you my message."

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N. S., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat troubles and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

Many Women Suffer FROM EXCRUCIATING PAINS IN THE BACK.

Do you ever feel that you must have some rest for that lame and aching back?

Do you ever feel that those shooting, stabbing, darting pains must be gotten rid of before you can get into condition, whereby you can attend to your household duties without a pain or an ache?

When the back begins to ache it is a sure sign that there is something radically wrong with the kidneys.

What you want is a kidney medicine, and a medicine for the kidneys only.

Doan's Kidney Pills know nothing but kidney disorders, because they are manufactured solely for the purpose of relieving and curing the kidneys.

Mrs. L. Melanson, Plympton, N.S., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial, telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me. For years I had suffered so with my kidneys I could hardly do my housework. I used several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief. I have used five boxes, and to-day I feel like a new woman. I cannot recommend them too highly."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Berlin Papers Admit the People Are Hungry All Day

LONDON, January 14.—Despite assertions made in the Reichstag that food is ample and starvation in Germany is impossible, the German press continues to print denials of the authorities' claims and to give indications of the "economizing pinch" caused by the British blockade. The Berliner Zeitung says:

"It is difficult to imagine that things could grow worse just now without much crowning disaster. The masses of the people are hungry, many articles of food having reached a price wholly beyond the reach of the families of the working classes. Hunger renders the people sullen and deprives them of all joy in victories, although all the bells are ringing and flags wave. The children are underfed, pale and wan, looking like faded flowers. The extent to which the fall in the birthrate occupies the attention of the government was shown at the meeting of the Peoples' Welfare Association at Berlin. On that occasion a representative of the Prussian Ministry of the Interior stated that the government was fully aware of the importance of the question in its bearing on the future of the German nation, especially in view of the fact that hundreds of thousands of young men are being cut off in the flower of their youth. In the meantime we are informed that the military authorities have forbidden meetings convened to discuss the dearness of living."

BOIL SAUSAGES, USE THE WATER FOR SOUP.

The Vorwaerts voices a strong protest against the attitude of officials who continue to exhaust the poor in proportion.

"For the mid-day meal," the Vorwaerts says, "one must not arrange matters according to his wish, taste or habit, but must select those foods which are most cheaply obtained. He must not eat red cabbage if green cabbage is essentially cheaper. You aren't to stiffen yourself with belly cuts of pork if it is cheaper to eat sour potatoes. Butter is scarce and dear. Cheap lard is also to be had.

"Grumbling won't help. One must think things out and make ends meet. You are advised to boil over water in which sausages have been boiled, which is described as an extraordinarily nutritious fluid, rich in fat. This fluid with plain boiled potatoes is enough for an entire meal."

A SIMPLE WAY REMOVE DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky, and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

World Disasters of Year Extended Beyond Trenches

Besides the disaster that came to non-combatants in the war zone, the world was appalled by a series of other catastrophies during the year and in the United States, the loss of 800 lives on the steamer Eastland in Chicago, July 24 stands out above the rest.

The steamer turned over when moored to its landing, hurling a throng of excursionists into the Chicago river and burying hundreds of them in the cabins. The disaster was the worst experienced by Chicago since the Iroquois theatre fire.

On the morning of January 13, an earthquake wiped out Avezzano, Italy and other nearby towns, killing more than 30,000 persons and injuring about 25,000. It was one of the worst earthquakes in the history of the world.

There were several big fires in the course of the year in which lives were lost. In the fire which destroyed the school at Peabody, Mass., on the morning of October 26, 21 children were burned to death. Factory fires in New York and Pittsburg also claimed many lives.

In a storm that swept the states of Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri, on July 7, many persons were killed and millions of dollars' worth of property was destroyed. A cloudburst that resulted in several deaths and a money loss of nearly $6,000,000 deluged Erie, Pa., on the night of August 3. More than 200 persons were killed in a storm that swept the state of Texas on August 16, and 17, the city of Galveston being saved from destruction by its seawall, which was built after the great hurricane that wrecked the city several years ago.

St. Louis was visited by a storm on August 20, which resulted in the deaths of 11 persons. On September 29, a hurricane struck New Orleans and other parts of Louisiana, killing more than 100 persons.

Loss on Sea and Land.

Two large ocean steamships were lost in storms in 1915. The Prinz Mauritz went down in the Atlantic, April 8 with a loss of 40 lives and the Marowijne was lost in the Gulf of Mexico in the hurricane of August 16, with 92 persons.

The worst mine accident of the year happened at Hinton, Va., March 3, when more than 100 men were killed and injured. Other mine accidents of importance occurred in Fayetteville, W. Va., and Wilkesbarre, Pa., Christopher, Ill., and Elizabeth, Pa.

Two serious accidents occurred on United States naval vessels. The submarine F-4 sank at Honolulu on March 25, carrying its crew of 29 men to death, and an explosion on the cruiser San Diego, claimed the lives of nine members of the crew.

Several persons were killed and scores injured on Seventh avenue in New York, where a new subway was being built, and a gasoline explosion at Ardmore, Okla., September 27, resulted in the death and injury to more than 100 persons.

Twelve persons were killed in a street car wreck near Queenstown, Canada, on July 7.

A powder explosion that resulted in the deaths of 21 persons occurred at the E. I. du Pont de Nemours plant near Wilmington, Del., November 30.

Brand new cemeteries were made for the French who fell. The new graves are curious. There being no time to place a cross or headstone to mark the graves, a wine bottle with name and matriculation number corked inside is stuck neck down in the middle of each mound. In cases where identification was impossible, the dead are buried in a common grave with some such mark as this serving for all.

"Here lie the bodies of 27 French soldiers who died for their country."

The dead removed, the cleaning up continues. Broken transports, shattered wheels, splintered planks, clothing, German and French helmets, ammunition, guns, swords, books shoes, revolvers and numberless other odds and ends including arms and legs lie promiscuously about on the churned up earth. These all must be disposed of.

This is a sanitary war. If there have been no plagues it is because the cleaning up has been through. All this gruesome collection is disposed of hygienically. Unseasonable material is parked and sent to rear; guns are stocked in orderly piles, according to make; bayonets and scabbards and swords and headgear and all the rest, ditto. The stuff is listed and shipped and receipts and waybills are all properly made out and signed and sealed.

Then the advancing army settles down in its new home. It has made a fairly comfortable place during the months of waiting, but all this has been left behind, and a new start is made. The former quarters of German officers and men are transformed, with much scouring and furbishing and disinfecting, into quarters for the French officers and men.

To-day the battlefield of Champagne is comparatively clean, but one still occasionally stumps one's toe against something or other very unpleasant.

CANADIANS TURNED BACK.

British Destroyer Nets Big Fleet of German Trawlers

MR CHARLES BIGELOW REPORTS THE INCIDENT

Arrives Here on Board the Adriatic Which Brings Nurses From Different Points.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Held up for two days by order of the British Admiralty, the steamship Adriatic, of the White Star line, which was to have steamed from Liverpool on December 29, did not leave that city until December 31, arriving here late Wednesday afternoon. Captain Ranson said that the holding up of the ship gave rise to rumors of submarines, according to other rumors the ship was supposed to be held up pending a decision of the admiralty to use her as a transport. Just what the purpose of the Admiralty was in causing the delay could not be ascertained.

Among the passengers were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bigelow, of this city. Mr. Bigelow, who is an importer, with a branch in Liverpool, gave a remarkable account, which he says he heard from a naval man, concerning the capture of a fleet of German fishing trawlers in the North Sea.

"The commander of a torpedo destroyer went out into the North Sea he said, "and saw to his surprise that side by side with a lot of English trawlers, there was three German trawlers, plying their business with as much unconcern as if there were not the slightest sign of war between the respective countries. He did not disturb them.

"Next day he found that there were eleven of the German fishing vessels; and a few days after that fifteen. He began to grow interested. At the end of two weeks the German fishing fleet had increased to sixty-seven, and he concluded that now the time was ripe to corral them. He took them to Dover, where their cargo was sold for $15,000.

Miss Cissy Benjamin, of London, another of the Adriatic passengers, who was a nurse in Serbia during the invasion by the Austro-Germans and Bulgars, was connected with what she calls "the flying hospital."

"I went to Kragujevatz on April 1," said Miss Benjamin. "We had a field hospital of seventy tents there. When the enemy began pressing the Serbian army we had to move from place to place almost every day. In seven weeks we rarely ever slept in the same place twice. Automobiles would bring the wounded to us, and after treatment by us they would be sent to the base hospital, which also had to be moved from time to time.

"On October 21 I rejoined the base hospital—at that time at Pristina, but later removed to Prizrend. There we lost our entire hospital equipment and fled before the enemy. We were generally six hours ahead of the Germans or Bulgarians. The courage, perseverance and patience of the wounded Serbs struck me as marvellous. In the end, however, when we had to cross over the mountains into Montenegro, hundreds of them died from cold."

Miss Dorothy Fenwick, another nurse attached to the English military hospital for the French, at Limoges, is on her way to her home in New Zealand.

CZAR INSPECTS HIS WOUNDED SOLDIERS—Convalescent Muscovites lined up ready for service again. The Czar and Czarina and royal family have taken a great personal interest in the soldiers from the front.

How The Soldier Back From The Front Is Looked After

A matter that is before the attention of the public just now is the status of the returned soldier. Both as regards those who return partially disabled, disabled in such manner that a rest and treatment will remedy the infirmity, and those who may be almost wholly disabled. All such cases are in charge of the department. But it must be recollected that this is our first war. That within little more than a year we, as a nation, have had to grapple with problems that are entirely new, that other nations have had years of experience in handling. Of course, the reflection comes up, why not take a leaf out of their book and settle it. But those peoples are not our peoples, their ways not our ways. Just as the habit and rule of the French department is to pay the soldier is about ten cents per day, that of the Canadian is $1.10, and the Australian a trifle more. Of course the main thing in view is to temporarily relieve the conditions under which the soldier who is returning is placed, and, further on, when his physical condition is determined as likely to be permanent; to make an allowance that will be fair and equitable for the condition in which he is placed.

To place the matter again before the public the following information which has come to the Patriotic Office, and which is embodied in a circular issued by the Militia Department, is printed. It concerns men who have been sent home to Canada, and are considered unfit for further active service. It will be seen that a man is placed in one of three classes, according to his condition.

Class 1.—Men returned medically unfit for military service, but cured and fit to return to civilian occupations, and not being recommended for further treatment or pension, and finally discharged.

These men on departure from discharge depot are given an advance of $10.00 to $20.00, according to the distance they have to travel and a cheque for the balance of pay due them, including pay and allowance for 15 days in advance, is immediately forwarded by mail. This finally closes the account.

In some cases the last pay certificates from England may not be available. When this happens the same procedure as above, is followed, with this exception, that instead of mailing a cheque for the amount or actual balance due, a cheque for an advance of $50.00 is sent, pending receipt by the department of the last pay certificate. Cheque in final settlement will afterwards be sent from Ottawa.

Class 2.—Men suffering from complaints that will answer to treatment and who are sent to military hospitals, convalescent homes, etc., or in some cases, to their own homes. These men are not discharged, but are given a certificate to the above effect. On departure from the discharge depot they are given an advance of from $10 to $20, according to the distance they have to travel. A cheque for the approximate balance of pay due, according to last pay certificate from England, plus an advance of $50.00, is immediately mailed. Further adjustments and payments will be made from Ottawa. They will be kept under pay until cured, discharged, or pensioned.

Class 3.—Men having a permanent disability which would not be benefitted by treatment, (such disability due to service). These men are not given a discharge, but only a certificate to the above effect. They are sent to their homes and kept on pay until such time as a pension is granted. As regards pay at discharge depot they are treated in exactly the same way as men in Class 2.

Separation allowance and assigned pay are stopped as from date of return. The men, themselves, receive their full pay and allowances, and, therefore, should provide for their dependents.

Married men, in addition to regimental pay and field pay of rank, receive a subsistance allowance of 75 cents per day, whether in convalescent or in their own home. Single men receive the subsistence if at their own home, but only regimental pay and field pay if in a convalescent home.

The foregoing relates to the military regulations. At a recent meeting of the Patriotic Fund Executive Committee it was decided that in the case of returned men whose families were already on the Fund, a monthly allowance might continue until the man was sent home; that is, during the period of his stay in a convalescent home in Canada.

It would be well if the reader of this article would cut it out and preserve it as a statement of the situation, so far as the Government is concerned, with the position of the soldiers returning from active service.

Seized With Paralysis Could Not Walk

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralyzed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up he turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St. Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr Elmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

ACID IN STOMACH SOURS THE FOOD

Says Excess of Hydrochloric Acid is Cause of Indigestion

A well-known authority states that stomach trouble and indigestion is nearly always due to acidity—acid stomach—and not, as many folks believe, from a lack of digestive juices. He states that an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach retards digestion and starts food fermentation; then our meals sour like garbage in a can, forming acrid fluids and gases, which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. We then get that heavy, lumpy feeling in the chest, we eructate sour food, belch gas, or have heartburn, flatulence, water brash, or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead, get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts, and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast while it is effervescing, and furthermore, to continue this for one week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys, and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used by thousands of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

FEARS RAGE WHEN TRUTH COMES OUT

Frenchwoman Writes From Berlin That Already There is Doubt of German Versions of War

To the Paris Figaro a French woman has written a letter from Berlin, describing in a very interesting manner certain conditions in the German capital. After telling of the daily increasing difficulty in procuring sufficient provisions and other necessities of life, the correspondent continues:

"Life here is becoming unbearable, and I am glad that it will soon be time for me to leave. The people here hate everything that is not German. They are absolutely self-sufficient and nobody else is of any account. They will not admit the superiority of any one, except God, perhaps. Nothing untoward has happened to me, however, but that is simply because I am living in the household of a foreign diplomatist, which forces them, although grudgingly, to show due respect to me and my rights. Yet I can almost hear them grit their teeth when I am among them, and I feel instinctively how they hate 'Franzoesin,' whom they must harbour and support.

"There is one thing in particular which exasperates them, and that is when they are refegred to as 'barbarians.' The idea of giving that name to these apostles of 'kultur'!—i.e., of true Vivilization. They hate France well enough, but it is nothing compared to their hatred of England. To the English are credited the blackest crimes under the sun, and every German, of whatever station in life, prays and hopes most fervently that the powers of heaven will some day strike and utterly blot out England and all the English from the face of the earth.'

"We are quite a few sympathizers of the Allies here, and in spite of all the bad news we are treated to in the war bulletins, we are not getting discouraged. Every day new victories of the German arms are announced. We have been told that Serbia was altogether crushed and that King Peter had been made a prisoner. At the time of the latest French successes in Champagne, the German version of the event read like this on the bulletin boards: 'The French occupied a few of our advanced trenches, but we retook them presently.' But they forgot to mention that these trenches cost them 120,000 men. Many have begun to doubt the veracity of the War Office and are murmuring over the unreliability of the news from the front. It is my opinion that these people, who have hitherto let themselves be led like sheep to the slaughter block, will become like wild beasts when they finally learn the truth.

"For the Figaro we have to pay seventy-five pfennig a copy and for the Matin fifty. Dear as these prices may seem to us transient residents with meagre purses, we never fail to buy our newspapers every day and then pass them around among us. Several Alsatians and Lothringians, who are Germans by force of necessity but whose hearts are French, are living here in Berlin and have joined our little Ally coterie. One woman from Lorraine, with whom I had a conversation the other day, expressed her sentiments in favour of our cause quite unreservedly. 'You know,' she said to me, 'they like to compare their Germany to an invincible steer. Maybe the comparison is fit, but what does it matter? In France there are yet some pretty good bull fighters, and they will surely be able to bring the beast to its knees.'"

Quick, Painless Way To Remove Hairy Growths

(Helps to Beauty)

Here is a simple, unfailing way to rid the skin of objectionable hairs: With some powdered delatone and water make enough paste to cover the hairy surface, apply and in about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. This is quite harmless, but to avoid disappointment be sure to get the delatone in an original package.

LUXURIES IN THE TRENCHES

Wire-Netting Beds and Paved Trenches—Wooden Huts Erected.

The French armies are undertaking their second winter campaign under conditions which are luxury compared with the improvised arrangements for their comfort made last winter. Warner Allen, representative of the British press with the French forces, states that so highly organized are the conditions now that not only has the army very little to fear from cold, but also the life of the soldier in the trenches apart from the dangers inseparable from war, is more healthy than his ordinary existence in time of peace.

While Germans in the first line are given only one meal a day and have to be contented at night with the coffee served out to them and with such provisions as they have been able to buy for themselves, the French commissariat has never failed to provide the entire army with two good meals a day. An extra ration of meat is now given to the men most exposed, and when the temperature requires it, hot drinks.

The most radical form, however is in making the trenches comfortable and healthy. They are even being drained and paved, and powerful pumps have been installed to clear out the water. The walls of the trenches have been strengthened. To make the shelters damp-proof the ground has been beaten down, levelled, and covered with planks or straw the earthen roofs strengthened with sheets of zinc, and due attention paid to ventilation and heating. In the second line wooden huts have been erected. The beds in these shelters consist of wire-netting stretched on a wooden frame.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies Are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its colour and lustre or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful and thousands of women and men who value that even colour, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the glossy and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Rev. John Davidson, of Thurso, Que., writes:—"I have had considerable trouble with my throat, caused by public speaking in heated buildings and exposure to damp and chilly atmosphere. I find PEPs very effective in soothing the throat."

Rev. Edward G. Heaven, Marksville, Ont., writes:—"I have used PEPs and find they give considerable relief to the throat. I have also found them very beneficial for colds."

PEPs is the direct treatment for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Hoarseness, Larnygitis, and other ailments of the throat, chest, and lungs. As PEPs dissolve on the tongue, healing vapors are liberated which are breathed down direct to the sore places. Liquid cough mixtures, etc., cannot be inhaled, they go to the stomach not the lungs. SAVE THE HOME BIRDS

The skins of two chickadees were noticed on a lady's hat the other day by an official of the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, says Conservation. The chickadee is one of our most beautiful and widely distributed birds, 70 per cent. of whose food consists of injurious insects. To all lovers of the Canadian woods it is a general favorite. There is every reason, humane, aesthetic and economic, for preserving it; yet thoughtless, fashion-crazy women persist in wantonly sacrificing it and others of man's feathered friends to decorate their millinery.

Not all women are included in this indictment, but the law should be amended to reach those who will not refrain from patronizing the slaughter of innocent and useful birds.

Already, our legislators have forbidden the importation of foreign plumage, but this must be supplemented by an act to suppress the traffic in native birds. It should be made illegal, not only to kill useful, rare and insectivorous birds, but the vendors and wearers of the plumes of such birds should be punished likewise.—Ottawa Free Press.

Wanted At Once 600 Men Apply At The Armouries

MONTENEGRIN CAPITAL HAS BEEN OCCUPIED BY THE AUSTRIAN FORCES

Cettinge is Now in the Hands of the Invaders, Vienna Announces Officially---War is Costing Canada $240,000,000 Annually --- Germans Reconnoitring Parties Annihilated.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

VIENNA, via Wireless to Berlin, Jan. 14.—Cettinje, capital of Montenegro, has been occupied by Austrian troops, it was officially announced this afternoon.

Austro-Hungarian troops pursuing the defeated enemy entered Cettinje, which is unharmed, said the official statement. The populace is calm. The Vienna official statement transmitted through Berlin carried no confirmation of the Rome reports that Austrian and Montenegrin troops have arranged an armistice preliminary to Montenegro's surrender.

PARIS, France, Jan. 14.—Reconnoitring parties of Germans attempted to survey our trenches at several points along the front last night, presumably with the object of leading the way to general attacks, but the alertness of our sentries sufficed in each case to divert these intentions, and in some cases the German parties were annihilated by the rifle fire of our men. The artillery was active in the neighbourhood of the British-Belgian front.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A wireless despatch from Rome reiterating report of an armistice between Austria and Montenegro states that it was Austria which proposed the cessation of hostilities with the purpose of negotiating a separate peace which Montenegro will probably agree to.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A squadron of French aviators on Tuesday bombarded the first line of Bulgarian trenches in Strumnitza sector wrecking several trenches. Despatches from Sofia quote the Bulgarian's Finance Minister as saying that the Teuton-Bulgarian advance on Salonika cannot be begun quickly owing to immense preparations required for it.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—An official of the British Admiralty, who arrived yesterday with despatches from London, brought news that the German battleship fleet left its anchorage in the Kiel Canal, where it had been since the beginning of the war, and made three sorties on December 15, 16 and 17, but did not come in contact with the British fleet. In explanation of the German manoeuvre, the official said: "The real food riots at Berlin and other cities in Germany early in December, and the feeling among the people have grown so strong over the British blockade that the naval vessels were forced to leave the Kiel Canal and make a pretence of search for our warships."

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Imperial German Chancellor Dr. Von Bethmann Hollweg to-day personally informed the United Press by cable that at no time during the recent indisposition has Kaiser Wilhelm been confined to his bed.

HAVRE, Jan. 14.—King Albert's niece, Princess Marie, was married to-day to Prince Philippe de Bourban, of France.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 14.—Turkish troops have entered the important Persian City of Kermanshah, seventy miles west of Hamadan, where a Russian force is operating.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The Amsterdam correspondent of the Daily Express reported to-day that the Belgian spy, Cels, who accused Edith Cavell, the English nurse, and caused her execution by Germans, was assassinated yesterday in a village near Brussels.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—The National Railwaymen's Union, one of the strongest labour organizations in Great Britain, to-day, defied the Government to enact the Conscription Bill. In the most drastic resolution yet adopted by any labour body the executive committee of the railwaymen declared their organization will resist conscription to the uttermost. They hinted at an immediate strike of all railway workers of Great Britain if the Bill passes Parliament. "Unless the Government is prepared to confiscate the wealth of the privileged classes for the more successful prosecution of the war," read the resolution, "the railroad workers will resist to the uttermost the confiscation of men, whose only wealth is their labour power." The executive committee declared the railroad workers overwhelmingly opposed to any form of conscription. They have not receded one inch, they said, from the position they took several months ago when they warned the Government that an attempt to enforce conscription would be followed by a general strike.

WINNIPEG, Man., Jan. 14.—With the proposal that if the MacDonald Act is defeated liquor interests in Manitoba will undertake to discontinue the sale of hard liquors in bars, a deputation representing hotelmen, wholesalers and brewers, waited on the Law Amendments Committee this morning. The idea is that only beer and wines will be sold in bars.

TORONTO, Jan. 14.—The morning papers' list of honours is wrong. General Alderson is the only Knight Commander of the Bath. In the incorrect list Sealley, Van Straubenzie and Watson are made Companions of the Bath, which is not Knighthood.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—No armed troops will be sent across the Mexican border at this time, it was plainly indicated to-day following a half-hour conference between President Wilson and Senator Stone, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 14.—A wild scene preceded Henry Ford's departure from the peace expedition at Christiania, it was learned here to-day. Several Ford leaders exchanged blows before Ford sped away in an auto to catch the train for Bergen, to take passage for New York. Ford, it was learned for the first time investigated Mme. Rosika Schwimmer's claims that she had documents from warring and neutral European rulers, encouraging the peace movement. After a quarrel aboard ship over President Wilson's preparedness programme, he discovered that they were politely phrased declarations of nothing. They were worthless. Greatly disappointed Ford retired to his cabin in mortification, under pretense of being sick. He was practically incommunicado for the remainder of the voyage. At the same time he hoped an enthusiastic reception by the Scandinavians which would give the expedition some hopes of success. When the Norwegians took the enterprise with ridicule and contempt, Ford determined to leave, and had Dean Marquis of Detroit, a chauffeur, and two other men, arrange the details of his flight. Mme. Schwimmer, Louis P. Lochner, Ford's Secretary, and others of Ford's intimates, knew nothing of his plans. They stepped from the hotel at Christiania. While the quartette was smuggling Ford into an auto several members of the Schwimmer faction threw themselves at the automobile yelling "murderers," "kidnappers," actually believing that Ford was being kidnapped. Ford's chauffeur was no pacifist, and besides he had his orders. He circled his fists vigorously in the chill Norwegian air, and the Schwimmerites retreated, Ford escaping to the railway station. It is the general belief here that Mme. Schwimmer's connection with the peace voyage was in the interest of German propaganda.

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 14.—The Canadian war expenditure is mounting with the increase in the size of Canadian armies. It has now reached a total of almost 150 millions, increasing the national debt from 332 millions to 515 millions. Expenditure on the war now is at the rate of nearly 240 millions annually. Revenues for the first nine months of the fiscal year show very satisfactory increase of twenty-three million dollars over the same period last year. There has been retrenchment during the months of eleven million dollars in expenditures on consolidated fund account.

The treasonable utterances of Col. Armand Lavergne in the Quebec Legislature last evening did not cause the furore in Ottawa that he presumably anticipated. It is quite possible that General Sir Sam Hughes will revoke Mr. Lavergne's commission in the Canadian Militia. Otherwise the Dominion Government is not likely to act, although the Provincial Government may act.

WOMEN FOR RECRUITING

Formed League at Enthusiastic Meeting Held Yesterday Afternoon—Outlined General Plan of Action

MRS. JOHN ALLAN PRESIDENT

Between sixty and seventy ladies, assembled in the Council Chamber yesterday afternoon, pledged themselves unanimously and with a standing vote to give every assistance in their power in the present urgent recruiting campaign to fill up Peterboro's 93rd Battalion. It was an inspiring and unique scene illustrative of the anxious interest which stirs the hearts of the city's womanhood and arouses to sterner activities their patriotic zeal heretofore confined to providing comforts for the men at the front and for their dependents at home.

They outlined tentative plans which will be further considered in the next few days and reduced to material form. It is designed to enlist the co-operation of all the women in the city, or at least as many as possible, to appeal to the young women to give their support towards securing the early complement of the 93rd and directness will be a feature of their endeavors.

It is at present proposed to maintain a central executive of eight members to be augmented by eight others, one from each of the city's electoral divisions. Each of these latter eight workers will be the convenor of a sub-committee in each of the respective sections, and it is proposed that they will gather about them a corps of workers to thoroughly cover each division, thereby leaving no part of the city untouched. Their campaign will be to assist as much as possible in the recruiting work.

Officers Elected.

The name of this organization will probably be, as was suggested yesterday, The Women's Recruiting League with the following officers:—

President—Mrs. John Allan.
Secretary—Mrs. W. R. Morris.
Executive—Mrs. Allan, Mrs. Morris, Mrs. A. E. Coulthard, Mrs. J. A. Aylmer, Mrs. R. H. Parsons, Mrs. (Dr.) F. C. Neal, Mrs. C. H. Pennyfather and Mrs. Peter Campbell.

The first work the women will participate in, will be the general rally on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week which the officers of the 93rd and Speakers' Patriotic League have arranged. Further details of the Women's Recruiting League's organization will be announced in the near future.

PTE. PATRICK DUGGAN

BIG SUNDAY NIGHT RECRUITING RALLY GEORGE ST. CHURCH

Mr. J. W. Flavelle, of Toronto, and Local Speakers Will Fire First Gun in Peterborough's Greatest Campaign

FINE MUSICAL PROGRAMME

As a variation to the recruiting rallies that have aroused Peterborough, a big meeting will be held in the George Street Methodist Church on Sunday night under the auspices of the Speakers' Patriotic League.

There will be five speakers to each of whom will be allotted ten minutes, thus providing for brief, snappy addresses by the following gentlemen:

J. W. Flavelle, of Toronto.
Col. T. J. Johnston.
Col. Arthur Stevenson.
R. R. Hall.
G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.
Col. D. Walker will preside. Musical numbers will be interspersed with the addresses, and an orchestra of twenty-five pieces will contribute selections.

This meeting will be a preliminary warming up for the big three-days' recruiting rally next week. Mr. Flavelle is an able speaker, and with the local gentlemen will doubtless present the Empire's position in a forcible manner. The members of the Speakers' Patriotic League expect a capacity crowd and look for the co-operation of the citizens in making it a notable event.

LINDSAY MAY GET A PLUM

Ross Rifle Factory May Move Plant There

Special to The Examiner:

QUEBEC, Jan. 14.—There is a probability of the Ross Rifle Co., which is at present employing 1,500 hands and paying two million dollars in salaries annually, leaving Quebec to establish in Lindsay, Sir Sam Hughes' home town.

ANOTHER FINE PERFORMANCE OF SAN TOY

A large audience saw the opera 'San Toy' repeated by the Peterborough Operatic Company, at the Grand Opera House and the performance made a great hit, going with a snap and vim that was refreshing. All the principals won fresh laurels for themselves while the singing of the chorus, especially in the "Moon" song in the finale of Act I. and in the "Motherland" chorus in Act. II., in which they were assisted by sixteen members of the 93rd Battalion Band, was delightful. Mr. Devey and his company are to be congratulated upon the great success that attended their efforts.

EXAMINER DOLLAR DAY

Date of the People's Big Event to Be Announced Soon

Preparations for The Examiner Dollar Day, were inaugurated with a wave of enthusiasm by the merchants this season. The date will be announced shortly, and in the meantime great activity is going on in stores getting ready the Dollar bargains. All merchants who have not been seen, are asked to communicate with Mr. Callander, at The Examiner Office, so their names can be included in the list of stores participating.

THE WEATHER

The weather has taken another cold dip, this morning the temperature standing at eight degrees below zero. No lower during the night. At noon the thermometer stood at two degrees above zero. The conditions are favorable for a low figure to-night.

SATURDAY NIGHT AT BROCK ST. RINK

Best Band Programme For Skating Yet Put On

There was a fine attendance of skaters at Brock street rink last night. The programme for to-morrow night is the best of any Saturday night yet arranged. There will be a fine band that will play continuous music from 8 to 10.30. At half time the ice will be cleaned.

From appearances it looks as if the best ice of the season will be ready for the skaters.

Skating to-morrow afternoon.

MONSTER CAMPAIGN TO FILL UP THE 93rd IN THREE DAYS

93rd Battalion, Speakers' Patriotic League and Women's Recruiting League to Co-operate in an Effort That Will Stir Peterborough From Boundry to Boundry.

A WHIRLWIND CANVASS

All recruiting efforts that have been made in Peterborough since the war broke out will fade into significance next week when the three day whirlwind campaign to complete the establishment of the 93rd Battalion will be held. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Jan. 20, 21 and 22, are the dates, and the campaign is under the joint supervision of the 93rd Battalion, Speakers' Patriotic League, and the newly formed Women's Recruiting League. Peterborough will be turned upside down for those three days, and every available man of military age and fitness will be interviewed.

The officers and men of the 93rd Battalion will take a prominent part in the campaign. Drill will be suspended for the three days, and with the exception of the men on guard duty and the office staff, every officer and man of the battalion will be engaged in the task of securing recruits. On the first day of the campaign the soldiers will be allowed to go wherever they wish, working on the "catch-my-pal" plan, and working among their personal acquaintances and friends.

On Friday and Saturday the men in khaki will be assigned to districts and will work under supervision from the headquarters of that district, one platoon and its quota of officers in each district.

The Speakers' Patriotic League will assign a number of workers to each district, while the Women's Recruiting League will also exert their influence wherever possible. Each member of the Women's League, and it is hoped to have at least 1,000 by next week, will wear a badge provided by the 93rd Battalion on which will be inscribed "We Want You to ENLIST NOW in the 93rd." Headquarters for each district will be secured in schools, halls or churches.

Returned soldiers will co-operate with the committee in visiting pool rooms and other places each day. When a recruit is secured he will be taken to the Armouries and medically examined at once.

On Saturday afternoon Major-General Sir Sam Hughes will address a monster meeting in the Armouries, which will be one of the big features of the campaign.

Captain Rollins, acting for the 93rd, and Adjutant McElhiney for the Speakers' Patriotic League, are the managing directors of the campaign. They have already installed their headquarters in the recruiting rooms on Simcoe street, and are hard at work arranging the details of what promises to be the biggest campaign Peterborough has ever seen. A telephone is being installed, and instead of a number the signal for the recruiting rooms will be the word "Enlist."

Fill up the 93rd in three days is the slogan of the campaign. Peterborough will hum next week, and citizens can look forward to seeing the old town stirred as never before.

WHAT WILL THE TOWNSHIPS DO?

The General Committee in charge of the new forward movement for recruiting, which is to be capped by the meeting in the Armouries Jan. 22nd, at 2 p.m., at which Sir Sam Hughes will speak, and returned soldiers will be welcomed, has sent through Captain Burnham, M. P., letters to the reeves and deputy-reeves of the townships of the County of Peterborough asking the townships' Councils to undertake an immediate personal canvass of the rural districts. The only way to get at the young men is through their own people, and this method, backed up by the loyalty and energy of the township Councils, ought to enable the 93rd Battalion to fill out its quota of 1,153 men within the necessary limit of time. But there is not a minute to lose. The Battalion has 600 now. The City has given more than its share of men. What will the Country do? Without a doubt the reeves and councillors of the townships will feel that it is for them to call upon the young men to enlist. Many other Counties have sent more men away and have done more recruiting in proportion to numbers than Peterborough. But one thing remains for Peterborough City and County, and that is for its young men to join the Colours—NOW. A month hence will be too late.

PTE. BRUCE MILLS OF 2nd BATTALION HOME FROM FRONT

Peterborough Boy Who Was One of the Survivors of Company's Charge at Langemarck Arrived Home Yesterday---Soldiers' Team Play Their First Home O. H. A. Game To-night---To-day's Military News.

Pte. A. B. (Bruce) Mills of the 2nd Battalion, C.E.F., and son of Lt.-Col. Jos. Mills, Inspector of Supply and Transport for No. 2 Division, arrived in Peterborough yesterday afternoon and was given a warm welcome home by his many friends. Pte. Mills, who was a member of the 57th Regiment Bugle Band before the war broke out, enlisted with the 57th quota in the 2nd Battalion and was one of the survivors of the charge made by Major Bennett's company at Langemarck. For many hours he lay on the battlefield in the "no man's land" between the trenches, surrounded by the bodies of his dead and wounded comrades. Finally he was able to make his way back into his own lines, suffering from a badly strained back. He had to be sent to England for treatment and after he recovered returned to France for duty with the Ordinance Corps. Pte. Mills has been recalled from the front to take a commission and will probably be appointed to the 93rd Peterborough battalion.

C. B. WIDDIFIELD,
Lt.-Col., Officer Commanding 93rd Overseas Battalion, C.E.F.

Mr. Jas. Kylie, 580 Downie street, has received an interesting letter from Pte. A. Picard who is now in France, and who left here with the 39th Battalion. Pte. Picard is in the best of health and does not mind the attacks of Fritz at all. He was much pleased to hear Peterborough is raising a battalion of its own and hopes to see lots of Peterborough boys soon in France. He would not miss the experience he is getting for a great deal. His address is:

Pte. A. Picard, No. 418515,
C Comp., 39th Batt.,
5th Brigade, C.E.F.,
France.

Pte. D. Copperthwaite of the 8th C.M.R., writing from Somerset Barracks, Shornciffe, Kent., to his father, Capt. F. Copperthwaite, 327 Burnham street, city, says:

Just a line to let you now that I have not forgotten you, although I don't write very many times. I got your letter and Christmas present and was very glad to get both. You ask me if I knew where Jack is. Well, I don't know just where he is, but he is attached to the 6th C.M.R. Fred Worboy and Jack are not just together, but they are not far from each other. Worboy is with the 5th C M.R. "Pick" Campbell is with Jack. I wish I was with Jack, too. I am working in the cook house just now. We have never had any snow over here, but lots of rain. It is raining every day. What do you think of the war? I think myself that this year will see the end of it. I hope so, and I will be glad to get back to Canada again."

Pte. Copperthwaite also encloses the menus for their three meals on Christmas day, which are as follows:

Breakfast.

Bread, butter, coffee, grilled sirloin steak, fried onions, fried tomatoes.

Dinner.

Vermecilli soup.
Roast turkey and cranberry sauce, sausage dressing.
Roast goose with apple sauce, roast sirloin beef, brown gravy.
Vegetables—Roast potatoes, Brussell sprouts.
Sweets—Christmas pudding, brandy sauce, fruit, jellies, blanc mange.
Dessert — Apples, oranges, grapes, mixed nuts.
George Beer & Co's finest pale ale.

Tea.

Tea, bread, butter, cold sirloin beef, cold sliced ham.

Our Army and Navy Forever
God Save the King.

Some fifty soldiers and four officers of the 136th Battalion will leave Port Hope on Monday next, January 17th, at 2 p.m., and march to Garden Hill, arriving at night, and to Bailieboro Tuesday night, Millbrook Wednesday night, Cavanville Thursday noon, and Bethany at night. Mrs. E. J. Downey, 158 Edinburgh street, a member of the Wives' and Mothers' Club, has received the following letter from one of the boys in France:

Somewhere in France, 26. 12. '15.

Dear Mrs. Downey.— It gives me great pleasure to write these few lines thanking you for the socks you knitted and which I am at present wearing. I received them as a Christmas gift and found your name and address inside one of them, so thought I would take the liberty to write you, and to let you know one of the boys from home had received them. I am keeping a note of your address and should I have ever have an opportunity to

THINK IT OVER

Isn't it better to have two pair of glasses in one, than to be bothered with two pair? Let us show you our kind of invisable double vision lens. They have no line to trouble the sight, and cost very little more than the ordinary single vision lens. Peterborough Optical Parlours, 410 George Street.

FRIDAY, JAN. 14, 1916

CONGRATULATIONS.

Congratulations, both public and personal, are cordially given on the fact that Mr. T. F. Matthews, was this morning elected chairman of the Utilities Commission for the fifteenth consecutive time. Congratulations are due to Mr. Matthews from the fact that he is considered, and is, worthy of the honour of the position. It is not altogether a personal compliment, for he would not have been continuously chosen as has been done had not his efficient official services commended him to the distinction. The public is to be congratulated upon a practical recognition of good public service that insures a continuation of what the city has had the benefit of, for the past fourteen years.

MISSED IN PETERBOROUGH.

The presentation to Mr. R. W. Travers, at the Peterborough Club, was simply a concrete exemplification of prevalent public opinion, and of popular sense of loss of effective citizenship involved in his departure from Peterborough. For seven years past he has been at the head of the Bank of Montreal in Peterborough, and whatever the technical value of his services to his employers, his relations to the public have tended to popularise the institution to the public. As a citizen, Mr. Travers unostentatiously, but effectively and practically, identified himself with our citizenship, and was an active factor in the promotion of every important public interest. While referring to the departure of Mr. Travers, it may be permitted, as it is amply justified, to refer to the still greater loss the city has sustained, in the departure of Mrs. Travers. During her stay in Peterborough she has been actively and effectively identified with many works of charity and beneficence; and the specific reference to her work in connection with the Peterborough Health Association, of which she was Secretary, in the annual reports, is striking testimony to the extent and value of her work, and the inspiration of her example. The citizens, generally, regret the departure of Mr. and Mrs. Travers, and feel certain that London will gain an important addition to the highest standard of citizenship.

HONOUR THE LADIES.

This war has brought women into a place of unprecedented prominence. All things considered women have been sadly distinguished by the sufferings the war has entailed upon them; and they have distinguished themselves by the prominent service they have given in helping in the cause of the war and helping heal its wounds. While women have done none of the actual fighting, they have done rather more than their share in other ways. They appreciate the call of patriotism, they recognize the righteousness of our side in the war, and they are personally enthusiastic in promoting the muster of the multitude of fighting men a clear cut victory calls for.

The formation yesterday of a Ladies' Recruiting cague shows that the ladies "mean business." The presence of 60 or 70 ladies at the Council Chamber yesterday to organize a Ladies' League to promote the completion of the 93rd battalion, shows that the ladies are in earnest and that we may expect more from their practical and practically directed efforts and influence than can be gained by the most spectacular recruiting "rallies" organized by men. We sometimes patronizingly admit that the ladies are not practical, but sentimental and weepy—making their conquests triumphs of tears. But in this recruiting matter, they have the practical side, the direct personal influences and personal appeal, while the men are the sentimental, trusting to trumpets and spectacular appeals—appeals all right in their way, but fruitless and barren, because they do not reach the men that should be influenced by them. We prophesy and hope for much from the direct, practical, well organized and well conceived Ladies' Recruiting League.

POPULAR INDIFFERENCE TO CIVIC REPRESENTATION

The following from the Toronto Saturday night is pretty severe writing, but, in principle, the conditions depicted bear a pretty strong family resemblance to conditions in Peterborough, where we have an almost absolute indifference on the part of the electorate to the personnel and character of the people who theoretically represent them, and are entrusted with the expenditure of the $340,000 taxes—over $1,000 per day—we pay every year. We give no attention to the selection of representatives till a few days before election, when we "select" or have thrust upon us, candidates of whom we know, nothing, and apparently care, less. We vote for them at random. They are elected and pitch into the work of spending our money—organizing committees, not on any particular principle of fitness or efficiency, but in deference to personal predilations or other influences entirely unconnected with capability for effective service.

It is an abuse of terms to say that the members of the average municipal councils, are elected. Election implies choice and opportunity of selection. We have no choice, and blindly vote for men we have no chance to select—they are thrust, or thrust themselves upon us. The Toronto Saturday Night's remarks are as follows:

The Toronto municipal elections on January 1st were perhaps the most ridiculous that have been held in the city of Toronto since the late E. A. Macdonald was elected Mayor, at a time when, as after events proved, he was not in his right mind. For a whole year the ratepayers of the city have been grouching about the incapacity of the City Council and the size of their tax bills. Then when election time came round, and they had an opportunity to administer correction through the polls, they suddenly forgot all about actual municipal issues and commenced arguing and shouting about a question which not one citizen in a thousand knew anything about. Even Sir Adam Beck, when his radial project was rushed forward ten days before the election, seemed to have a very nebulous idea as to its details, and constantly amended his statements with regard thereto. The agreement, excellent as it may be in principle, manifestly could not, as it stood, bear analysis. Nevertheless every demagogue, journalistic or otherwise, got his megaphone out to denounce those who took a serious view of the city's business as myrmidons of capital. As a matter of fact, the nerves of the people are so wrought up over the war that most of them are quite incapable of settling down to a careful consideration of public questions. They wanted someone to cheer for, and it must be admitted that Sir Adam Beck is a gentleman well worth cheering for. Nevertheless it is to be hoped that at some not far distant day the public will insist on having its affairs conducted with some approximation to businesslike methods,—although the outlook is not very bright.

The question is, are we not paying too highly for the type of vaudeville furnished us at the City Hall?

Here lies the root of the trouble in Toronto civic life. What should be a business body is turned into a political machine. The Orange Order is all right in its place, but its place is in the Orange Hall, not the City Hall. And just so long as this condition of affairs is allowed to continue by the voters, just so long will our ten millions odd per annum be improperly administered. Not since Muddy York became Toronto has the civic government been so incomparably bad as in 1915, just at a crisis when it should have been of the highest possible character.

As before stated in these columns, there seems but one way out, and that is to apply to the Legislature for the necessary permission to establish a commission form of government. Of course, we would run a chance of having Bill Crawfords on the commission, but it can be safely predicted, that as you can't spoil a bad egg, it would be quite inconceivable that the position would be any worse, and there is a chance of its being greatly improved.

Of course, we will be obliged to stand around and watch the Toronto money-wasters for another year, but in the interval the necessary machinery could be got moving to make a change in 1917.

Honest, did you find a man worth voting for on January 1st?

VALUE OF LITTLE THINGS.

The value and importance, collectively, of small things, is illustrated by the total of the contributions of the "one-cent-a-day club" of Ashburnham to the Red Cross fund. For the month of December the total amounted to $69.07. This club has necessarily a small membership, yet by patient additions of cent to cent a fairly respectable total, for an excellent cause, is achieved. If this mode of contribution were universal throughout the city the total additions to the Red Cross fund would be very considerable and the large amount realized would have been given without the contributors feeling the givings they would be making. The lesson taught by this system of giving, is to illustrate the value of small things. In our daily lives small economies, small savings, would represent savings that persistently and regularly practiced, would mean a very great amount in the course of the year. If we practised this sort of saving we should soon appreciate how much money we spend unnecessarily. The object of such savings is not to encourage the formation of habits of parsimony and stinginess, but to teach us to confine our expenditures to necessities, so that we shall be able to put by a little to serve our needs when the days of need may come. Such thrift practised as a principle would not only add immensely to the comfort and comfortable feeling of individual citizens, but would have its effects upon the national economy. We in Canada, as a country, are spending—bound to spend—lavishly to support the obligations arising from our participation militantly and otherwise in the prosecution of this war. The day of reckoning will be sure to come, and we shall only be able to face it effectively if we perform a consistent national economy, save in everything but absolutely necessary expenditures. Each one by making a little saving, cutting off a little unnecessary expense, will be contributing a share to future national prosperity. Each one may think his or her little saving— contribution—will amount to very little; but the lesson of the cent a day club shows how much amounts from little regularly-made savings. A cent a day saved—economized —by every member of the Canadian population, would amount to $80,000 per day or about five million a year. A greater saving which might be made would amount to many millions a year and be of appreciable benefit in helping solve our national financial problems when the day of reckoning for our necessarily enormous expenditure will come, as it surely will do.

There are many men who are not strict believers in religion, nor are they at the same time decidedly sceptical.

Britain To Use Hand of Iron

WILL STRANGLE GERMANY.

Naval Noose to be Tightened and Military Necessities will be Supreme Over "Foreign Office."

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Probably before the week is over there will be developments of prime importance in the world war directly affecting all neutral powers, according to information from reliable sources.

First, and foremost, the policy of starving Germany, economically and otherwise, as recently enunciated by Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Trade, will be carried to a further extent than has hitherto been found possible, in view of the necessity of reconciling it with the preservation of neutral interests. In other words, the naval noose around Germany's neck will be tightened to the point of strangulation.

The Northcliffe papers have taken the position that by the restrictive measures so far enforced, Great Britain was neither starving Germany nor even putting her to real inconvenience. The campaign for eliminating what the News called 'Foreign Office interference' has progressed to such a point that preparations are already being made for the announcement of certain steps which will satisfy even those who hold with Sir Edward Carson's view, spoken in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, that "the Government has been swayed hitherto by minor considerations; its duty is to use every means in its power to win the war; nothing matters but winning the war."

OLD DOORWAY A PRIZE

Wreckers May Sell Colonial Piece for Half Price Paid for Condemned Dwelling.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 14.—An old Colonial doorway in a modest dwelling in Franklin street, taken over by the government to be torn down to make room for the new federal building, will probably pay the building wreckers nearly half of the amount bid for the entire old post office and adjacent buildings.

The firm of Swift & McNutt, of Boston are said to be successful bidders for the material on the property at $500, and already more than $125 has been offered for the doorway.

It is intimated that a prominent summer resident is the highest bidder. Meanwhile the wrecking company is holding off.

A Wise Judge.

A Judge will be influenced more in his decesions by one salient fact than by reams of theory. Advertisers will do well to remember that the women of Canada are their judges, and as the buyers for the family it rests with them to make the purchasing decisions. Like the judge on the bench, they want facts. One fact is worth more than many generalities. The advertiser that gets down to basic principles and gives some real price and quality news, about even one article, accomplishes something. Make your advertising interesting. Tell people something they want to know. They will read your advertisements all right, and prove to you that real advertising pays.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

By Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D

Jan. 16, 1916.

(All Rights Reserved.)

Peter's Sermon at Pentecost. Acts 2 14-47.

Golden Text: Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. Acts 2-21.

1. Verses 14-21. If a Christian lives the Pentecostal life to-day is he as liable to be considered by the world, to be intoxicated, or beside himself, as were these first Christians? Why?

2. Did God mean this Pentecostal experience to be the normal life of every true Christian, or was it exceptional, or special, for that time? Why?

3. Verse 22. In what way has Jesus unpressed himself upon the world as no other man has done?

4. Verses 23-36. It was clearly God's preference that the Jews would not accept of Jesus; now if they had done so what would have been the result?

5. When the Jews would not accept of Jesus as originally planned by God, but instead, with wicked hands put him to death, what alternate plan did God then adopt for the salvation of the world?

6. What are the proofs that God raised up Jesus from the dead?

7. Verse 37. What were the influences then, and what are they now, which put men under conviction of sin?

8. If a person were to ask you what he should do to be saved what would your answer be?

9. Verse 38. What is it to repent in the sense here meant?

10. Can a person receive, or retain, the favour of God if he intends to sin again? Give your reasons.

11. Verse 39. What is the proof that the gift of the Holy Spirit is meant for everybody?

12. How many does God "call" to accept of this great salvation?

13. Verse 40. What is the evidence that some are saved through persistent exhortation who could not otherwise be saved?

14. Verse 41. What are not similar revivals to this more often witnessed? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

15. Verse 42. What is the benefit of Christian fellowship, and why is it not practised as it was in those Pentecostal days?

16. Verse 43. Why would you say that it is the bounden duty of every preached to aim for the conscience of sinners so as to terrify them with the fearful consequences of sin?

17. Verses 44, 45. It appears that they became one community, and had all things common, would you say that this was according to God's plan? Why?

18. Would it be pratical, or desirable, to have all things common at this time, and why?

19. If a brother has nothing are we under obligation to divide with him?

20. Verses 46, 47. What, if any, reason is there to believe that sinners would still be saved daily, in every church, if there were fellowship, joy, and gladness among the members?

Lesson for Sunday, Jan 23, 1916. The Spirit of Life. Rom. 8 12-30.

ITALY'S KING ON FURLOUGH.

Takes 28 Days Off From Battle Front to Visit Naval Bases.

ROME, Jan. 13.—Lieut.-General Count Cadorna, Commander-in-Chief of the Italian Army, returned to the Front after a twenty days' furlough.

King Victor Emmanuel began his furlough yesterday. This also is limited to twenty days, and the King will employ his time in visiting the bases of operation in the Italian Fleet.

Automobile Hit By Street Car

L. F. Clarry Was Injured as a Result

EDMONTON, Jan 14. — L. F. Clarry, master-in-chambers, is confined to his bed suffering from a nasty wound in the head and shock as the result of being thrown out of a motor car, when it was hit by a street car at the corner of Second street west and Seventeenth avenue.

Amsterdam in 1914 had more than 600,000 population.

A device to be attached to a comb has been invented to permit men to cut their own hair.

An Englishman has invented a gymnastic to prevent a bicycle falling as it is being ridden.

France Aiding Her Allies In The Field of Aviation

PARIS, Jan. 14.—The Matin says that for the purpose of obtaining unity of direction in the military air service of the Allies, the chiefs of the Anglo-French aviation corps will confer once a month in Paris.

The meetings will be attended by representatives of the other allies, continues the Matin, and it adds that French instructors will be sent to Russia, and Russian aviators will come to France to be trained with the units of service.

Since the beginning of the war, says the Matin, France has furnished her allies with one-fifth of her output of aeroplanes and with one-third of the motors she has produced.

SOME LAUDER ANECDOTES OF INTEREST NOW

Harry Lauder has an overcoat which he wears in bad weather, that is more conspicuous for its long and faithful service than for its adherence to latest lines and twists. He had it on in a western city a few days ago when he made the nightly dash from the stage door to his auto between two lines of the curious who always line his passageway, to get a glimpse of him "off stage."

As he stooped into the doorway of the car a street urchin yelled:

"Harry, your overcoat has seen better days."

Lauder stuck his head out and shouted back:

"Yes, and better towns."

The chef of Harry Lauder's private car, Mayflower, is a Scot whom the comedian carries the world around, because he loves his porridge, his skonge and other typical Highland dishes. The chef's name is Gregory McGregor Gregg, and his burr is almost as funny as Lauder's. Gregory has a darky assistant cook who knows more about partridge than porridge.

"How de ye like worrkin' on this car-r?" asked Gregg of his helper.

"Jes' so-so," was the answer.

The Scotch chef flew up. "Ye mean 'at ye don' like it? 'At ye aren't proud to be cookin' fer-r a great mon like Harry Lauder?" he demanded.

"I don't mind the cooking. It's the eating I objects to," whimpered the kitchen boy.

Harry Lauder says he will never go on a "farewell" tour. In contradistinction to the usual announcement, he advertises his successive years, so that he now proudly boasts of his "Eighth Annual Tour."

"This farewell idea is all wrong," he says. "Nobody ever retires in my business as long as he can stand up and keep his false teeth from falling out. I prefer to leave them with the expectation of a reunion in the near future, like the Warden of the Penitentiary, when his star prisoner was released, shouted after him:

"Good luck, and au revoir."

Corp. Carpenter's Certificate of Service Presented

To L. O. L. No. 50, Orange Lodge, By the Late Soldier's Father

On Thursday, Jan. 13, the regular meeting of L.O.L. No. 50 was held with a large number of brethren present, along with some visiting brethren. During the course of the evening all business was suspended, while Mr. Carpenter of Norwood Road, was admitted. Mr. Carpenter presented to the lodge a handsome illuminated certificate of service sent to him after his son, Corp. Herbert Carpenter, was killed while on active service. The late Corp. Carpenter's certificate is very handsomely engraved, gives the name, rank, battalion, etc., and is enclosed in a beautiful frame. There are several pretty pictures relating to the army and navy, and at the bottom is an excellent portrait of himself.

The late Corp. Carpenter enlisted with the first contingent in Peterborough on Aug. 7, 1914. After training at Valcartier and Salisbury Plains he was sent to the front, where he fell at the battle of Festubert on May 23, 1915. After the lodge thanked Mr. Carpenter for the kindness shown in presenting such a splendid gift, Bros. J. H. Spence and E. F. Reid told in a few words how his son was held in high esteem by all those who knew him and though sorry to lose him, were pleased to know that he died such an honourable death.

Business was resumed and the meeting closed with the singing of "God Save the King."

"Bible Prophecy and The War" Mr. Cowan's subject the Sunday afternoon meeting at the Y.M.C.A. Meeting starts at 4.15 sharp and every man is invited to attend. 2d-11

HEARTY RESPONSE TO BELGIAN FUND

Gifts of Money and Donations of Material Coming From All Over the Dominion

MONTREAL, Jan. 14.—As a result of the first appeal of the Belgian Relief committee of Montreal for assistance in feeding the thousands of destitute Belgians during the present winter there came to the offices at 59 St. Peter street the other day thirty-four dollars from the teachers of Mount Allison Ladies' College, Sackville, N.B. The gift was a spontaneous one. The money was sent enclosed with a copy of the first advertisement of the Belgian Relief committee, asking for money.

This is but one of many such instances which have already swelled the funds now at the disposal of the Montreal committee to thousands of dollars. Other gifts have been larger, others smaller, but all are equally welcome. Some of the gifts have been in cash and others in donations of materials, both of which are acceptable and are received with the gratitude of those who are devoting their energies to this able cause.

Among the early ones to respond was the Coaticook, Que., Baptist Sunday school, one of the hundreds of Sunday schools of the Dominion working for the cause. The gift of this organization consisted of $61.12 and two cases of clothing. The neighbouring town of Lennoxville through its Patriotic Association, sent a cheque for $112.50.

The women of Grafton, Ont., have been among the active ones of the smaller places and through the Ladies' Club have sent thirty dollars. A public concert at Rathilda, Sask., resulted in the forwarding of fifty dollars, while a Public school class at Fort Qu-Appelle, Sask., sent $1.50.

St. Martin's church Sunday school, Montreal, has given $37.60. One of the larger single donations comes from Red Deer, Alta., where the local newspaper collected $600.

Perhaps one of the most interesting gifts is the one from Dawson City, from one of the faraway corners of the Dominion. The Klondike Chapter, Imperial Order of Daughters of the Empire, sent $126.91. From much nearer the committee headquarters come the gifts of $50 from the city of Outremont, and other similar gifts.

Sunday Afternoon Meeting at The Y. M. C. A.

Mr. H. B. Cowan, Chairman of the Y.M.C.A. Physical Work Committee, will start a series of addresses of special interest to young men. The subject of the series will be "Bible Prophecy and the War." There will be bright, cheery music, and every man will be glad to feel at home. The meeting will be held at 4.15, sharp, and will not exceed one hour's duration, and it is hoped there will be a good attendance.

FROST BRINGS OUT A KICK

The Ohio farmers, who were recently announced as having discovered a new way to turn hard cider into near whiskey have nothing "on" the canny Pennsylvania farmers of this Eastern Pennsylvania region, says a Reading, Pa., despatch. They don't have to use a cream separator to take the water out of the cider, leaving a residue of apple flavoured alcohol, like the farmers in the arid districts of the Buckeye State. Here in the Schuylkill and Lebanon Valleys they let Dame Nature turn the trick.

Take a small tub and partly fill it with cider on a very cold night. Set it out in the cold, where the frigid temperature can affect the cider to the limit, but keep it covered so that the alcohol and the apple aroma may not "fade away."

The mercury will do the rest. In the morning the water in the cider will be found to be frozen solid, covering the alcohol, with its apple-jack whiskey bouquet unimpaired, under the ice. Crack the ice and throw it away. The liquid remaining, bottled or jugged, will be the finest product a connoisseur ever sampled.

Just as fine as the flavour is, however, is the degree of its strength. One sip will revive a dead man. Two will make a church elder forget all of the Ten Commandments, and three will make it easy for him to assassinate his grandmother or even his mother-in-law.

Dog Saves Boys From Drowning

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Becoming venturesome on their way home from school yesterday, John Parks and Willie Lemuelson, who live near the Morris Canal on Ketnea Terrace, attempted to walk on the thin ice. That they are alive to-day is due to a faithful St. Bernard dog, Nero, the property of Thomas Carlin a farmer who lives on Richfield road.

The dog was on a farm wagon with its master, bound for the Newark Market, when Mr. Carlin heard cries for help. Nero at the same time began to bark, and at the command of its master to "Go get them" Nero bounded across a field to the canal and pulled the Lemuelson lad out of the water by his coat sleeve, and then grabbed Parks by the right arm, which the lad was extending while holding on to a corner of the ice with his left.

Lemuelson was "all in" when rescued, and the prompt assistance of neighbors in getting both lads on the embankment after Nero had done the dangerous work alone saved their lives. Both lads received treatment at home, and it is expected will be able to resume their school duties. Nero is king in the rural districts, and not only is to wear a brand new collar but a medal with it.

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.
"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that I was a great sufferer from itching piles and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hicks, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

TWO HUNDRED MONTENEGRINS DRILLED AT THREE RIVERS DROWNED IN ADRIATIC SEA

When the steamship Italia struck a mine in the Adriatic Sea and sunk on Friday last she carried to the bottom with her two hundred Montenegrins who were in Montreal a few months ago, and afterwards trained at Three Rivers and Levis. The contingent was gathered from different parts of Canada and the United States and sailed from Halifax on December 8th. Besides the band of soldiers, it is feared that two doctors and three nurses, sent over from America by Mr. John Frothingham in response to the demand made for skilled medical attendance, have also gone down, as no word as to their safety has been received. The Consul-General for Montenegro in New York, Capt. Seferovitch, has just returned from Halifax after settling all the details in connection with the departure of the men.

He said that apart from the loss of the men his country would suffer in other ways as the result of the loss of the ship, which carried $60,000 worth of supplies, a large part of which was made up of various medical necessities, of which the country is in sore need. The Consul-General said that there must have been $20,000 worth of bandages, instruments and drugs on board the vessel, and this was urgently needed to cope with the sickness among the million and a half Serbian refugees who are now within their borders. Three hundred tons of flour, and a hundred tons of beans were also included in the lost cargo. He is of the opinion that the ship did not strike a mine, but was torpedoed by an Austrian submarine. The people in Montenegro are suffering great poverty and hardship, owing to a lack of coal and similar necessities, which the continuous warring for the past four years has rendered very scarce.

Discussing conditions of his own country the Consul-General said that Montenegro is ready to declare war against any foe of the Allies that might arise, and that if the great powers stand by their country and do the right thing when the war is over, many of the people should be brought back to the Fatherland. Their army is composed of fifty thousand men, made up of five divisions, and there is not a man, he declared, who would not willingly die to defeat the hated Teutons and Huns. Seven thousand reservists from the States and three thousand from Canada have responded to their country's call, and have made great sacrifices to go home to fight, for in many cases it was difficult for the home government to pay for their passage across to their homes. Although the religion of the country is the Greek Church, every denomination within its borders is allowed freedom of worship.

The Consul-General thinks that the Allies should lose no time in putting into the field an army of half a million men, because this would have a great moral effect on Berlin, and because Germany will be able to arm another half million in Asiatic Turkey. He thinks that Roumania will eventually cast in her lot with the Allies because there are numbers of Roumanians in Hungary whose dream for years has been of liberty from the Hapsburgs.

CHILD BORN IN LONDON MINUS HANDS OR FEET

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 14 — Local physicians are deeply interested in the birth of a child without hands or feet at Victoria Hospital here. The little one, whose parents are well-known and highly respected, was born on Saturday, and is a strong healthy and bright child.

SHOT TWICE IN REVOLVER FIGHT MAN IS DYING

BUFFALO, Jan. 14.—Herbert McQueen, 28 years old, whose home is at 128 Kehr street, is dying in the Emergency hospital of two bullet wounds, one over his heart and the other in his hip, as a result the police say, of being shot at 6:30 o'clock by George S. Cameron, a saloonkeeper at Eagle and Elm streets. Cameron is held at police headquarters on an open charge. It is believed McQueen will die.

A part of Cameron's right index finger was shot away by Cameron. McQueen refuses to make a statement. The police say Cameron admits having shot McQueen, claiming he did it in self-defense.

According to the police, McQueen went into the saloon yesterday and asked for Cameron. Cameron's statement alleges that as soon as he got back of the bar McQueen drew a revolver and fired twice. One of the bullets lodged in the wall above a telephone and the other nipped off Cameron's finger. Cameron says he returned the fire, both shots taking effect.

McQueen disappeared in an alley and later walked into the Emergency hospital saying he was shot. McQueen was head cook on the steamer Superior of the Western Transit company last summer.

Canadian Ammunition Has Turned Out Well

OTTAWA, Jan. 14—According to the Minister of Militia the Canadian-made ammunition which has been sent to the front has turned out remarkably well. No serious complaints of any kind have been received in regard to it. The ammunition manufactured by the Dominion arsenal at Quebec is reported to be equal to if not better than any supplied to the British forces.

MANY BLOODY BATTLES IN CHINESE DISTRICTS

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Many Chinese revolutionaries were killed and captured in a series of bloody engagements on January 6, 7 and 8, in the districts of Tamsui, Polong, Yentzuwe, and Peklo, according to information received from the Canton Government by the British authorities at Hong Kong and forwarded by Reuter's Hong Kong correspondent.

The Hong Kong despatch says that the rebels were well supplied with arms, munitions and military uniforms. They fought until their ammunition was exhausted, when they continued to struggle with bombs.

Ultimately the revolutionaries were routed and many of them, including some of the leaders, were killed or taken prisoner. The Government forces also captured munitions and horses.

Various garrisons are engaged in following traces left by the rebels who escaped, with the object of exterminating them.

ALDERMEN WILL GET TOGETHER

BRANTFORD, Jan. 14.— Following on Alderman Ward's retirement from his appointment as Chairman of the Board of Works committee, members of the City Council are inaugurating a "get together" movement with a view to making a rearrangement of committees, to provide for perfect harmony between all members of the Council. The aldermen are confident that the close of peace will settle down on the Council for 1916 despite the inauspicious beginning by which Liberal members were frozen out of chairmanships.

WORST EPIDEMIC OF GRIPPE SINCE THE YEAR 1899

Last Year's Epidemic Was Nothing Like This Year's---Disease is Always Serious and Should Be Treated With Profound Respect

"Grippe comes in waves. This winter's wave is one of the worst since 1899. Last year's epidemic was nothing like this year's. Grippe is always serious. It should be treated with profound respect. The only thing to do is to bow the knee in humble submission and to go to bed. It is better to be beaten by it than to try to beat it. It is contagious. Cases should be isolated as far as possible. The germs of grippe are liable to attack any organ and set up serious trouble.

Dr. Harley Smith, 87 Harbord street, who made these observations about grippe, said he spoke from painful experience. He had tried to beat it out. As for the necessity of isolation, he mentioned one family of which he knew where the father, mother, two children and the maid were all victims of the complaint.

Keep Windows Open.

The popular belief that grippe is more prevalent in an open winter than in severe cold is erroneous in Dr. Smith's opinion. People opened their windows more in a warmer winter, got more fresh air and so kept themselves in better condition to resist the attack of grippe. "The idea that an open window makes a full grave yard is all wrong," said he.

"People do not catch grippe from getting a chill," said he. "The chill lowers the vitality and gives the germs a chance. Just as in pneumonia, every one has the germs of pneumonia in the mouth. The danger of grippe lies not only in itself, but also in that it lowers the vitality to such an extent that other diseases, especially pneumonia, are liable to get hold of the system." It was a mere coincidence that a wave of grippe and an epidemic of measles should have struck the city at the same time. He did not think that atmosphere conditions had anything to do with it.

Twenty-five Per Cent.

One feature of the epidemic, according to (Dr. Murray McFarlane specialist in diseases of the nose throat and ear, is the great number of affections of these organs arising out of grippe. Fully 25 per cent. of his present cases, he states, have resulted from this epidemic, ear trouble being particularly prevalent.

While not wishing to minimize the seriousness of the situation, he thinks that many people have become unduly alarmed over it. The epidemic is bad enough, but does not begin to compare with those of the '80's, which were of the original "La Grippe," direct from Russia. Since then, he thinks, the micro-organisms have become less virulent by reason of the medical war constantly waged against them; furthermore, people have become more immune, the human system gradually developing the power to fight off a disease which at first was new and consequently more dangerous.

The changeable weather and the amount of dust blowing about, owing to the absence of snow, are each partly responsible for the epidemic, but a few weeks of clear weather, fairly cold, and with some snow, would help to dispel the disease.

"A plain cold is not grippe," said Dr. Hastings, Toronto Officer of Health. "The two are quite distinct. There is a germ which is the cause of grippe, just as there is a germ which is the cause of typhoid fever or smallpox. People must learn to isolate members of the family as soon as there are signs of cold in the head. They should sterilize all eating and drinking utensils used by those suffering from grippe. Only in this way will the disease be effectively fought.

Mr. Sunday Gets Two Paper Vests

John D. Rockefeller Makes the Presentation at "Perfect Love Feast."

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The Rev. Rockefeller yesterday at his home near Lakewood, N.J. Mr. Rockefeller gave Mr. Sunday, two paper vests.

Mr. Sunday and his party were returning from a meeting at Lakewood, which Mr. Rockefeller had been unable to attend because of a slight attack of grip. The party stopped for dinner near the Rockefeller home and then drove to Mr. Rockefeller's door.

RESTAURANT IS PROPERLY CONDUCTED

Sanitary Inspector Spence Makes a Statement Regarding Dominion Cafe

Mr. Spence when interviewed regarding the Chinese restaurants stated that he was mis-reported in an evening contemporary regarding his statement concerning the Dominion Cafe, on George street, that he had been complaining about the employees sleeping in the rooms adjoining the kitchen and the dining-room. This is not the case, because the employees have rooms on Simcoe street where they sleep, but the ventilation was not up to the mark in the kitchen of the Dominion Cafe.

Mr. Spence further stated that he did not state that there was any question of the morality of this restaurant, and the report apparently in an evening paper was in error concerning this.

There are certain alterations which he desires to have in the kitchens of most of the restaurants in this city, and they are better light and better ventilation, and he is also inclined to recommend the removal of all the stalls in the restaurants.

PURCHASE OF SCHOOL BLINDS UNDER INVESTIGATION TO-DAY

Mr. Robert Fair Detailed This Transaction---Mr. B. F. Ackerman On The Stand This Morning---Other Matters Discussed.

The Board of Education investigation was resumed before Judge Huycke this morning for the purpose of permitting Mr. B. F. Ackerman putting in evidence regarding his connection with the Board and the investigation. The legal corps previously engaged by the various interests concerned were present, including Mr. O'Connel, Mr. R. R. Hall, Mr. Gordon, Mr. Peck and Mr. W. H. Moore, the latter representing Mr. Ackerman.

One of the first questions explained by Mr. Ackerman was the supplying of two gallons of floor oil to the Board. At one of the meetings the prices of oil were under consideration. Mr. Ackerman used a floor oil at his factory, and the price submitted to the Board seemed so high in comparison to what he paid for his own use that he said he would let the Board have some for the schools. When it was afterwards pointed out to him that this was contrary to his declaration of office since he was not a member of limited company, he discontinued supplying the oil to the Board. If he had received any profit from the lot he supplied it was a small one.

The question of seats for the King George and Queen Mary schools was also discussed. Mr. Ackerman said that the lowest tender was received from A. Comstock & Sons, but they afterwards withdrew, informing the Board that they could not secure them. Mr. Belleghem was the next lowest tender and the seats could only be obtained through him at that time. No effort was made to hold Mr. Comstock to his contract.

Mr. O'Connell—Why did Mr. Comstock tender when he knew he couldn't supply them?

He may have had the opinion that he could secure them outside of the city of Peterborough.

Referring to the charges made by Mr. Gordon, Mr. Ackerman said he had thought they should be investigated. He admitted that he had taken no steps during the year until December to obtain an investigation. He thought Mr. Hill or Mr. Crane were taking it up.

Do you remember that it was suggested that the Department of Education take it up?

Mr. Ackerman said he had some remembrance of this, but not a very definite one. He could not recall a meeting of the Board when it was proposed that the matter be presented to the Minister of Education.

Do you remember Mr. Crane calling the attention of the Board that Mr. McGrath had not voted on a resolution in regard to an investigation?

No.,

Do you remember directing him to vote? No.

Mr. Ackerman said he could not remember the vote on any motion to ask for an investigation.

Mr. Hall questioned Mr. Ackerman regarding the insurance of the schools. In the first place there was $184,000 insurance on them, and it was his experience that most companies did not wish to accept large risks. The usual plan was to divide it. Mr. Hill and the Davis Thompson Co. represented a large number of companies and it was largely a matter of having no other alternative.

Did Mr. Hill solicit the Board for insurance?

He never canvassed me.

Mr. Ackerman said he preferred insuring with the stronger tariff companies, although the rate was 10 per cent. higher.

Of the purchase of blinds for two new schools they were obtained from sample and Mr. Ackerman believed that the offer had been a good one. Mr. Fair sold them at an advance of 5 p.c. advance on the wholesale price.

Mr. Ackerman stated that the Board had transferred the purchase to him and under the circumstances he did not deem it necessary to call for tenders.

Mr. O'Connell—Have you any personal knowledge other than Mr. Fair's statement whether the price was a 5 p.c. advance above what he paid the wholesale house?

No.

Do you mean to say that none of the insurance comapnies will take more than $5,000 insurance on one building?

That has been my experience.

It is quite possible that they would take $5,000 on each of the school buildings?

I don't know anything about that.

If that were so, if they would take 5,000 on each building, five companies would suffice to carry the school insurance.

Mr. Ackerman did not know how many companies could have been obtained outside of Hill, Weldell & Co. and Davis Thompson Co.

Did C. Young ever get any insurance from you?

I don't know the company. We were never solicited by them.

Mr. Ackerman said that the question of insuring in tariff and non-tariff companies did arise before the Board.

Mr. Robert Fair.

Mr. Robert Fair, a former member of the Board of Education, said he had on several ocasions supplied the Board with blinds. He recalled supplying the blinds for the King George and Queen Mary schools.

Mr. Moore— Do you remember the price?

The amount of the blinds totalled $539.22. That is the net wholesale price, and there was to be added to that 5 p.c. commission. Hanging and trimming the blinds was extra and amounted to $26.00. The commission was applied only on the net invoice and counted to $26.91. Had it been any other time of the year I would not like to have undertaken a contract for that price. It was done in August when many employees were away on holidays, and the house-furnishing department was not busy in the summer months.

Mr. Fair said he was not a member of the Board at the time. He did not approach individual members for the contract, but waited on the Property committee and laid his proposition before them. He brought the schedule of prices used by the manufacturers of window shades.

Mr. Fair submitted a copy of those prices.

The discount list did not appear on this schedule when submitted to the Board.

Mr. O'Connell—Was there another trade discount allowed you besides the 5 p.c.?

Not at that time. Afterwards there was a 5 p.c. cash discount from the manufacturers, being an increase from 2 p.c. This was really an increase of 3 p.c. since the 2 p.c. cash discount was in existence when the manufacturers made it 5 p.c.

Mr. Fair said he received 5 p.c. commission and 5 p.c. cash discount.

There was no profit in the work of installing the blinds. The charge made was for actual net time.

Mr. O'Connell—There is no profit in that.

Mr. Fair—We never make a charge for the work of laying linoleums, etc. We are satisfied to make a profit from their sale.

Witnss said he had previously supplied a few blinds while he was a member of the Board. Then he was a member of a limited company and not a partnership, the company's charter having been obtained in 1906.

To Mr. Peck Mr. Fair said that the Board had been saved at least 18 p.c. by their purchase through him.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

This afternoon Mr. W. H. Thompson, examined, stated that the desk contract had been given to Mr. Belleghem when Mr. Comstock, the lowest tenderer, could not secure the material.

To Mr. Moore he said that Mr. Gordon had not said anything during the meetings of 1915 regarding the charges he had made in his letters to the press. He said nothing about 'straw' men being put up for contracts.

Judge Huycke remarked that the meaning of straw men had probably been changed in these military times. Many men of straw were walking the streets these days

Mr. Moore referred to what he called Mr. Gordon's charge concerning expensive deputations.

Mr. O'Connell pointed out that Mr. Gordon said he would see that no such deputations were sent out, and apparently there had been none.

Mr. Thompson said there had been desks purchased during 1915 without tender by the Property committee, of which Mr. Gordon was a member.

To Mr. Peck, Mr. Thompson explained that Belleghem had the agency for the Preston desk and that Comstock had been unable to supply them.

Mr. O'Connell submitted insurance accounts issued through Hill, Weddell & Co. this year, bearing the firm's name on them.

Mr. Thompson said that the Board made no effort to collect from Comstock the difference between his and Belleghem's tender for school seats, although the former tender had been first accepted by the Board. The Comstock tender was $684.45 and Belleghem's was $726.26, subsequently increased by 10 p.c. This increase was communicated to the Board before the contract was let to Comstock.

Replying to Mr. O'Connell Mr. Thompson reviewed the motions at Board meetings which led to the investigation. Mr. Crane and Hill moved that the matter be referred to the Minister of Education. Mr. Gordon moved, seconded by Mr. Eastwood, that the City Council be asked to arrange for a judicial investigation.

Nothing was done during the year, and Mr. O'Connell remarked that Mr. Gordon had not been responsible for any delay.

Judge Huycke referred to his interview with reporters of the evening papers, last Spring, to the effect that he was prepared to undertake the investigation.

Questioned about the purchase without tender of desks during 1915 Mr. Thompson stated that the records showed that they had been bought directly by Mr. Smith, and in so far as the records indicated without the knowledge of Mr. Gordon or any other member.

To Mr. Moore he stated that the records showed only the confirmation of the payment for the desks.

To Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Thompson said the Board was under the impression that Mr. Fair was getting only 5 per cent. commission. They did not know nor did they enquire about a cash discount.

Regarding insurance policies the Finance Committee may know from whom they were secured. Otherwise they were in Mr. Thompson's custody. At the meetings the premium accounts were read off. Witness believed that in a vague way the Board knew of its connection with Mr. Hill.

Judge Huycke stated to Mr. Peck that he had received absolutely nothing from citizens in response to his invitation.

As solicitor for Mr. Ackerman, Mr. Moore began his presentation by stating that Mr. Ackerman had served the Board to the best of his ablity. If he had gone wrong at all it had only been slightly and with the best of intentions.

SLAIN GIRL BURIED IN HER WEDDING GOWN

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 14.—Within fifty-two hours of the shooting of Dora Kewalck, Coroner Ferguson's jury brought in a verdict that her death was due to a bullet fired from a revolver in the hands of Nickolas Nesterook. Nesterook, who will have his preliminary hearing Saturday, in time to have the case before the Grand Jury next week, was counselled by Mr. Edmund Meredith, K.C. that it was unnecessary to testify last night.

The funeral of the victim took place this morning from St. Mary's Church, where a Cleveland priest of the Greek Orthodox rite was to have conducted the marriage, and the girl was buried in what was to have been her wedding gown.

FIND ESPIONAGE PLOT IN AMERICAN MAILS

LONDON, January 14.—The recent inauguration of a censorship upon both outgoing and incoming American mails has already produced results, according to the officials, in the form of the revelation of a widespread espionage plot, which the officials declare has amply justified the organization of the large department necessary to carry on the work.

According to evidence revealed by the opening of the American mail, it is stated an organization of spies here has been sending information to an American branch, which forwards it to Germany by various routes, chiefly by one through Holland.

EX-TELLER ACQUITTED, BUT ACCOUNTANT HELD

MONTREAL, January 14—Leslie G. Kastner, formerly paying teller of the local branch of the Sterling Bank of Canada, was acquitted by Judge Lest on the charge of stealing $2000 from the Sterling Bank, but committed to stand trial on a charge of having made false entries in the bank's books. Judge Lest said Kastner evidently had been the entries acting under the instructions of the accountant, J. J. Conchon and may not have made them with criminal intent.

Conchon was held on a charge of stealing $2250, and was committed for voluntary statement on January 18th.

WITH GERMANS IN BRITISH WAR CAMP AT DORCHESTER

DORCHESTER, Eng., Jan. 3. (By Mail)—"Prisoners of war or not, they're human." Such is the philosophy of Major W. C. Bulkley, D. S. O., British regular army, who commands England's largest war prison camp here at Dorchester.

More than 8,000 of the Teutons who fought for the kaiser on the western front during the last fourteen months are reaping the benefit of British leniency in this model city, built exclusively for their use on the outskirts of this historic British town. No other press representative was along on this trip, to-day and it is the first time an outsider has been permitted to inspect every nook and corner of the camp and talk unreservedly to the prisoners.

Surrounded by a double fence of barbed wire flanked by wire entanglements hundreds of substantially built one-story houses, electric lighted, amply windowed and roofed, have been built to accommodate the prisoners. The houses are in rows, fronted by streets and cross streets which swarm with German grey-green uniforms. The main gate opens into a large parade ground surrounded on three sides by barracks which were used in peace times by a regiment of British cavalry. In these barracks were Hanoverians captured in 1914 are living to-day, a regiment of Hanoverians fighting for England a hundred years ago, were quartered.

An enormous kettle in one of the large camp cookhouses was presided over by a big fellow who used to be a chef in Germany. He was making tea for eight hundred men, but stopped a moment to explain that he had relatives in Mississippi. Another prisoner nearby was cutting quarters of beef into small cubic hunks for soup. A crate of cabbages and lentils was on hand to flavor the stew.

On the same street with this cookhouse was the school building, also the shower baths and gymnasium. In the school building classes are heard by young men who used to teach at Heidelburg. He's a teacher of languages. The effect of rigid military discipline imposed by the German army was manifest in the way the shower baths occupying two buildings are always in use.

"Turn out!" ordered a British officer conducting the inspection. Forty German heels clicked or would have clicked if shod as twenty German youths in "altogether" stood rigidly at attention. The gymnasium encloses many appurtenances for physical culture and is well patronized.

Two large commissary stores provide the prisoners with food and supplies not included in the daily rations. German speakin clerks are in charge. They sell everything from bananas and canned milk to clothes pins at prevailing market prices. Prisoners who have established credit "until more money is sent from Germany" are able to "have it charged"

Certain brands of German wares unobtainable elsewhere in England, are to be found in the camp stores. Freedom of action and speech is allowed in the camp. Work is voluntary. Hundreds of prisoners, however, prefer to work and have found employment erecting additional huts. For this labor they are paid by the British government. A dozen German cobblers operate a shoe repairing shop. His repair work is free. The British Government furnishes the leather and pays the cobblers. An eight-chair barber shop shaves all customers for two cents per shave, or free if the unshaven is broke. The barbers are paid by the government.

An hospital fully staffed by the Royal Army Medical Corps is provided for the prisoners. About 4,000 prisoners brought to the camp in September after the battle of Loos were slightly wounded. Their wounds were dressed daily, and all but one recovered. Several who were gassed are still confined.

"It was the English gas that got me," said a Prussian hospital patient. "If it had been German gas I wouldn't be here. German gas kills the man who breathes it. English gas makes you sick for a long time but it doesn't kill you."

The patients story was partially corroborated by the physician in charge, who stated that some British soldiers have recovered from German gas but experience had proven that British gas is not so deadly.

Keeping clean is the only compulsory duty of the German prisoners. On entering the camp they are provided with fresh under-clothing while their military garb is thoroughly disinfected. A tooth brush, hair brush and comb and clean towels are provided. The prisoners wash their own linen in the camp laundry. Every man takes a bath twice weekly. A complete outfit of clothing is provided free to every man in need. Every prisoner with whom I talked was satisfied with his food, clothing and treatment, in the main.

RUSSIAN GRAND DUKE

Is In Tokio to Convey Czar's Congratulations to Emperor.

TOKIO, Jan. 14. — There is much interest here in the fortnight visit of the Russian grand duke Mikhalovitch, who has come to Tokio to convey the congratulations of Emperor Nicholas to Emperor Yoshihito on the latter's coronation. The public regards the visit as the sealing of the friendship of Russia and Japan based on mutual interests and hopes are expressed in high quarters that the war alliance now in operation will merge into a formal alliance between the two countries.

The Russian grand duke who made the voyage from Korea to Kobe in a Japanese warship, was met at the station by Emperor Yoshihito and a party of distinguished personages and escorted by lancers detached from the police of 10,000 other troops and thousands of civilians to his quarters. The grand duke, while here will be the recipient of great honors. He brings high decorations for the emperor and empress and other personages.

SOLDIERS PLAY THEIR FIRST HOME O.H.A. GAME TO-NIGHT

With the 93rd Band and a Khaki Rooters' Club to provide additional entertainment there should be a big crowd of fans out to-night for the game between the Cobourg Intermediates and the 93rd Battalion to-night. This is the first appearance here of the soldiers in an O.H.A. fixture and the boys in khaki are sure of a big following. Cobourg have strengthened up since their defeat at the hands of the Electrics and are coming up determined to stay in the race by beating the soldiers. It promises to be a lively battle with the ice in the best possible condition. Dr. Jerry Laflamme of Toronto, the well-known ex-St. Michael player, will handle the bell, and the game is called for 8-15 o'clock. Lieut. de Puyjalon of the 93rd is ill and unable to play to-night and his place will be taken by Pte. Wedlock. The soldiers' team will line up as follows:

Goal—Widdifield.
Defence—Matthews, Dupuy.
Rover—Montgomery.
Centre—Wedlock.
Right wing—Blewett.

LACK OF COMBINATION BEAT THE PETES SAYS REFEREE LOU MARSH

Here is Referee Lou Marsh's opinion of the Lindsay-Peterborough junior game, as expressed in the Toronto Star last night:

Peterborough, Jan. 13.—Lindsay juniors came here last night and handed the Peterborough team a 7 to 2 defeat. While the Lindsay boys did not look quite as good as the score indicates they always held over the Peterborough outfit. It was a real lively game as long as it lasted, and while the Peterborough team were beaten, they did not look quite that bad; in fact if they had more combination the score would have been much closer. They had everything else. But in the absence of team play the Lindsay team dominated the game throughout.

Lindsay started at top speed, and scored the first three goals, Carew, Mills and Griffis being the marksmen. There was no other scoring in the first period.

In the second period Cherrette gave the Peterboroughs temporary hope, but Griffis came back with two goals in a row, and put the Peterborough hopes into oblivion with a pair of counters on some nice combination play. The second period ended with the score 5 to 2 in favor of Lindsay, with teams playing at top speed.

In the third period there were no penalties, but in spite of this fact the visitors had the edge and scored the only two goals recorded during the session. While the score of 7 to 2 does not really represent the respective merits of the two teams Lindsay was there with a whole lot of team play and combination, and deserved all the goals that they got, while Peterborough was represented by a bunch of individual players who did not combine together for the common good.

If they had combination the game would have been decidedly closer but they lack this essential and so lost out.

While Lindsay has a real good team from goal out, the Peterborough outfit has considerable merit and if they ever get settled away together will give the rest of the teams in this district a lot of trouble.

The stars of last night's game were Carew, Mills and Griffis of Lindsay. The best man on the Peterborough team was Graham, a 95 pounder, who was not only in the game all night, but who gave the Lindsay team trouble all the time. Peterborough came strong on the end but were unable to overcome the early lead the Lindsay boys secured. The best man on the ice was Carew of Lindsay, one of last year's all-star east junior players. He played a very unselfish game and succeeded in landing three goals. He was in the game all the way. Griffis on right wing, was an able second and rounded out a team which will give Aura Lee a battle any time they meet. The rest of the Lindsay boys were in the game all the time and while they did not shine particularly can be reckoned upon at any time to give a good account of themselves in any game.

Peterborough was not weak. They had in Graham one of the nicest juniors who has shown his nose in juvenile ranks this year. He is only a 17 year-old kid, but without him Peterborough would have been sadly outclassed. He was everywhere and anywhere all over the ice, and if he did not score any goals it was not for want of trying. Several times he took the puck right up to the Lindsay goal and passed it over only to find the wing man missing. If he had had proper support Lindsay's margin would not have been as great.

WILLARD AND MORAN OFFERED $45,000 PURSE

Ten Round Bout Being Arranged for New York on March 3—Will Sign Articles Right Away—Willard to Get $30,000.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Jess Willard and Frank Moran have been offered a purse of $45,000 for a ten-round bout in this city on Friday, March 3. Tex Rickard, promoter of the Jeffries-Johnson battle at Reno, Nev., July 4, 1910, is the backer of the contest, although Sam McCracken, a circus man and a personal friend of Rickard's, is named in the articles as the promoter.

Neither Willard nor Moran has yet signed the articles of agreement, although both have signified their willingness to accept the terms offered by Rickard through McCracken. According to the contract Willard is to receive $30,000 and 51 per cent. of the receipts of any moving pictures taken. Moran is offered $15,000. Willard also is to receive a bonus of $5,000 for signing the contract. Moran's share of the picture receipts and bonus, if any, is not stated.

Willard to Sign First.

The articles of agreement are on their way to Chicago for Willard's approval. The promoters say they have received word from Tom Jones, the champion's manager, that the terms are satisfactory and that the articles will be signed as soon as they are placed before Willard.

After Willard signs, Moran's signature will be obtained.

Willard will be required upon signing to post a forfeit of $5,000 for appearance. The promoters plan to deposit the total amount of the purse in the hands of stakeholders 48 hours before the bout. It is estimated that the aggregate expense of the bout will be close to $65,000, and the receipts about $100,000.

No Place Selected Yet.

No place has as yet been selected for the bout, although Madison Square Garden, a large theatre, and a structure formerly used as a car barn by one of the local traction companies are being considered. According to Rickard, all seats will be reserved, and prices will probably range from $10 up to $100 or more for ringside boxes. Reservations, it was said, already have been made for several boxes.

No interference is expected by the promoters from either the local or state authorities, since ten-round bouts are permitted under the state law on payment of 7½ per cent of the gross receipts and compliance with other minor rules and regulations provided for by the statutes.

Rickard said he was not going to manage the proposed bout, but was simply furnishing the financial backing for McCracken.

Juniors Play Lindsay Tuesday

The return game between the Lindsay Juniors and Electric youngsters which was scheduled for Monday night at Lindsay, has been postponed to Tuesday night, on account of the game between the 93rd and the Electric Intermediates. Lindsay kindly consented to the postponement so the Juniors will go to Lindsay on Tuesday, instead of Monday.

A discontented mind seeking better ment is far better than a contented mind that is satisfied to remain in a rut.

HOCKEY

The Lindsay Warder says: A Lindsay fan states that Peterborough Juniors are every bit as fast as Lindsay, but that in the game last night they paid too much attention to the man, and endeavoured to rough matters. He also claims that the score is no indication of the play, and that the Petes will give a better account of themselves in the game against Lindsay on Lindsay ice next week.

Brown: "Back to town again? I thought you were a farmer?" Green: "You made the same mistake I did."

The obvious person came upon the angler. "Fishing?" he inquired acutely. "No," replied the angler, "I am engaged in teaching this worm how to swim."

BOWLING LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED FOR SEASON

At an enthusiastic meeting held last night in the Y.M.C.A., the Bowling League was reorganized for the season. Four teams have entered, the Brinton Carpet Company, C. G. E., Examiner, and the Business Men, and the prospects are bright for two more teams coming. All entries will close on Saturday night, and bowling will commence on Monday. Mr. Phillips of the Brinton Carpet Company was elected President and Mr. Bert Everett, Secretary.

thank you in person I will do so. We have travelled a lot since we landed in France, and the weather at times has been awful, raining day and night, so you see we don't have many joy rides. Still the life is not so bad and I am not sorry to be where I am. Our lady friends didn't forget us and we put in a very jolly Christmas, although we miss the company of the fair sex very much. Again thanking you and wishing you all the compliments of the season.

Sincerely yours,
754 Staff Sgt. Landry,
Second Canadian Reserve Park,
Army Post Office,
London, England.

Mrs. George Long, George Street, has received a letter from Miss E. M. Taylor of the Canadian Red Cross Society, stating that Miss McLeod Moore had visited her son, Lance-Corp. Fred. Long, at Alexandria Hospital, Millbank, London, Eng. She reports that he is suffering a good deal of pain, but looks well in spite of his bad leg and foot. Lance-Corp. Long has one leg amputated below the knee and the other foot is also injured.

Rev. R. G. Peever of George Street Methodist Church has received letters from Lieut. A. R. Ackerman, 2nd Battalion; Pte. W. McKim, 21st Battalion; Gunner W. Hamilton, 33rd Battery, Bugler A. Lord, 39th Battalion; Pte. W. H. Saxby, 21st Battalion, and Sergt. T. A. Morrow, 39th Battalion, acknowledging the receipt of Christmas gifts from the ladies of George Street Church. Some of the letters were from Flanders and others from England, but all were in a cheerful vein.

BRITAIN SHORT OF COTTON?

Lack of Ships to Move Shipments From America is Cause.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.— Following an exchange of cablegrams between this country and London, it became known in Wall Street that Great Britain is threatened with a serious shortage of cotton.

While the British have been bending all their energies to keep cotton out of Germany and Austria, they have neglected to safeguard themselves. Now, suddenly, they are confronted with the prospect of the most serious situation in their textile industry since the civil war.

On Friday last the stock of American cotton in Great Britain was 645,000 bales. At the beginning of the season it exceeded 1,200,000 bales. The amount afloat for Great Britain is only a little more than one-third of normal. Never before was there such a scarcity of ships.

Britain consumes 80,000 bales of American cotton per week. Freight rates are tremendously high. From New York to Liverpool the freight charge is $2.25 a hundred pounds, and there is little space available. From Gulf ports to Liverpool $8 a hundred—$15 a bale—is quoted.

To add to the complications some clever British men, who have more love for their bank accounts than their country's welfare, have "cornered" cotton in Liverpool.

Cotton is selling there at 17 cents a pound, the highest price it has attained in that market in many years. In America cotton is selling between 12 and 12¾ cents.

The cotton trade, next to shipping is the greatest British industry. It employs nearly 1,250,000 operatives. Prostration at this time would have a bad effect, especially in Lancashire.

The activity of submarines in the Mediterranean has put an end to shipments of cotton from the far East. Egyptian cotton is very high grade, and is used only for the finest of goods. It is almost as difficult to get cotton to England from Egypt as it is from India.

Cotton in the United States to-day sells for nearly four cents a pound—$80 a bale—more than the British proposed to pay.

LETS HIS SON DIE RATHER THAN LIVE TO BE A CRIPPLE

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 14. — Feeling that it were better to let his son die than live a cripple, Samuel Ebinger of West Philadelphia refused to let hospital surgeons amputate the boy's leg, which had been crushed by a wagon, even after he was told it was the only way to save the lad's life. The son, Albert Ebinger, 13 years old, died a few hours later.

GIRL OF 20 SETS RECORD IN MATRIMONIAL ACTION.

LA CROSSE, WIS., January 14—Although only 20 years of age, this girl has had a busy matrimonial career. She was married at the age of 15 to Victor Barnes, a moving picture machine operator, divorced, re-married within the year to Percy Leon Bohare, only to have her marriage annulled, committed to the reform school on charge of delinquency, serving a fall sentence for shooting her second husband, and remarrying him at the expiration of her sence. Such is part of the story of the life of Ruth Nimocks-Barnes-Bohare of this city, who has just had her second marriage legalised.

Her Father: "The fact is, I cannot give my daughter a dowry just at present." Suitor: "That's all right, sir. I can love her for herself alone in the meantime."

FOOD DEAR IN RUSSIA.

Efforts Being Made to Curb Activities of Speculators.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 13.—The Government is making a serious attempt to eradicate the evils of bribery and speculation that is responsible for the unprecedented rise in the prices of commodities. One of the most prominent four speculators of Moscow was the first to be arrested, with fifteen others at Petrograd. Two Zemstvo councillors have been found guilty of cornering the local sugar market. Railway officials who accept bribes will be dealt with by military courts.

SUING WIFE SAYS HUSBAND SUGGESTED SHE KILL SELF.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.— The undefended separation action of Mrs. Christine Rolt-Wheeler against the Rev. Francis Rolt-Wheeler was heard by Justice Donnelly of the Superior court.

Mr. Rolt-Wheeler was for a time chaplain of St. Luke's hospital, which made him one of the clergy connected with the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. His wife was the auditor and registrar of the hospital.

Mrs. Rolt-Wheeler said that from June to September, 1914, she was in an overwrought, dangerous and nervous state, when suggestion from a stronger mind would have full measure of influence.

It was at this time, she said, that her husband "repeatedly urged the plaintiff to end his misery and the care of her by committing suicide." She said he frequently told her she was doomed to madness and that he could not afford to care for an insane wife.

$1,412 A MINUTE IS LAUDER'S MISERLY WAGE

Harry Lauder, the famous Scotch comedian, who comes to the Grand Opera House on Monday, Jan. 24, can guage his working time by minutes in the week. He works only six days a week — for no price will he consent to give a performance on Sunday—and in those six days, with two performances a day, he is on the stage for four hundred and eighty minutes. With his salary as a basis, it works out that his earning capacity is $1,412 a minute. The average man's wage is $1.16½ a day, according to statistics. So William Morris, Lauder's manager in this country, is paying the comedian for every minute he labours, more than the average employer is paying the average employee in a day.

Gotham Gunmen Make Their Peace With God

Tombs Chaplain Tells of Gyp the Blood's Last Hours in Death House

"I was standing in the death house at Sing Sing with 'Lefty Louis' and 'Gyp the Blood,' who with 'Dago Frank' and 'Whitey Lewis,' murdered Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, in front of the Metropole hotel on Broadway, New York, for turning informant," said John Callahan of New York at Y.M.C.A. meeting in the Princess theatre, "when 'Gyp' turned to me and asked, 'Callahan, is there a hell and a heaven?'"

"There were but a few days left when these men were to enter the electric chair, but a few feet distant from where we stood, to be executed for their part in the murder of Rosenthal that memorable midnight in New York. I took out a pocket testament that I carried in my hip pocket and I read to those men from the Revelations and the Epistles.

"There it told how the tears of sorrow and sin were driven away and how men who had sunk into hell might have hope for their souls even at the eleventh hour. I said to them, 'Men this is the authority and what it tells is the truest thing in the universe.' I turned to 'Gyp' and said to him, 'Do you believe this 'Gyp?'

"'Callahan, I've found it at last,' he cried with fervor, and a look of satisfaction appeared on his face.

"But for God's sake, men, don't wait until you have got as far down the paths of hell before you stop your wild flight in the wake of sin and destruction," he concluded.

Mr. Callahan is chaplain of the Tombs in New York and successor to Jerry MacCauley and Sam Hadley as superintendent of the Hadley Rescue mission of that city.—New Haven Union.

Naval Plans Off Belgian Coast Are Effective

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The naval operations off the Belgian coast last summer and autumn are described in an official despatch from Vice-Admiral R. H. S. Bacon, commanding the Dover patrol, who begins by explaining the great care taken to confine the fire to purely military and naval objectives so as to inflict a minimum loss of life and distress to the civilian population among which were large numbers of citizens of the allied countries.

"In order to carry this principle into effect it was at times necessary to modify and even to postpone projected attacks," the despatch says. "The results, therefore, have been effective rather than sensational."

Foe Lost Three Craft.

After speaking of the extreme accuracy of the naval fire, which he attributed as being done to novel methods and careful training, Vice-Admiral Bacon reviews the various attacks of Zeebrugge, Ostend, Westende and other points along the coast at various dates in brief and sums up the damage to the Germans, which he says, included the destruction of one torpedo boat, two submarines, one dredge, three military factories, thirteen big guns, two ammunition depots, several military storehouses, and in addition wharves, observation and signalling stations and the Zeebrugge locks were damaged. The British loss consisted of three armed trawlers of which two struck mines, and 3 men killed and 24 wounded.

Good Gunnery.

Vice-Admiral Bacon says that the gunnery results exceeded his expectations. His fleet consisted of eighty vessels of various classes, manned partly by men of the regular navy but more largely by officers and men of the navy reserves and deep sea fishermen.

"The protection of such a moving fleet by destroyers in waters which are the natural home of the enemy's submarines, has been admirable," Vice-Admiral Bacon says, "but still more remarkable is the aptitude shown by the officers and crews of the drifters and trawlers, who in difficult waters and under conditions totally strange to them maintained their allotted stations without a single accident.

Cool Under Fire.

"Moreover, these men under fire exhibited coolness worthy of the personnel of a service inured to discipline. The results show how deeply adaptability is ingrained in the seafaring race of these islands."

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

EYE TALKS SERIES

No. 7.---A Question Of Appearance

THERE is an idea in some peoples mind, that glasses are no improvement to the looks. Just consider this—If you have to make an effort, even the slightest, to see clearly, just take the mirror and try to see an imaginary speck in your eye. Then notice the drawn up appearance of your forehead, the wrinkles around the eyes, and the tense look of concentration there is on the whole face. Be honest in your judgment. Then drop in to A. A. Fowler's Optical Parlors, and let him put a pair of suitable Peblo Glasses on you. A look in the mirror then will show you a smooth, placid, face, with no appearance of strain, actually seems ten years younger. Which is the best looking? Your friends will say give us the smiling care-free face with the Peblo Glasses on it.

GEN. HUERTA DEAD: ONCE MEXICAN DICTATOR

EL PASO, Texas, Jan. 14.—General Victoriano Huerta, former dictator of Mexico, died last night. He had been ill for some time. Huerta was born in 1854.

Huerta was a soldier from his youth, and an unusually successful one. He was eighteen years of age when he first went into military work. Until 1895 he led the life of an army officer. From that onward he was in command of forces that quelled several rebellions and Indian uprisings. He became so popular that General Diaz distrusted him, and left him inactive for four years, during which time he was engaged as a civil engineer, returning to the army in 1910 as an adherent of President Madero. He led the fighting against General Felix Diaz and General Mondragon in February, 1913, when several thousand were killed in Mexico City. Soon afterwards he became a party to the conspiracy to remove President Madero from power, and agreed to his imprisonment. It was also charged against him that he was a party to Madero's murder. He seized the executive power and later fell foul of the United States, which, in 1914, seized Vera Cruz, and finally succeeded by diplomatic methods in having a new Government appointed in Mexico, Huerta being eliminated.

ALLIES BLOW UP BRIDGE DESPITE GREEK RESISTANCE

ATHENS, via London, Jan. 15. — There was an incident between the Greek and Entente Allied troops when the latter blew up the iron bridge over the Struma River at Demir-Hissar.

The officer commanding the Greek guard at the bridge ordered his men to resist the accomplishment by the Entente Allied troops of their purpose and at the same time requested reinforcements. While awaiting the arrival of the reinforcements the bridge was blown up and the Entente Allies then withdrew, thus avoiding further difficulty.

GERMAN GENERAL STAFF CONDUCTS SPY SCHOOL AT ANTWERP

Four Weeks Course of Instrution Fits Amateurs for Work of Espionage —Military, Police and Chemistry Instructors

During the hearings in the case of Marie Therese le Philipponat at Geneva, to which reference was made in recent despatches, it developed that the German General Staff is maintaining a spy school at Antwerp. In regard to the work of this establishment lately arrived newspapers give further details. The spy school receives its recruits from neutral and occupied countries, where the German information service has agents assigned. These locate any persons who may seem willing and well equipped for espionage and send them to the Antwerp institution. Here they are put through a course of instruction lasting four weeks under the tutelage of General Staff officers, police commissaries, and a professor of chemistry.

The military officers teach the pupils everything relative to the enemy's armies, their composition, the distinguishing marks of different arms and corps, how to compute numbers of various units and estimate the strength of a detachment occupying a transport train of so and so many cars, etc.

On the police officers falls the important task of teaching the neophytes all the little tricks of their trade. The prospective spies are instructed in the accepted methods of ferreting out the secret of their rivals the foreign police and espionage agents. They also get trained in the ways of acting and answering at an inquiry, in order to pull themselves out of a hole should they have the mischance of getting caught. Besides, the commissaries give the students when they are graduated their respective numbers of identification, as well as an index of their colleagues already in the service, so that they may be able to appeal for assistance from the latter in case of need.

The role of the professor of chemistry is rather complex. He instructs the pupils in the code to be employed, as well as in the preparation of special invisible inks for correspondence and of reagents necessary to bring out the writing in letters written by other spies with ink of this kind.

There is thoroughgoing German system in it all, and not the least particular is neglected or left to chance.

U. S. GREATEST CREDITOR

Big Difference in Position Created in War, Says Sir Edward Carson.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Sir Edward Carson, former attorney-general, described the rise of the United States as a creditor nation in a vigorous speech in the House of Commons as the debate was closing late last night.

"There will be a great sifting for a time at all events, of the centre of commercial power in the world," he said. "We shall have to contend with the great friendly nation in the west, which before the war was a debtor nation. After the war it probably will be the chief creditor nation of the world. There will be danger for a while that a great preponderance of gold and credit in that country will change to a large extent the working out of the great matter of exchange and the necessary accompaniments of the greatest clearing house in the world."

The one great lesson of the war, Sir Edward Carson said, was that international law, treaties and conventions have all broken down. "We have also learned" he continued, "that the most expensive institution is a state unprepared for war. Finally and above all things, we must rid ourselves of the root of all evil under the Governments—the misleading of our people by the science of vote catching."

Why Tolerate Catarrh?

You have noticed, no doubt, that any cold aggravates nasal catarrh, and the flow of mucous amazes you that such objectionable matter could find lodgment in your head. To ignore this catarrh when the cold subsides is wrong because it continues to slowly injure the delicate linings of the nasal passages and clog them up.

To correct catarrh, cleanse the nostrils frequently with a solution of warm water and salt, insert vaseline on retiring, and take a spoonful of Scott's Emulsion after meals for one month. Scott's acts through the blood to feed the tissues, and contains soothing glycerine to check the inflammation and heal the sensitive membranes.

Scott's is pleasant to take.

A GIFT FROM THE ALTAR BOYS

Rev Father Fitzpatrick Received Pair of Military Brushes

On Sunday last the altar boys of St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, presented Rev. Father Fitzpatrick with a beautiful pair of initialed military brushes. The presentation was made by Master Samuel Killen, while Master Fergus Garvey read the following address:

Rev. and Dear Father:
Little ones have little ways, by which to show their love,
Little hearts have little arts to gain gifts from above;
These ways, and arts we now employ,
And at thy feet we lay,
This humble little tribute of our love for thee to-day.

Signed on behalf of your Altar Boys in Ennismore.

SAMUEL KILLEN,
FERGUS GARVEY.

In acknowledging this gift as well as those from the congregation and choir, Rev. Father Fitzpatrick briefly reviewed his fourteen years spent in Ennismore, and the work that had been accomplished during his administration, thanking the people for their hearty co-operation with all his undertakings, and assuring them that he could always look back with the greatest pleasure to the time spent with them. He thanked the congregation most heartily for their gifts, but especially for their kind words, and explained that he would be happy to remain with them always, as such generous Irish people are not to be met with in every parish, but as his health was failing he felt it his duty to make a change, and trusted that the climate of the West might agree with him. In conclusion the people all knelt and with sad hearts received the blessing of their highly esteemed and beloved pastor.

A Complete Breakdown After La Grippe

It Leaves the Sufferer a Victim of Many Forms of Weakness

Ask those who have had la grippe regarding the present condition of their health and most of them will answer: "Since I had the grip I have never been well." There is a persistent weakness of the limbs, bad digestion, shortness of breath and palpitation of the heart caused by the thin-blooded condition in which grip almost always leaves its victims after the fever and influenza have subsided. They are at the mercy of relapses and complications, often very serious. This condition will continue until the blood is built up again, and for this purpose nothing can equal a fair treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which quickly make the blood rich and red, drive the lingering germs from the system and transform despondent grip victims into cheerful, healthy, happy men and women. Mr. John Battersby, London, Ont., says: —"Just before Christmas, 1914, I was taken down with an attack of la grippe, and the trouble left me in a deplorable condition. I was almost too weak to walk about, as I was then working on a farm in Western Ontario, I was quite unable to follow my usual work. I tried several kinds of medicine, but it did not help me. As a matter of fact I felt steadily growing weaker, and in this condition, when reading a paper, I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised and decided to try them. I got a supply and by the time the second box was finished I felt considerably better, and after continuing the pills for some time longer I felt better than I had done for months. This was my first experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but you may depend upon it that if I find medicine necessary again I will know just what to take."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PUBLICATION OF VON PAPEN LETTERS CHECK AGITATION AGAINST BRITISH BLOCKADE

German Ambassador Bernstorff Faces Embarrassing Explanations as a Result of Documents Taken From Capt. Franz Von Papen.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The Foreign Office executed a clever stroke in making public the Von Papen documents at this time, British officials declared to-day. They expressed the view that the publication of these letters in America will check the agitation for new protests against the British blockade.

FACES EMBARRASSING EXPLANATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—German Ambassador Bernstorff to-day faced embarrassing explanations as a result of documents taken from Captain Franz Von Papen, recalled military attache at London.

If facts developed at London from Von Papen's papers are later borne out in official reports to the State Department from Ambassador Page, officials believed it possible the German envoy would have difficulty in defending his connection with Von Papen's work here.

Officials pointed out to-day that conclusive legal evidence of wrong-doing is not required to impair diplomatic usefulness of the foreign official here;-but that mere belief of moral certainty of such misconduct is sufficient for a diplomat's recall. The German Embassy's attitude to-day was that admitting it had given Von Papen frequent and large amounts of money, it had no knowledge of any wrongful use of such funds.

Administration officials are not disposed to accept a mere disclaimer by the German Embassy of knowledge of how Von Papen spent his credits as absolving the Embassy from entire responsibility.

Diplomatic Corps Flee From Montinegrin Capital and Has Arrived at Scutari

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The Spanish steamer Bayo, 3,000 tons, struck a mine and sank Thursday in the Bay of Biscay, off the French seaport of La Rochelle. Twenty-five of her crew were drowned, only one was saved.

FLEE FROM MONTENEGRIN CAPITAL.

ROME, Jan. 15.—Fleeing from the Montenegrin capital, the diplomatic corps at Cettinje has arrived at Scutari, Northern Albania, accompanied by several Montenegrin officials, according to Austrian advices transmitted through Zurich to-day.

The whereabouts of King Nicholas and the Montenegrin force that withdrew from Cettinje is a mystery. It is believed, however, that the King is making his way southward to Scutari, from which place he will conduct negotiations with the Austrians, who have proposed a separate peace.

ROME, Jan. 15.—It is officially announced the French submarine Foucault has torpedoed and sank the Austrian scout cruiser in the Adriatic Thursday.

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—The German Government informs Great Britain that as she has not fulfilled Germany's demand for explanation, sinking a German submarine, she will adopt suitable measures in reprisal.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Britain warns neutrals that she will tolerate no interference with the blockade of Germany.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Baron Chelmsford, former Governor of Queensland and New South Wales, has been appointed Viceroy and the Governor-General of India.

PETROGRAD, Jan. 15.—Russians made important gains on the left bank of the Styr, and the ground won has been systematically fortified.

Germans Declare Corfu Occupation Insult To Kaiser

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The news of the Allied occupation of Corfu is said to have excited the greatest indignation in Germany, where the fact that the Villa Achilleion is to be used as the Serbian headquarters is regarded as a personal insult to the German Emperor. It is said that the Emperor has sent a personal protest to the King of the Greeks, holding Greece responsible for any damage to German property.

The Greek Government, says a despatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph Company, has protested against the occupation of the Island of Corfu by the Entente Powers. It is believed in Athens that the arrest of the Austrian and German Consuls at Corfu is certain to follow.

The correspondent telegraphs that British and French ships have landed in Albania food supplies for 150,000 Serbs.

FACTORY REBUILT IN 21 DAYS.

Thomas A. Edison, After Fire, Gets New Phinol Plant Quickly.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 15.—Forty-eight hours after part of his Silver Lake phenol plant in Newark was burned down, Thomas A. Edison had his entire plant operating again last night. When Mr. Edison learned Sunday night that his plant in Newark was burning, he, Mrs. Edison and Charles Edison, one of his sons motored to the plant, and Mr. Edison at once set about drawing plans for rebuilding. He summoned his engineer, and before midnight plans were ready for a new building.

Residents of the vicinity and the workmen were amazed when the first thing Monday morning they found new building material heaped about the smouldering ruins and a corps of men ready to go to work. The building destroyed was 200 feet long by 48 feet wide, one storey high and sheathed with corrugated iron.

Mr. Edison personally superintended the putting up of the new building. All day yesterday he watched and directed the men at their work. Today, as the building was nearing completion, he went back to his experiments, which have engaged most of his time lately.

The great haste is due to the imperative need of carbolic acid in the trades. Mr. Edison supplies most of the product now purchasable in this country.

BLOW FOR ANOTHER MAN.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—That Private Henri Jolicoeur, of the 41st Battalion, met his death by stepping in and receiving a knife thrust intended for another man was shown at the inquest. A verdict of wilful murder was returned against Samuel Sokolovitch, a Russian from the same regiment.

GERMANS AID FRENCH IN STRINGING BARBED WIRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Friendship of the German and French soldiers in the trenches was referred to by Donald Waldron, of Brooklyn, who has been engaged in Red Cross service in France, in addressing yesterday the pupils of the Montclair Academy, which he formerly attended. Mr. Waldron said he had seen German soldiers holding posts while the French soldiers drove them into the ground. After the posts were in position, Mr. Waldron said, the French and German soldiers assisted each other in stringing barbed wire to seperate the trenches. Following this the soldiers retreated to their respective trenches and opened fire.

Mr. Waldron said that General Joffre is preparing for a great drive against the Germans, but that this probably would be deferred until 1917 unless there was a change in the conditions. The recent big drive of the Allies, he said, was in the nature of an experiment.

VII.—OPPORTUNITY

[Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.]

"WHAT is brokers?" Mr. Marcus Shimko asked. "A broker is no good; otherwise he wouldn't be a broker. Brokers is fellers which they couldn't make a success of their own affairs, Mr. Zamp, so they butt into everybody else's. Particularly business brokers, Mr. Zamp. Real estate brokers is bad enough, and insurings brokers is a lot of sharks also; but for a cutthroat, a low life bum, understand me, the worst is a business broker!"

"That's all right, too, Mr. Shimko," Harry Zamp said timidly; "but if I would get a partner with, say, for example, $500, I could make a go of this here business."

Mr. Shimko nodded skeptically.

"I ain't saying you couldn't," he agreed, "but where would you find such a partner? Nowadays a feller with $500 don't think of going into retail business no more. The least he expects is he should go right away into manufacturing. Jobbing and retailing is six foe such a fellar understand me—especially clothing, Mr. Zamp, which nowadays even drugstores carries retail clothing as a side line, so shut up the business in."

Harry Zamp nodded gloomily.

"And, furthermore," Shimko added, "business brokers could no more get you a partner with money as they could do miracles, Mr. Zamp. Them days is past, Mr. Zamp, and all a business broker could do nowadays is to bring you a feller with experience, and you don't need a business broker for that, Mr. Zamp. Experience in the retail clothing business is like the measles — everybody has had it."

"I must got to get a partner."

"Then what should I do, Mr. Shimko?" Zamp asked helplessly. "I must got to get a partner with money somewhere, ain't it? And if I wouldn't go to a business broker who then would I go to—a bartender?"

"Never mind!" Mr. Shimko exclaimed. "Some people got no idea all bartenders is bums, but wunst in awhile a feller could get from a bartender an advice also. I got working for me wunst in my place down on Park row a feller by the name Klinkowitz, which he is now manager of the Olympic Gardens, on Rivington street, and if I would have took that feller's advice, Mr. Zamp, instead I am worth now my tens of thousands I would got hundreds of thousands already. 'When you see a feller is going down and out, Mr. Shimko,' he always says to me, 'don't show him no mercy at all. If you set 'em up for a live one, Mr. Shimko,' he says, 'he would anyhow buy a couple of rounds, but a dead one, Mr. Shimko,' he says, 'if you show him the least little encouragement, understand me, the least that happens you is he gets away with the whole lunch counter.' Am I right or wrong?"

Mr. Zamp nodded. He resented the imputation that he was a dead one, but he felt bound to agree with Mr. Shimko in view of the circumstance that on the following day he would owe a month's rent with small prospect of being able to pay it. Indeed, he wondered at Mr. Shimko's amiability, for as owner of the Canal street premises Shimko had the reputation of being a harsh landlord. Had Zamp but known it, however, store property on Canal street was not in active demand of late by reason of the new bridge improvements, and Shimko's amiability proceeded from a desire to retain Zamp as a tenant if the latter's solvency could be preserved.

"But I couldn't help myself, Mr. Zamp," Shimko went on. "I got no business keeping a restaurant at all."

As a matter of fact, Mr. Shimko's late restaurant was of the variety popularly designated as a "barrel house," and he had only retired from the business after his license had been revoked.

"Yes, Mr. Zamp," Shimko continued; "in a business like that a feller shouldn't got a heart at all. But I am very funny that way. I couldn't bear to see nobody suffer, understand me, and everybody takes advantage of me on account of it. So I tell you what I would do. My wife got a sort of a relation by the name Miss Babette Schick, which she works for years by a big cloak and suit concern as a designer. She ain't so young no longer, but she got put away in savings bank a couple of thousand dollars, and she is engaged to be married to a young feller by the name Isaac Meiselson, which nobody could tell what he does for a living at all. One thing is certain—with the money this Meiselson gets with Miss Schick he could go as partners together with you and pull you out of the hole, ain't it?"

Mr. Zamp nodded again without enthusiasm.

"Sure, I know, Mr. Shimko," he said, "but if a young feller would got $2,000 to invest in a business, y'understand, why should he come to me? If he would got only $500, Mr. Shimko, that would be something else again. But with so much as $2,000 a feller could get lots of clothing businesses which they run a big store with a couple of cutters, a half a dozen salesmen and a bookkeeper. What have I got to offer him for $2,000? Me. I am salesman, cutter, bookkeeper and everything. And if this feller comes in here and sees me alone in the place, with no customers nor nothing, he gets an idee it's a dead proposition. Ain't it?"

Shimko pulled out a full cigar case, whereat Zamp's eye kindled, and he licked his lips in anticipation. But after Shimko had selected a dark perfecto he closed the case deliberately and replaced it in his breast pocket.

"A business man must got to got gumption," he said to the disappointed Zamp, "and if you think you could get a partner just by bringing him into the store here and showing him the stock and fixtures which you got it you are making a big mistake."

"Well, of course I am expecting I should blow him to dinner maybe," Zamp protested, "with a theayter also."

Shimko evidenced his disgust by puffing vigorously at his cigar.

"You are just like a whole lot of other people, Zamp," he said. "You are always willing to spend money before you make it. Meiselson comes in here and sees you only got a small stock of piece goods, understand me, and you couldn't afford to keep no help, and then on top of that yet you would take him out and blow him. Naturally he right away gets the idee you are spending your money foolishly instead of putting it into your business, and the whole thing is off."

Zamp shrugged impotently.

"What could I do, Mr. Shimko?" he asked. "I got here a small stock of goods, I know, but that's just the reason why I want a partner."

"And that's just the reason why you wouldn't get one," Shimko declared. "A small stock of piece goods you couldn't help, Zamp; but if you let that feller come into your store and find you ain't got no cutters or customers that's your own fault."

"What d'ye mean, Mr. Shimko?" Zamp demanded.

"I mean this," Shimko explained. "If I would got a store like you got it here, Zamp, and a friend offers to bring me a feller with a couple thousand dollars for a partner, understand me, I would go to work, y'understand, and get a couple cutters and engage 'em for the afternoon. Then I would turn around, y'understand, and go up and see such a feller like Klinkowitz, which he is manager of that theayter on Rivington street, and I would get him to fix up for me a half a dozen young fellers from his theayter, which they would come down to the store for the day, and some of 'em acts like customers and others acts like clerks. Then, when my friend brings in the feller with $2,000, understand me, what do they see? The place is full of customers and salesmen, and in the rear is a couple of cutters chalking lines on pattern papers and cutting it up with shears. You yourself are so busy, understand me, you could hardly talk a word to us. You don't want to know anything about getting a partner at all. What is a partner with $2,000 in a rushing business like you are doing it? I beg of you you should take the matter under consideration, but you pretty near throw me out of the store on account you got so much to do. At last you say you would take a cup coffee with me at 6 o'clock, and I go away with the $2,000 feller, and when we meet again at 6 o'clock we're pretty near crazy to invest his money with you. Do you get the idee?"

"Might you could even get the feller to pay for the coffee, maybe," Zamp suggested, completely carried away by Shimko's enthusiasm.

"If the deal goes through," Shimko declared in a burst of generosity, "I would even pay for the coffee myself!"

"And when would you bring the feller here?" Zamp asked.

"I would see him this afternoon yet," Shimko replied as he opened the store door, "and I would telephone you sure, by Dachtel's place, at 4 o'clock."

Zamp, full of gratitude, shook hands with his landlord.

"If I would got such a head like you got it to think out schemes, Mr. Shimko," he said fervently, "I would be a millionaire, I bet yer!"

"The thinking out part is nothing," Shimko said as he turned to leave. "Any blame fool could think out a scheme, y'understand, but it takes a pretty bright feller to make it work!"

"If a feller wouldn't be in business for himself," Shimko said to Isaac Meiselson as they sat in Wasserbauer's cafe that afternoon, "he might just as well never come over from Russland at all."

"I told you before, Mr. Shimko," Meiselson retorted, "I am from Lemberg geborn."

"Oestreich oder Russland, what is the difference?" Shimko asked. "If a feller is working for somebody else, nobody cares who he is or what he is, while if he's got a business of his own, understand me, everybody would respect him, even if he would be born in, we would say for example, China."

"Sure, I know, Mr. Shimko," Meiselson rejoined, "but there is businesses and businesses, and what for a business is a small retail clothing store on Canal street?"

"Small the store may be, I ain't denying it," Shimko said; "but ain't it better a feller does a big business in a small store as a small business in a big store?"

"If he does a big business, yes," Meiselson admitted; "but if a feller does a big business why should he want to got a partner?"

"Ain't I just telling you he don't want no partner?" Shimko interrupted. "And as for doing a big business, I bet yer we could drop in on the feller any time and we would find the store full of people."

"Gewiss," Meiselson commented. "three people playing auction pinochle in a small store is a big crowd!"

"No auction pinochle gets played in that store, Meiselson. The feller has working by him two cutters and three salesmen, and he makes 'em earn their money. Only yesterday I am in the store, and if you would believe me, Meiselson, his own landlord he wouldn't talk to at all, so busy he is."

"In that case what for should he need me for a partner? I couldn't understand at all," Meiselson declared.

"Neither could I," Shimko replied, "but a feller like you, which he would soon got $2,000 to invest, needs him for a partner. A feller like Zamp would keep you straight, Meiselson. What you want is somebody which he is going to make you work."

NEGLECTED COLDS
VERY OFTEN TURN TO CONSUMPTION.

Never neglect what at first seems to be but a slight cold. Your head becomes stuffed up; you start to cough; an irritation in the throat follows; it gets lower down; settles on the lungs; you start to raise phlegm of a greenish, yellowish color sometimes streaked with blood, and you cough persistently.

You think perhaps you are strong enough to fight off this trouble, but colds are not easily fought off in this northern climate. Colds if not attended to will sooner or later develop into some serious lung trouble.

Mrs. Willis H. Monk, Lower Ship Harbor, N.S., writes: "Last winter I took a severe cold on my lungs, and I would cough and spit up phlegm and blood. I had the cough for nearly a month, and I got medicine from the doctor, but it did me no good. I thought I had consumption. My friends advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which I did, and it gave me great relief. I am the mother of ten children, and I always keep a bottle of 'Dr. Wood's' in the house. I will highly recommend it to all, especially to all who have little ones to care for."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is the best cure for coughs and colds. It has been on the market for the past twenty-five years. It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price, 25c and 50c.

A great help in Cooking

One of the most remarkable features of OXO CUBES is the economy they effect in cooking. They are an excellent substitute for meat in soups and savouries. They prevent waste and oddments can be served in many appetising ways by their use.

Then contrast the old-fashioned cumbersome way of cooking with the quick, convenient OXO CUBE way. Think of the time saved—the material saved—the fuel saved—and then reckon up that in dollars and cents. But that is not all. OXO increases nutrition—it makes every dish more wholesome and digestible.

Courage.

"Lose this day loitering—'twill be the same story
To-morrow—and the next more lidatory;
Then indecision brings its own delays,
And days are lost lamenting o'er lost days.
Are you in earnest? Seize this very minute—
What you can do, or dream you can, begin it.
Courage has genius, power, and magic in it,
Only engage, and then the mind grows heated—
Begin it, and the work will be completed."

HOME HEALTH CLUB

Smallpox: Here is something from "Clinical Medicine," December, 1915 for you to treasure in your memory and keep on file also:

"The conquest of smallpox by calcium Sulphide in Mexico: The grandest and most meritorious work of my life has been performed within the past four months, namely: I succeeded in arresting the most deadly epidemic of smallpox I have ever known, and that without performing a single vaccination; and the death rate was 93 per cent. before I intervened, which practically was by force, without my having been called by the victims or the rattled official. And I must confess that I embarked on a very unpromising venture. I read up the history of smallpox and about what is known of its ineffective medication. I had in stock a meagre 1,000 calcium sulphide granules of 1-2 grain each, and no chance to get more in reasonable time. This was not a drop in the bucket in this urgent need; and I had to employ them so that the value of not one solitary pill would be wasted.

Having used sulphur internally against the old-time "seven-year-itch" with cheering success, it struck my stupid noggin that this chemical should exercise at least a modifying influence upon any cutaneous affliction. However, I failed to find a word in the history of sulphur, and in that of the treatment of smallpox, that it ever had been employed in that distressing pestilence. Yet, nothing discouraged, I resolved to put my brimstone theory to the proof.

I started out by thoroughly purging every mother's son and the parents likewise, resident in the exposed realm. I gave the grown folks a teaspoonful of flour of sulphur every night and morning, and I annointed the bodies of the little ones. I had them repeat the sulphur dosing day after day, while giving enough of a purgative to aid the sulphur in insuring unobstructed clearing of the bowels. I could not order burning of the clothing and bedding, for lack of others to replace them; but I had them boiled. I also had boiling water liberally applied wherever there had been any infection; and everybody still liable to infection was bathed with water as hot as could be borne without causing blistering.

As a fresh case of infection appeared among these previously exposed, I gave the patient calcium sulphide, pushed to saturation and sustained, and alternated with echinacoid. In this manner, every case was effectually aborted, the patients recovering the same as those treated for the prevalent fevers; and they caused no new infections.

Thus, this smallpox epidemic of well-radiated virulence, collapsed at four populous places. At one place, 17 deaths out of 50 people had occurred in a few days, mostly before smallpox was publicly suspected, the cases having been reported as measels. But not one person died after my calcium sulphide and sulphur and boiling water called a halt to the immolation. Before this treatment was instituted, nearly every one attacked had died."

HINTS FOR THE HOME

Cocoa is the best drink for those who are endeavoring to overcome the craving for alcoholic liquors.

When making plain raisin pudding use a finely-grated carrot instead of an egg. It is just as good and cheaper.

A pail of boiling salt water should be poured down the kitchen sink every week to prevent its becoming stopped.

Ground coffee sprinkled freely amongst the fur or feathers of game when packed for travelling will keep it fresh.

Before home made bread is put into the oven brush the tops of the loaves with butter, and the crust will remain moist.

After being used for fish frying pans should be scoured out with salt and hot water. This removes the fishy smell better than soda and water.

Scraps of bread should never be allowed to accumulate in the bread pan. They should be made into pudding, or browned in the oven for raspings.

Gargle for the throat can be made with vinegar and sage, and a piece of rag dipped in vinegar and placed on the forehead will relieve a bad headache.

According to Arctic explorers anything containing fat, such as chocolate, butter or bacon, is a fine heat promoter. Alcohol is a snare and a delusion.

If when poaching eggs a teaspoonful of vinegar is added to the boiling water it will prevent the egg from breaking. Also, tough meat may be made tender if placed in strong vinegar water for a few minutes.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

7369

One can never have too many plain skirts, for these are the ones which are called upon to stand wear and weather and to have them always fresh one needs more than one at a time.

The model shown herewith is a two gore design, but the gores are open about half way up each side and a small, narrow gusset is inserted. This may be made of a material differing in pattern from that of the main portions of the skirt.

High and regulation waistline are both provided with this pattern, and many women will prefer the high, even when covered with a belt, as it is easier to keep the skirt in position when it has a stiff inside belt.

Corduroy is a popular material for a service skirt and when it is used it had best be all of one fabbric, but if serge be selected the gussets can be made of plaid material or of silk, while with poplin and other weaves of novelty character it is always possible to find something which will combine well and give a touch of novelty to the garment.

This is among the best models for business wear, as it may have a little ornament and yet not be at all dressy or showy. It is a skirt which will make up well in plain, black, with woolen goods for the main skirt and silk or velvet for the small gores.

The skirt pattern, No. 7369, is cut in sizes 22 to 32 inches waist measure. Medium size requires 2¾ yards of 44 inch material.

This pattern can be obtained by sending 10 cents to the office of this paper.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

A FRIEND OR TWO.

James M. Pierce in his Iowa Homestead says:

Sometimes in my reading I run across things so good I cannot refrain from passing them on to you. Who of us, for instance, does not know the value of a few good friends? Yet who among us has ever paid a tribute to our friends so gracefully and so beautifully as it has been paid by the poet who wrote the verses which I set forth herewith:

There's all of pleasure and all of peace
In a friend or two;
And all your troubles may find release
With a friend or two;
It's in the grip of the clasping hand
On native soil or in alien land
But the world is made—do you understand?—
Of a friend or two.

A song to sing and a crust to share
With a friend or two;
A smile to give and a grief to bear
With a friend or two;
A road to walk and a goal to win,
An inglenook to find comfort in,
The gladdest hours that we know, begin
With a friend or two;

A little laughter, perhaps some tears,
With a friend or two;
The days, the weeks and the months and years
With a friend or two;
A vale to cross and a hill to climb,
A mock at age and a jeer at time—
The prose of life takes the lilt of rhyme
With a friend or two;
Then brim the goblet and quaff the toast
To a friend or two;
For glad the man who can always boast
Of a friend or two:
The fairest sight is a friendly face,
The blithest tread is a friendly pace,
And heaven will be a better place
For a friend or two.

It is one of the penalties of a busy life, such as I lead, that I often cannot find the time to sit in the inglenook or stop in the fence corner and chat with "a friend or two." There is so much work to be done, the day is so short, and so we go along denying ourselves the pleasure which we crave—the grip of the clasping hand, the cheery word of friendship that will lighten the burdens of the day and rob the nighttime of its darkness.

My friends, we do wrong when we do not stop, every little while, to get the full value out of our friendships. The season of the year is approaching when the most arduous, insistent duties of the farm are over for awhile. How better could we improve our leisure moments than by reading the best things we can get hold of and by renewing old friendship and making new ones which shall last until the last clod has been thrown upon our final resting place? Life offers us no greater blessing, outside the circle of our own family, than "a friend or two." They mean more to us of the farm than to any other men; let us grapple our friends to us with chains of steel, so that whatever comes neither life nor death can tear them from us. After all, no matter how heavy the burden, how dark the sky, how filled with foreboding the air, how affrighting the shadows:

All your troubles may find release
With a friend or two;

EXPECTING TOO MUCH.

A housekeeper's duties are many and exhausting, and under the best of circumstances many times trying. This is especially so of the nervous delicate woman. While there are essential duties to be performed in all households, a great deal of the trouble arises from expecting too much from others. A woman who wishes to make her home a happy haven of rest for husband and children, must have sympathy and charity for the short-comings of every member of the household. One may be untidy, a very trying fault one must admit, another indolent, while a third has an irritable temper. But is it any use to fret over these daily trials? Far better throw the mantle of charity over faults that cannot be remedied and learn not to expect too much. While extending leniency toward others, it is well to do the same towards ourself and not exhaust body and mind in endeavouring to do the work of two or three presons. How many women lose all the pleasure of home life in this never-ending effort.

Brightness is always attractive, particularly a bright face. It is seen, admired and favorably commented upon. There springs from it illuminations that draw. It wins favour, endures the longest, and speaks the farthest. It is akin to cheerfulness, in fact, it is the outcome of it. A bright face indicates a cheerful heart, buoyant with hope and glowing with expectation. It banishes doubt, despair and fear. It reveals the heart of trust, peace and contentment. It reflects the inner life, and images the divine presence. "Moses wist not that his face shone," but the people marveled at its brightness. May your life be such that the brightness of your countenance will illuminate the very atmosphere in which you move, and particularly the home in which live. Such brightness in a home will disperse clouds of gloom, sadness of heart and the sorrows of the soul. It will cheer, comfort and console; happy hearts inspire life and turn darkness into light.

Wear a happy smiling face.
Wear it with the best of grace,
Wear it—greatest good to give.
Wear it and you'll longer live.

"At home after April 15," we read in the corner of an invitation card "At home," how suggestive. Another one was to be established, another kingdom, another inner world. "At home"; may th revealings be as from heaven, with love as its angel with overshadowing winds. Home! That word touches every fibre of the soul. It is the magic circle in which is centered the heart's warmest affection. Years ago when Jenny Lind in Castle Garden was singing the sublime compositions of Beethoven and Handel to an audience of 20,000, she paused and seemed to fold her wings for a loftier flight. With an impulse that was born of God and of heaven she poured forth "Home, Sweet Home." Every heart was moved, and tears flowed as from 20,000 fountains. To attain a home and to stand as a love with a vine and others twining about, pressing forth to a blooming, is man's worthiest ambition. "At home" in its truest sense, suggests the best condition of Christian civilization, heaven's ante chamber.

"CASCARETS" BEST IF HEADACHY, BILIOUS, SICK, CONSTIPATED

Best for liver and bowels, bad breath bad colds, sour stomach

Get a 10-cent box.

Sick headache, biliousness, coated tongue, head and nose clogged up with a cold—always trace this to torpid liver; delayed, fermenting food in the bowels or sour, gassy stomach.

Poisonous matter clogged in the intestines, instead of being cast out of the system is re-absorbed into the blood. When this poison reaches the delicate brain tissue it causes congestion and that dull, throbbing, sickening headache.

Cascarets immediately cleanse the stomach, remove the sour, undigested food and foul gases, take the excess bile from the liver and carry out all the constipated waste matter and poisons in the bowels.

A Cascaret to-night will surely straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist means your head clear, stomach sweet and your liver and bowels regular for months.

SOME COOKING HINTS.

Baked Cheese and Tomato.

Mix one pint canned tomatoes, one cup breadcrumbs, one-third cup grated or finely cut cheese, one-half teaspoonful salt, and pepper to taste. Pour this into a buttered baking dish. Mix one-third cup breadcrumbs with one tablespoon melted butter and two tablespoons of grated cheese. Spread over the top of the first mixture, and bake about twenty minutes.

Lemon Butter for Sandwiches, &c.

Half a cup of water, half cup flour, half cup sugar, one egg, salt. Boil the water and add the flour, mixed to a paste, then add the sugar, the egg well beaten, and the pinch of salt. Cook until stiff and creamy, take off from the stove, and add four tablespoons of lemon juice, and a teaspoonful of grated rind. Spread between slices of bread for the children's sandwiches. It is also good for filling cakes.

Parsnip Fritters.

Four parsnips boiled and mashed fine; add three well-beaten eggs, two tablespoons of sifted flour, butter the size of an egg, one teacup full of milk, and salt to taste. Upon a hot buttered griddle drop the mixture. Serve quite hot.

Another Recipe.—Boil in salted water until very tender, then mash, seasoning with a little butter, pepper, and salt, add a little flour and one or two eggs, well beaten. Make into small balls, and fry in hot lard.

Under the able superintendence of the twentieth-century builder, cottages and houses sprang up like mushrooms upon the new estate. But one morning the foreman rushed into his employer's office in a state of intense excitement.

"Please, sir," he gasped, "one of the new houses has fallen down in the night."

"What?" roared the builder. "You mean to tell me that one of my new, well-built desirable villa residences has come to grief? How the dickens did that happen?"

"Well, sir," explained the foreman, "as far as I can make out, there was a little mistake. Unfortunately the men took down the scaffolding before they had put up the wall-paper!" — Tit-Bits.

FORECASTS FOR SPRING

Wool Jersey for Frocks and Suits

Washable Collars and Cuffs Modish

NEW YORK, Jan. 15. — Comfort and convenience — these are the two qualifications attributed to sport clothes since the first woman dared don a skirt short enough to uncover the tip on her boot. Would these same sport clothes be quite so generally favoured, think you, if these were the only words with which to commend them? If there were not something particularly youthful and becoming in the chic severity of these same sport togs, their sale would be quite limited I am sure.

Wool Jersey for Suits and Frocks.

One of the most attractive of the new materials for suits and dresses is the latest phase of Jersey cloth. It is being used for the dressier frocks and the semi-tailleurs, for afternoon wear, indoor skating, tea, dancing, calling and like purposes, as well as for the regulation sport suit. It comes in all the new shades, blue, green, brown, and the various other tones now modish. Often on the more trimmed of these Jersey costumes there is a touch of taffeta or a bit of braid. These suits are fashioned after the belted Russian models, the smart flared coats and skirt, and for the strictly correct sport suit along the Norfolk lines combined with an equally severe skirt.

The New Cape Appears.

Among the new features which, of course, are but a revival of the old, is the cape. This appears upon all types of frocks and suits in the form of the shoulder cape, sleeve cape, and cape collar. The full-skirted, simple-bodiced frock of taffeta, worn at an afternoon tea, the skating rink, or the concert, displays its cape collar, or series of collars, when it is not featuring a Puritan-like shoulder drapery, crossing surplice-fashion in front, and held in place in back by a girdle, from below which tiny coat tails or tabs appear. There is some tendency, too, of the cape returning as a separate wrap; in fact pelerines of quaintly quilled taffeta are being shown to wear over light summer frocks and are now being worn in the south. Many of these display the unfitted, rather bunchy-looking collar which accentuates the slope of the shoulders thereby living up to one of the chief requirements of the present modes. Many circular and Directoire capes matching the hat are among the season's attractive fancies.

The Cape Dress.

Alarming Width of Skirts.

Paris is reported as practically losing her head over the width of the skirt. She gave out the pleasing dictum of—"a trifle more length," just a while ago, and proceeded straightway to offset it by adding to the breadth. Many of the new skirts on Paris models, it is said, are gathering material in about the waist with no regard whatever to the figure beneath, in fact a woman wearing such a skirt or frock has much the appearance of an animated barrel or something equally ungraceful. The medium skirts with just a bit of fulness about the waist, combined with the simple quaint bodices now smart, are dainty and becoming, suggestive of the grace of the figure beneath, as they are. The new models so reminiscent of the days of 1830 and 1830, are full of charm if extremes are not indulged in.

BABY'S BATTLES AGAINST SICKNESS

Can best be fought with Baby's Own Tablets—the little pleasant tasting Tablet that never fails to regulate the stomach and bowels and drive out all minor ills of the little ones. Concerning them Mrs. H. Hower, Easthurg, Alta., says: — "I have four healthy children thank to the use of Baby's Own Tablets. I have been using the Tablets for the past eight years and think them the best medicine in the world for little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The number of plants and flowers sold, and the total amount for which they were sold, made the week ending Christmas night, 1915, the most successful the florists of New York City ever experienced.

Warden Kirchwey Accuses Mr. Riley of Interference As Governor Hears Denial

ALBANY, Jan. 14. —With George W. Kirchwey, whom he appointed as Warden of Sing Sing Prison but a short time ago, appearing as the one witness against him, John B. Riley, State Superintendent of Prisons, replied to Governor Whitman on the charges that he had attempted to handicap the administration of the new Warden by transferring sixty-six convicts from Sing Sing to Dannemora.

While many persons here had expressed the opinion that the charges were weak, at the conclusion of the hearing it was conceded by even some of those that the Governor has strengthened his case considerably, and Mr. Riley's removal is looked for before many days.

At the outset Governor Whitman began questioning Mr. Riley, which led Edgar T. Brackett, Mr. Riley's counsel, to remark at the close of the hearing that it was grotesque for the Governor to try the charges he himself had framed.

Mr. Riley declared in his formal reply that he was willing to surrender his office, but said he did not want to be removed on charges that he considered false.

The hearing was adjourned after a session of two and one-half hours, with the understanding that Mr. Brackett may file answering affidavits on Friday, or Monday at the latest.

The Governor produced letters written by Mr. Riley to Thomas Mott Osborne stating that a transfer of prisoners from Sing Sing to Dannemora, except in tuberculosis cases, is regarded as a punishment. In another letter from Mr. Riley to Mr. Osborne the Superintendent gave instructions that the names of prisoners who violate regulations should be reported, so they might be listed for transfer.

In a letter to the Governor last week Mr. Riley stated it was a "misapprehension" to say that the transfer to Dannemora except in cases of tuberculosis is regarded as a punishment. Mr. Brackett, in taking up that point, argued that while incorrigible prisoners generally are kept at Dannemora, all prisoners sent there are not necessarily incorrigible.

Views on Congestion.

"Was the order transferring the prisoners at Sing Sing to Dannemora made solely to relieve congestion at Sing Sing?" asked the Governor of Mr. Riley.

"Largely so."

"Well, the next day you ordered twenty men transferred from Dannemora to Sing Sing. Is that not so?"

"Why, they were originally sent to Dannemora as tubercular prisoners, and it is the custom to return such men to their original prison when they show improvement."

"And so," said the Governor, "in order to relieve congestion at Sing Sing you ordered twenty men sent there."

The Governor stated that eight of the fourteen witnesses called in behalf of Mr. Osborne at Sing Sing had been included in the transfer order. He produced a letter from a New York lawyer complaining that E. M. Rogers, a prisoner, feared he would be transferred because he was to be called as a witness for Mr. Osborne.

"And the next day," said the Governor, "this man's name was added to the list. Does it not seem strange that the prisoner himself should know that he was going to be transferred?"

The names of other prisoners mentioned by the Governor as witnesses for Mr. Osborne who were ordered transferred include those of Mallon, Nathan, Paresi and Brackett. In most cases they were reported to be identified with the Mutual Welfare League and to have good records. Mr. Riley denied all knowledge of interfering with any witnesses, and Mr. Brackett held that any one hostile to Mr. Osborne would have no means of knowing the names of his witnesses.

Mr. Kirchwey, called to the stand said he hoped to be able to co-operate with Mr. Riley but felt that he saw opposition to him in the transfer order and in other actions of the Superintendent. He said that in glancing over the transfer order, as submitted to him, he saw the names of many prisoners he would not send to Dannemora and at once tried to get in touch with Mr. Riley. When he was unable to do so, he said, he conferred with the Governor.

"That list made a clean sweep of the pillars of society at Sing Sing," he declared. "Why, every man connected with the warden's house, with the exception of the cooks in the cellar, was slated for transfer."

Mr. Brackett, in cross-examining Mr. Kirchwey, attempted to make it appear that he first should have consulted Mr. Riley as his immediate superior and then have gone to the Governor if he did not obtain satisfaction. The Warden said, however, that he had come to Albany with the order and had intended to take the matter up with Mr. Riley, but found that he was in New York, and so called upon the Governor.

Mr. Kirchwey stated also that Mr. Riley had told him that he (Mr. Riley) had pretty definite ideas about the management of Sing Sing and wanted him to restore prison attaches dropped by Mr. Osborne and drop others named by the indicted Warden.

"Holding my commission in my hand," said Mr. Kirchwey, "I told Mr. Riley that he had better take it back unless I was to have a free hand at Sing Sing. He told me to enter upon my duties, but that if I did not carry out his suggestions he would exercise his power."

The formal reply of Mr. Riley, read by Mr. Brackett, was largely a recital of the letters that the superintendent sent to the Executive last week and interviews he gave the newspaper men during the controversy. Although stating that he has no wish "to cling to the office," he declared his removal upon the charges lodged against him would be "a perversion of the organic law of the State that is monstrous."

Aside from denying the charges, he said he knew of no agreement entered into by the Governor, himself and Warden Kirchwey which the Executive says he violated.

"I could not lawfully," he said, "or properly make any such agreement, nor could the Governor or the Warden, lawfully or properly, be a party to such an agreement."

Mr. Riley said that on January 3 he had given instructions to Warden Kirchwey to see that Mr. Osborne and his counsel got every opportunity to confer with prisoners and officers at Sing Sing, emphasizing that as an indication that he had no desire to interfere with the preparation of Mr. Osborne's defense.

"Victim of Misinformation."

"In a recent letter to me," Mr. Riley said, in conclusion, "you were moved to make reference to my state of health as bearing on the effectiveness of my administration. Had I not recognized the reference as manifestly the result of inadvertance, and as probably made without reflection, I could not have regarded it as other than unfair and as without bearing on any pending issue; but I did so recognize and have failed of any ill feeling because of it.

"What the future shall disclose with respect to either your health or mine is in the hands of Him who disposes of us all as He has seen fit and well, but the past, at least, is secure, and you will find no evidence of weakness in my official acts or any impairment of health.

"I reiterate what I have said before. I have no wish longer to hold the office so earnestly sought by others. If for any reason, personal or political, you shall say to me that you wish the place, it is at your disposal for the asking, and within an hour. But I am sure that you, the Executive of the State, in your many and varied perplexing duties, have been the victim of misinformation; that the deductions named in the charges filed are not only untrue, logically and in fact, but are the work of men with ulterior purpose to serve."

Showed Best Man the Door At Wife's Plea, "Protect Me"

NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—A detailed account of the domestic bickerings in which Justice Sheffield, lawyer, and his wife, Rena Carey Sheffield, author, engaged during their married life was recited by Mr. Sheffield yesterday in the trial of their cross-actions for divorce, brought before Vice Chancellor Lewis in Jersey City.

Mr. Sheffield, whose financial difficulties were an important factor in his marital difficulties, told of continually objecting to what appeared to be extravagance on the part of his wife at a time when he was practically penniless. One of the instances he referred to occurred after his wife had dined in New York and when he spoke reprovingly to her about the matter. He asserts that she turned to Hutchins Hapgood, who was best man at their wedding, and asked his protection. Mr. Sheffield said he then showed Mr. Hapgood the door and that Mr. Hapgood passed through it.

Asked Mr. Hapgood's Aid.

At the time, according to the testimony of Mr. Sheffield, his wife went to New York from their home at Short Hill, N.J., and had dinner at a hotel. He testified that he then had no money and asked his wife how she managed to dine so luxuriously.

"My wife told me," said Mr. Sheffield, "that she had put her watch in pawn to pay for the dinner, but when I asked to see the pawn ticket she refused to produce it. I insisted that she show me the ticket and as we were engaged in argument, Mr. Hapgood arrived. My wife turned to him and cried:—Oh, protect me, Hutch! When Mr. Hutchins asked me to desist I asked him to leave my house, and he did."

Mr. Sheffield later stated that he found a letter signed, "Affectionately, Hutch," but did not and does not consider it significant, as Mr. Hapgood had been a mutual friend for more than twelve years. He did see a significance in another letter found by him, he said, and addressed to his wife and signed "Devotedly, Roland."

"That," Mr. Sheffield declared, "was an entirely different matter."

The signature was that of Roland Holt, and when Mr. Sheffield was commenting upon it Mrs. Sheffield became agitated and repeatedly half rose in her seat, exclaiming:—

"Why, the idea!"

Mr. Sheffield said he had known Mr. Holt for five years, but not intimately and had never met him except in the presence of Mrs. Sheffield.

"We addressed each other formally and our conduct toward each other was always formal," Mr. Sheffield said.

Took Her to See His Son.

When asked to recount the circumstances under which he had taken Mrs. Bessie Branion, a New York cabaret singer, with him on visits to his little son Nelson at White House, N.J., Mr. Sheffield stated that he knew Mrs. Brannion very well and that as she had a son about the same age as Nelson he thought it a good idea to take her along. She was able to tell him that his son was being properly cared for, Mr. Sheffield said.

Miss Anna McMullen, who cared for the boy at White House, was called and questioned regarding Mr. Sheffield's conduct toward Mrs. Branion during the visits. She stated that Mr. Sheffield called his companion Bessie. She was not sure whom he had addressed as "dear" and "dearest" during the calls, but thought it might have been his son.

Mr. Sheffield recalled to explain what his wife had expressed sorrow for in a letter, stated that she once had declared she wished he were dead, and that afterward she had seemed to regret very much having said it.

Mrs Sheffield was served with a summons for the original manuscript of her novel ("The Golden Hollow") and for the manuscript of another novel recently finished. It is "The Dream Boy" of the first named literary effort which Mr. Sheffield asserts in his complaint is no creature of imagination.

When the summons was served Mrs. Sheffield told the Court that she feared that the plot would be disclosed if it was brought in evidence.

"It is very precious, she declared.

The Court assured Mrs Sheffield that the plot would be protected if she did not discuss it herself.

Desirous of buying a camera a certain fair young lady inspected the stock of a local shop-keeper.

"Is this a good one?" she asked, as she picked up a dainty little machine. "What is it called?"

"That's the Belvedere," said the handsome young shopman, politely.

There was a chilly silence. Then the young lady drew herself coldly erect, fixed him with an icy stare, and asked again:

"Er—and can you recommend the Belva?"

The Issue of Prohibition Was Decided June, 1914

It is only 18 months since the Provincial elections of June, 1914, showed conclusively that the majority of the voters were opposed to the policy of the Liberal Party and wished to retain the license system.

Now the Citizens' Committee of One Hundred, claiming to be a non-partisan organization, announces its purpose of having Total Prohibition by July of this year—notwithstanding the expressed will of the people.

It proposes to accomplish this by circulating petitions among non-voters and among those of the voters who are not already debarred from expressing their view because they are away fighting for liberty.

Would the Soldiers Sign Such a Petition?

Remember:

Remember the result of the election of June, 1914.

Remember that the introduction of the liquor question is deadly to that unity necessary to win the war.

Remember you are a custodian of the liberties of our boys abroad.

Remember that people cannot be legislated into sobriety, and that prohibition only turns the sale of intoxicants out of the licensed channels into illegal hands.

Remember all that has been done and will be done by the Ontario Licensed Commission in the reduction of the number of licenses and the hours of sale.

Imagine if such a petition were circulated among the men in our training camps. Do you think for one moment that, having made the supreme sacrifice to ensure our liberties, they would uphold this measure designed to make Abstinence compulsory?

The Committee of One Hundred knows that these men would never countenance its propaganda, and so proposes to obtain a catch verdict while the fighting men are out of the way.

The Governing Bodies of the Empire Seek Unity at All Costs--The Prohibition Issue Brings Factional Warfare

Every effort of our people is being bent at this time to the one great object—winning the War. To this end, it has been resolved to hold no elections, to lay aside all minor issues, to unite opposing factions—to repulse the common enemy.

And this is the time The Committee of One Hundred Chooses to bring forward prohibition plans, to foster political strife, to set friend against friend and break down the ties that bind parties.

Had there been a Dominion election it was resolved that the soldiers, whether at home or abroad, would be given the opportunity to vote. There was to be no attempt to change the policy of the country without these men who are fighting for us voicing their wishes.

No Such Drastic Step Should be Taken Without Reference to Our Fighters

It is grossly unfair to the thousands who have already gone to War, and to the other thousands who will have gone before the Committee of One Hundred present their petitions, to sign away the liberty of the individual. The very fact of taking the King's uniform proves a man's highest regard for the principles of liberty, and there can be no doubt that compulsory abstinence is diametrically opposed to the principles for which they have shown themselves willing to die.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WHEN the DEACON CALLED.

[Copyright, 1915.]

About the time there was an escape from the asylum at Peterboro Farmer Gregg's sister, a widow, came for a visit. Mrs. Gregg proposed that they make a match between the widow and Deacon Watkins, and he was invited to call. One afternoon the farmer and his wife set out for town, leaving their guest all alone. This was the afternoon selected by Deacon Watkins for his call.

There were reasons why the deacon arrived at the Gregg homestead in a rather excited condition. He was kicked by one of his cows just before leaving home, one of the hogs got caught in the fence and had to be released, a stray bull that he encountered in the road ran him up a wild cherry tree, and in some of the adventures he lost a jackknife that used to belong to his grandfather. He was therefore more or less perturbed when he knocked at the kitchen door and then entered to find the widow asleep in the room beyond. He had turned to retreat when she awoke and uttered a scream at sight of him. She had been dreaming of that escaped lunatic. She had dreamed that he had his fingers on her throat and was choking her to death, and here he was before her! The deacon muttered his name and an apology, and the widow sat up. She had read and heard a great deal about lunatics and how they should be treated. This one didn't look very fierce, but she must be careful not to arouse him. She must be soft and gentle and dissemble. Therefore as soon as she could catch her breath she smilingly asked the deacon if he wouldn't sit down. He replied that he would and did. He didn't ask for the Greggs. Not seeing them about, he inferred that they had gone to town.

The widow had been told always to look a mad dog or a lunatic in the eye. As she kept her eyes on the deacon she read cunning, craft and cruelty in his face, and she realized that her life was at stake. It was rather embarrassing for the caller, but he talked about Indians, Canadian thistles, potato bugs and the weather and grew more at ease as the minutes slipped away. On her part the widow tried to be as entertaining, but it was hard work. The fear was constantly present that the lunatic would suddenly break out and rend her limb by limb. She was hysterical, but she didn't come to smile. When the deacon finally got around to tell her of his trials and misfortunes he found a sympathetic listener. She had read that she must always pretend to sympathize with the insane, and she made the effort of her life. By and by her caller went further. He said that when his dear companion died he made up his mind never to marry again, but it was possible that he would change his mind if he met the right party. It was lonesome living all alone and having no one to pet. It was so lonesome that sometimes he went out and sought the companionship of the oxen.

The widow had been told that she must seem to agree with a lunatic, and she heaved a sigh and replied to the deacon by saying that when she had laid her Joseph 'neath the weeping willow she thought the light had gone out forever. Time had assuaged her grief and caused her to change her mind. She had come to feel that perhaps it was even her duty to marry again. She could cook, wash, bake, iron, make soft soap and all kinds of preserves, and for three years running her crazy quilts and rag carpets had taken first prizes at the county fair. The deacon then hinted that by hard work and industry he had accumulated about $8,000 worth of property. The widow saw his object and stated that her Joseph left her about that amount and she had increased it somewhat. As a matter of fact, she lied about it, but she had read that one must always lie to lunatics, and she didn't propose to provoke the one before her.

Deacon Watkins became interested. He admired. He would come again. If his lost relict was to be replaced, Indiana should have a fair chance in the race. He arose and came. He liked that chatter. He liked a woman that could hustle with the housework and knew by instinct when a boiled dinner was ready to put on the table. He got up to go, and the widow felt that her life was saved. He lingered with his hand on the back of his chair, and her throat constricted. He might or might not have taken his leave as soon as he had finished telling her that he thought ailing humanity ought to drink more catnip tea when steps were heard outside. A hog buyer and a tin peddler had arrived in chorus. The widow cried, "Come in!" and they came, but the instant they entered she cried something else. Pointing to the deacon, she half shrieked:

"Secure him! He is an escaped lunatic!"

Then the deacon was thrown on his back and tied up with the clothesline and threatened with death, and, though he stuttered and stammered, no attention was paid to him. He was bundled into the drover's cart and jogged over to the asylum, and it was only then that any attention was paid to his remarks. When the Greggs returned and found out what had happened the farmer went over to see his neighbor. He found him sitting on the back doorstep with a lonesome look on his face.

"Oh, deacon, I have come over to say to you"— he began when the deacon looked up and carelessly interrupted with:

"Doggone it, you go to thunder!"

An English Opinion.

"London is full of foreigners," writes a correspondent of the London Chronicle, "and you may detect them in many infallible ways. But nothing perhaps displays a man's nationality more surely than the way he eats. You may tell an Englishman, meet him where you may, by the fact that he grasps his fork firmly in his left hand and keeps it there instead of transferring it to his right hand as soon as his food is cut up. You can tell a Frenchman by his wise disregard of fish knives and salt spoons. As for Americans—well, it is amusing to read of Benjamin Franklin's visit to Paris in 1777 and of the horror of the ladies of the court when he fell upon asparagus with hands and teeth and of their corresponding disdain when he failed to treat a melon in the same way, but ate it delicately with a knife and fork. They also professed disgust at his love for an egg broken into a tumbler."

The "Land of Cattle."

Italy may fairly claim to be senior among the nations of Europe, so far as its name is concerned. The peninsula has been "Italia" almost as far back as even legend reaches. According to Mommsen, the "Itali" proper were the inhabitants of the southern part of the country. As to the origin of the name, there is the normal legend of a King Italus, but his name must have been pronounced Vitalus and Vitulus, which means a bull calf, and it is easy to recognize in it an allusion to Italy as the land of cattle.—Spectator.

Pink Pearls.

One of the most important industries of the Bahama islands is the gathering of pink pearls. It is the only place in the world where these pearls are found. They are not taken from the oyster shell, but from a shell resembling a large snail shell, called a "conch." These pearls when perfect bring very high prices.

Would Wake Up With Smothering Spells.

There is nothing that brings with it such a fear of impending death as to wake up in the night with that awful sense of smothering. The terrible smothering, choking up and sinking feeling is caused by the heart and nerves being in a deranged condition, and calls for prompt relief.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the only remedy that can give prompt relief and effect a complete cure in all cases of such severity.

They strengthen and invigorate the heart, tone up the nervous system, and the trouble which is the cause of so much fear and anxiety becomes a thing of the past.

Mrs. Wm. McElwain, Temperance Vale, N.B., writes: "I am not much of a believer in medicines, but I must say Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are all right. Some years ago I was troubled with smothering spells. In the night I would be sound asleep, but would wake up with my breath all gone, and think I would never get it back again. I was telling a friend of my trouble, and he advised me to use Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. He also gave me a box which I tried, and I had only taken a few of them when I could sleep all night without any trouble. I did not finish the box until some years later, when I felt my trouble coming back. I took the rest and they have cured me entirely."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

TEUTONS RESPECT LORD KITCHENER

German Press Likens Him to Wellington—Has Done Great Work.

The most remarkably frank appreciation of any Englishman that has appeared in the German Press since the beginning of the war is published by the "Berliner Tageblatt," as the immediate result of Lord Kitchener's mission, about the effects of which serious Germans are plainly uneasy.

Lord Kitchener is evidently regarded by the writer as the modern Wellington, to whom he freely compares him, whilst the whole article is an appreciation of Lord Kitchener's military and organizing genius as follows:

Nothing is more stupid than to underestimate an adversary, and when England sends its best military man to the district in which possibly the war will be decided we have every reason to examine this man, his capabilities and determination, as impartially as possible. To begin with we cannot but admit that what Lord Kitchener has done in the course of this war as an organizer is deserving of the greatest respect. One must judge not from the English point of view, for it is impossible to apply the same standard to the work of a German and an English Minister of War. A German Minister of War would be ashamed of himself if he needed so much time and trouble as Lord Kitchener has needed to get together and prepare a similar force for operations. No such improvision is necessary in our case, but in England where in times of peace preparations have never been made for a land war on such a scale, it must be recognized that Lord Kitchener has created his armies and organization out of nothing.

It is easily understood, therefore, why the leading classes are not to be shaken in their confidence in him. Who is this man with whom we have to reckon in the future in the development of the struggle of struggles in the Eastern Mediterranean? He is the typical representative of English militarism, which, notwithstanding all disclaimers, has always existed and once had a similar representative, a man of the same stamp, like Wellington.

Lord Kitchener, like Wellington, determines his acts on grounds of practicability only.

REFRACTION OF LIGHT.

Refraction plays many magical tricks with men's eyes. It is responsible for the extraordinary phenomenon called mirage, which has excited the wonder of mankind in every age. Owing to differences of temperature, barometric pressure, etc., in adjacent parts o fthe atmosphere the refraction is sometimes capriciously varied so that the most abnormal sights are seen. Parts of the earth seem detached and set afloat. Ships are visible inside doors in the sky; objects lying behind hills are beheld apparently lifted above them; lakes of gleaming water, surrounded by palm trees and refreshing vegetation, spring up in the midst of sandy deserts; unknown cities with towers and pinnacles, make their appearance suspended in the air; aerial animals appear, browsing in illusory pastures, processions of men and horses are seen, marching or galloping, where no foot has ever trod—such are some of the recorded marvels that the mirage has produced.—New York Journal.

We cannot—we MUST NOT let the destitute Belgians starve! No victory could be lastingly glorious if it involved the decimation by famine of a small nation that deliberately sacrificed itself rather than sacrifice honor!

Earl Curzon of Kedleston, says:

All accounts are audited, and every pound of food and supplies is accounted for. The arrangements are absolutely effective for securing that none of the food or money good into the hands of the Germans, is requisitioned by military authorities, or in any way diverted from the object for which it is given.

Nearly 3,000,000 Belgians must depend this winter on charity! Without help hundreds of thousands will starve! We in Canada have plenty! In the name of humanity and of the cause for which we are fighting, let us do our part toward saving these heroic allies!

JUST LIKE A DINOSAUR IS MODERN GOURMET

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Lots of men in this city are getting to be just like dinosaurs, so says Dr. Louis R. Welzmiller, physical director of the West Side Y.M.C.A. The dinosaur, you know, lived around these parts when food was even more abundant than it is now, and built up a great big fat body that had only a small brain to guide it.

The dinosaur, in other words, was just a pin headed fatty of an animal that didn't have enough sense to stop eating when he should. Now Dr. Welzmiller says you can find fellows just like that on Broadway, where food is abundant for those who have the price to pay for it.

When a man finds himself getting a dinosaurian stomach he should stop eating so much and begin to take fat reducing exercises, Dr. Welzmiller says, or his brain will become sluggish.

Power and Alertness Typified By Ship at British Naval Base

Battle Scarred Cruisers, Wicked Looking Submarines and Swift Destroyers Lie Straining at Hawsers When Correspondents Are Taken For Inspection of Coast Station

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Under escort of officers assigned by the Admiralty a correspondent of the Associated Press and a party of foreign journalists had their first opportunity to inspect one of the great naval bases on the coast, where cruisers, destroyers and submarines are assembled for their watch over the North Sea and from which point big oceangoing submarines are sent on forages to the Baltic and the Dardanelles.

It was an impressive sight of concentrated power and alert readiness, with long lines of battle scarred cruisers stretching seaward and headed by the famous Arethusa, back of them a vast flotilla of destroyers, then a countless number of submarines of the latest D and E type, which recently have performed such brilliant work from the Dardanelles to the Bosphorus and throughout the Baltic.

The day was typical of the rigors the British fleet is now experiencing in the North Sea with rain pelting the sailors in oilskins a north wind cutting the sea into foam and sea gulls everywhere. The little fishing village on the coast had been transformed by the war into a vast naval rendezvous, with storehouse stretching half a mile prepared to re-equip an armada and send it back to sea within two hours of its arrival.

Here also were the "mother" ships ranged in long lines along the quay ready to receive back their fighting children each time they came from a raid or a battle.

Hive of Energy.

The huge establishment was vibrating with energy, and in the harbour mine sweepers were coming back from their work. Hydro-aeroplanes were manoeuvring from the docks of their craft, and black smoke from the funnels of the cruisers and destroyers told of their readiness to dash out to sea after an enemy craft.

The Arethusa and the light cruiser squadron had just returned from scouting along the German coast in search of a German fleet which was said to have ventured out from the Kiel Canal. Nothing had been seen of the German ships, and the British officers—the same who had received their stars in the famous fights under Vice Admiral Sir David Beatty— were derisive at the idea that the Germans would venture forth.

One of the officers was in command of the torpedo tubes when they fired the deadly missiles which struck the German cruiser Bluecher and sent her reeling to the bottom in the great fight of last January. He pointed out these self-same tubes and told how they had worked.

"First we let go that one," he said, "and then this one. It was this one that hit the Bluecher amidships. She was lying off there about fifteen hundred yards. The thing that impressed me after we hit her was the deathly stillness. It was terrible still until the great big ship threw up her bow, turned clean over and sank.

"Yes, this is the one that did it," and he patted this terrible death dealing engine affectionately, as though it were his child, as in truth it had been since he laid the Bluecher low.

The Arethusa Good as Ever.

Scars of battle were all over the ship, which the officers pointed to with the pride that a Heidelberg student displays when he exhibits his wounds. A deck galley amidships had been entirely shot away, a melanite shell having exploded in it. This had been rebuilt. There was one dent in the side armour as big as a wash bowl. The upper works were literally peppered with sharpnel, but the scars were now bandaged with two-inch riveted steel plates, so that the saucy Arethusa was again as good as ever.

The party now went aboard the latest type of big destroyers which are here ranged in great battalions with steam up. They are very fast some of them making thirty-seven of thirty-eight knots, and even touching forty-two knots on a measured mile, while all of them regularly do thirty-five knots on regular service.

Lying outside of them were the submarines of the D and E type, the latter being sea-going craft of great radius which are now making distant undersea voyages to the Baltic and the Dardanelles. The smaller D boats have the trim outlines of an eight-oared racing shell but the big new ocean rangers are as ugly as some submarine monster with a steel fin running fore and aft and a camel's hump amidship for a deck. One of the commanders indicated their fine qualities.

"They can stay under water for seventy-two hours," he said. "Yes, three days with out any inconvenience to the crew from lack of air. The D. boats are good for runs of twenty-four hours under water."

"During these long deep water runs they thread their way through the Skagerrak or skirt around Teneriffe and past Gibraltar with as much ease under water as though afloat.

"The direction and proximity of distance from land are all determined with mathematical accuracy, by the science of navigation, and the steering goes on as easily, under water as above."

There were many famous sea fighters among the destroyers, including the Lance, which helped to sink the Koenigin Luise off Harwich, and was in the Heligoland battle. In fact, all these ships had seen battle service unless they had just come from the yards, and the Arethusa was proud of the fact that she had gone from the ship yard into a battle.

"Yes," said one of her officers, "we got out of the yard on Saturday. We were in the fight by Wednesday and had sunk a battleship, and we were back in the yard again by the next Saturday. How is that for a record?"

SAFEGUARDED BY BRITISH FLEET

Major Putnam Says its Navy Stands Between Us and Germany.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Major George Haven Putnam, who is a veteran of the civil war, told the members of the National Shoe Retailers' Association at their dinner at the Astor hotel that the British fleet was all that saved this country from aggression.

"Are we prepared to accept the obligation of another nation's men, money and ships?" he asked.

"There is no guarantee that this fleet will always be in existence or that it will be prepared to protect us. A terrible sea battle might, if not destroy it, so disable it that it would leave us undefended.

"Bryan, the statesman who devised the scheme of paying debts by giving fifty cents on the dollar, made the statement that we could raise 1,000,000 men in time of trouble. The states man who would be guilty of sending those men against the trained army of an invading power would be guilty of murder, call him Bryan or Hoke Smith or what you will.

"The Germans are calling the Monroe Doctrine American bluff. We should be in a position not only to warn those nations who interfere with our sister republics in South America, but we should be able to use force to back our warning up. If I had been living in 1813 I should have joined the German army against French imperialism. If I were younger now I should be on the General Staff of one of the armies opposed to the Hohenzollern domination.

"We should put our house in order. The three things which we might do are; First, to give up our national ideals and the right to protect our liberities and disarm; second, to be half prepared, which is the least consistent course; or, third, actually to be prepared to defend ourselves.

Representative A. S. Krieder of Pennsylvania, President of the National Boot and Shoe Manufacturers' Association, was cheered when he said that he would not vote for war under any circumstances except to avenge the dishonoring of American citizens.

His Preference.

"If you had to work—jest nacherly had to," queried Seldum Fedd, who was a great hand to cogitate, "what kind of a job would you choose?"

"Bein' janitor in an air castle," replied Smiled Spooner, a prominent volunteer in the great army of the unemployed.

Emporia Gives Phone Concerts To Farm Homes

EMPORIA, Kas., Jan. 14.—"To make the whole country sing" is the purpose of the music department of the Kansas State Normal School at Emporia, as stated by F. A. Beach, head of that department. The plan of sending music by telephone has been tried out there for the first time.

Farmer Rinker, who lives three miles from Emporia, does not don his high collar and drive to town to hear a musical on a stormy night. Instead he dons carpet slippers and holds the telephone receiver to his ear. If his favourite instrument, the violin, does not take part, he gives the receiver to his wife and knows that he may expect the violinist some other evening or Sunday afternoon. Forty-nine other farmers or shut-ins are enjoying the same treat.

Sing Into a Megaphone.

At the other end of the line is an ordinary telephone with an extra current of thirty-six volts. The transmitter is bound tightly into the small end of a huge megaphone. Before this machine the musicians stand to play and sing. They perform as if before a crowded house. They do not need the stimulation of applause to respond with encores.

As much care is taken with the selection of these programmes as though they were for a chautauqua platform. They are well balanced and given with a view to pleasing the unseen audience and at the same time raising the standard of community music. Due regard is shown to requests sent in by patrons. A rheumatic soldier tramps without a pain as his marching tunes swing through the receiver.

Music Boxes Loaned.

This normal school is not contented with sending music twenty miles by telephone; it employs the parcel post and covers the entire state of Kansas. The music department owns several music boxes, which it sends out to the rural and grade schools of Kansas.

The machine and accompanying records are sent to a school for a week or ten days, and at the end of that time are forwarded to the next station. School teachers with limited equipment throughout the state send in requests for a bo to use for an entertainment or to teach a new song. These requests cannot all be granted because of the few boxes.

The musical mixer is another feature of the music extension. Every Monday night normal students meet in the auditorium to sing old time melodies and school songs. Nearby towns are sending calls to Emporia asking Mr. Beach or his assistants to come and organize music mixers in their towns. "It is worth much more to have the whole community singing 'Love's Old Sweet Song' than to have it produce several artists," says Mr. Beach.

Produce the Oratorios.

The Eisteddodd, a musical contest between Kansas high schools, is held every year at the Kansas State Normal music festival. Five hundred dollars in prizes is awarded for chorus and individual work. Twenty high schools from all the state competed last year.

Not a week goes by at the Kansas Normal without one or more musical recitals. Three hundred students are preparing the oratorio, "The Messiah," for the music festival to be held in the spring. A small number will give the opera "Mikado." Their symphony orchestra has twenty-five pieces. Thirty boys and forty girls sings in the glee clubs. Two hundred students are enrolled in the music department.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lumsden Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

Chicago is now the greatest horse market in the world. More than 100,000 horses have been sold for $12,000,000 through the local market in the last six months. The European war's demand for artillery and cavalry mounts is responsible for this result.

A CHILD HATES OIL, CALOMEL, PILLS FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Give "California Syrup of Figs" If Cross, Sick, Feverish, Constipated

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on—castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do. The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown ups plainly on each bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. See that it is made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

Gambling Devices Were Confiscated

Twenty-Three Cigar Stores and Restaurant Proprietors Summoned

MONTREAL, Jan. 14.—Twenty-three proprietors of cigar stores and restaurants were summoned to appear in the arraignment court to answer to charges of having gambling devices upon their premises. The device in question is the 'Punch board,' which, in various forms, has been common to cigar stores, etc., for years.

Detectives Lajoie and Crowthers visited many stores and made twenty three cases, confiscating the boards as evidence.

The detectives estimate that there are some two thousand of these boards in operation in the city, this meaning a business involving some $160,000 in punch boards. Of this $160,000, the playing public gets $40,000 in gold pieces, another $10,000 worth of "gold" knives, while the agents for the boards and the merchants in whose places the boards are operated split the remaining $110,000.

Doctor Said Sciatica--- Rheumatism--Lumbago

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 106 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to see me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

There are so many treatments recommended for rheumatism that you naturally doubt them all. Here is an opportunity for you to verify the cure and put this great medicine to the test. It will only cost you a quarter to try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They get at the very foundation of rheumatism, and by removing the poisons from the system take away the cause of pains and aches.

THE RUSSIANS ARE RENEWING THEIR OFFENSIVE IN CZENOWITZ DISTRICT

Vienna Says That All Attacks Were Repulsed But Admits That Austrians Lost Heavily---500 Canadian Casualties Reported From Recent Fighting in France, Mostly Among Western Battalions.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

VIENNA, Jan. 15.—An Austrian War Office statement declares that the Russians made five heavy attacks in Bessarabia, and that all have failed. It is admitted that they made heavy casualties among the Austrians, but say that five thousand Russians were captured.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Prince Henry of Prussia has been summoned to Berlin. It is also announced, says the despatch, that Emperor Wilhelm's birthday festivities for January 27 have been cancelled.

Prince Henry of Prussia is a brother of the German Emperor, and the inference probably intended in a News Despatch is that he is summoned to Berlin in connection with the illness of Emperor William.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The British steamers Argus and Larchwood collided in the Bristol Channel to-day, and several persons were drowned. The Argus has landed some of the Larchwood's survivors.

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—The German Government to-day rejected the suggestion made by Sir Edward Grey, British Foreign Minister, that the Baralong case, in which the officers of the British steamer are accused of murdering the German submarine crew, be submitted to investigation by a Court of American naval officers.

The War Office to-day reported a renewal of the Russian offensive around Czernowitz.

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—Kaiser Wilhelm addressed a manifesto to the German people to-day, asking them to celebrate his birthday on Jan. 27 with quiet thoughts and prayers.

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., Jan. 15.—Admiral Sir Hedworth Meux was to-day elected to succeed Lord Charles Beresford in the House of Commons, Beresford having been elevated recently to the House of Lords.

TORONTO, Jan. 15.—A cable received here to-day states that there have been more than five hundred Canadians killed or wounded in the recent fighting in France, mostly among the Western battalions.

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 15.—One man was killed, three were fatally injured, twelve were seriously burned by an explosion on board the submarine E2 in the dry dock at Brooklyn Navy Yards to-day.

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 15.—Despite her angry protests, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst was sent to the Ellis Island Immigration Station upon her arrival here from London to-day. The same action was taken by the immigration officials here on Mrs. Pankhurst's last visit to America. She was detained, but subsequently allowed to land.

THE HAGUE, Jan. 15.—The Ford Peace Expedition came to an end to-day. American delegates rushed madly about packing trunks and making final sight-seeing jaunts, preparatory to their departure for America aboard the liner Rotterdam to-night.

Several of the Ford lieutenants are remaining in Holland to help start the permanent Peace Tribunal on its way.

The Schwimmer and anti-Schwimmer factions are engaged in a fierce fight over the positions on this tribunal.

THE BALANCE IS SWINGING TO THE SIDE OF ALLIES

Russian Offensive in Bukowina Is Being Vigorously Pursued and Will Bring Roumania in With Allies

THE ENGLISH SITUATION

By T. P. O'Connor.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Steadily if slowly, the balance of military advantages continues to swing to the side of the Allies. The long stalemate on the Eastern front is now definitely ended. The Russians, thanks to the supplys of munitions flowing in from Japan and America, are pushing forward vigorously in Bukowina.

The Austro-Germans have gathered in great force to repel the advance but are steadily being pushed back. The fighting is extremely fierce, as is to be expected considering the great stake involved in these conflicts.

If the drive ends successfully for Russia, Roumania will probably at last take side with the Allies, which it turn would profoundly affect Greece. The fear of this finds expression in the German press and is also evidenced by the frantic activity of the German agents.

There has also been severe fighting in the Champagne districts and in Alsace where German attacks have been defeated with heavy losses to the enemy.

On the other side of the account stands the Austrian capture of the Adriatic fortress of Lovchen from the little army of the Montenegrin government. This is purely a local success which the Austrians must quickly surrender as the Allies' offensive progresses on the main fronts.

Even the taciturn Gen. Joffre this week allows himself to voice the daily increasing confidence of the Allies in an interview wherein he declares that he has indisputable evidence that Germany's exhaustion has already begun.

The domestic situation in England is developing as we prophesied last week. There is no more conclusive evidence of the unity and the iron determination of the nation than the way in which the compulsion bill, so abhorrent to all British tradition, has been received.

"YOUR KING AND COUNTRY NEED YOU"

ENLIST NOW IN THE 93rd

TO MY FELLOW-CITIZENS:

Our City! How the mind goes back to the day of small things when the forest was wide and the clearing was narrow! The City grew; the forest disappeared; streets were laid; houses, factories, public buildings appeared. That story is soon told, but that is not all the story. Behind the city visible is the manhood and the womanhood that created it; the faith that achieved; the minds that planned; the strength that executed and the courage that endured.

* * * *

Other men laboured; we have entered into their labours; we have inherited their tasks. They meant their city—ours now—to make a worthy contribution to the life of Canada; to carry its share of the common burden; to add its quota to the common success.

* * * *

The tasks of this hour are not less than those our fathers faced. Shall we not meet our tasks with their heroism and more?

* * * *

Every city has its leaders, the men and women who dominate its life; mould is thought; furnish its ideals and shape its efforts.

* * * *

The decision of the Government of Canada, fully informed of the Empire's need, to call 500,000 Canadians to arms and the inadequate response to date challenges the leadership of this City.

* * * *

The decision to call for 500 recruits in three days is in itself an answer to the challenge. It stands out as the most daring civic enterprise in which the moral forces of faith, hope and courage ever entered the lists in this City against ease, indifference and selfishness. The appeal is to those nobler elements in the human heart which alone can keep our cheeks from shame and our cause from disaster.

LOCAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN TO AID RECRUITING

Patriotic Meeting To Be Held in the Opera House on Wednesday Evening Next Will Be Addressed by Mrs. Huestis, of Toronto

A BIG GATHERING

On account of the great importance of the recruiting campaign of next week, the leaders have asked that the activities of other societies be set aside in order that undivided attention be given to this all-important work.

The Council of Women had already planned to hold their annual meeting on Friday evening of next week, with Mrs. A. M. Huestis of Toronto, as the principal speaker, but in consideration of the above request, the sub-executive decided to make Mrs. Huestis' meeting a purely patriotic one, and to contribute it to the recruiting campaign.

It was found necessary also to change the evening from Friday, 21st, to Wednesday 19th.

Through the very great kindness of Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., the meeting will be held in the Opera House, and it is hoped that every seat will be filled.

Capt. Burnham has received the following letters:

Dear Sir,—Your favour of the 13th re recruiting for the 93rd Battalion to full strength received; and in reply beg to say, that I am and always will do all in my power to encourage the enlisting of recruits. We have now in Norwood quite a nice number.

I will bring the matter up before our council at the next meeting, asking for their co-operation in the matter. Wishing you and the other officers of the 93rd continued success, I am,

Yours sincerely,
S. W. Squire.

My Dear Burnham—In reply to your letter of the 11th instant re the mass meeting to be held in the armouries of the city of Peterborough on January 22nd at 2 p.m., in the interests of recruiting. I will see that the matter is announced from the pulpits on Sunday in the east as you suggest, and will do everything I can to encourage the enlisting throughout the country.

Sincerely yours,
J. A. Boxsmith.

Speakers' Patriotic League

Special business will be discussed by the Speakers' Patriotic League at a general meeting to be held to-night at 8 o'clock in the recruiting rooms, Simcoe street. It is most important to have a large attendance in order to carry on the work necessary for recruiting purposes.

Will Do His Best To Get Recruits in Smith

Mr. McKee, reeve of Smith, states that he and his Council will do all in their power to get recruits in the Township of Smith, for the 93rd Battalion.

Dominion Cafe Is Properly Conducted

Sanitary Inspector Spence Makes a Statement Regarding Dominion Cafe

Mr. Spence when interviewed regarding the Chinese restaurants stated that he was mis-reported in an evening contemporary regarding his statement concerning the Dominion Cafe, o George Street, that he had been complaining about the employees sleeping in the rooms adjoining the kitchen and the dining-room. This is not the case, because the employees have rooms on Simcoe Street where they sleep, but the ventilation was not up to the mark in the kitchen of the Dominion Cafe.

Mr. Spence further stated that he did not state that there was any question of the morality of this restaurant, and the report apparently in an evening paper was in error concerning this.

There are certain alterations which he desires to have in the kitchens of most of the restaurants in this city, and they are better light and better ventilation, and he is also inclined to recommend the removal of all the stalls in the restaurants.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, JAN. 15, 1916

THE LIFE OF PARLIAMENT.

The question is now settled; and we can now settle down to work. After two years of pondering; after two years of thinking, Premier Borden has at last discovered the necessity of avoiding "the distraction and confusion consequent upon a general election at so critical a time." In the speech from the throne, this is declared, and we have, for the first time in two years, the official assurance that the activities of the Canadian people in prosecuting their share of the war, will not be hindered by the interjection of the comparative political frivolities of a general election. Premier Borden has done well to screw his courage to the sticking point in this matter. He has been urged and besought to make a similar declaration any time the past two years, so that the people would settle down to their real work in this crisis—to the war work which should, primarily, absorb our attention and unfold our energies. Twice since the war began the threat of "the distraction and confusion of a general election" has been held over the country. A bill was actually brought in to provide for taking the votes of soldiers in the trenches and the ballots shipped across the Atlantic. But public opinion, based on common sense, was too strong against a war-time election, and the matter has been a subject of uncertainty and division of national force so far as war co-operation was concerned.

Sir Robert Borden has taken a decision that he could better have taken eighteen months ago. He has officially declared that there shall be no war-time election; he has officially declared that such an election would lead to "distraction and confusion." If he had sooner come to this decision and made the declaration the interests of the war would have been promoted. Partizanship, instead of resting in a state of armed neutrality would have been cooperating with better results than have attended the period of uncertainty as to the political situation. So long as there was danger, or even possibility, of a contest, both parties were bound to maintain a certain state of readiness for a conflict. This, naturally, distracted attention and diverted efforts from the united work of helping wage war.

A war-time election is avoided by the simple expedient of prolonging the term of parliament for the period of one year. This is what is proposed in the speech from the throne, and is in line virtually with what the Examiner has advocated—an extension of parliament from session to session so long as the war lasts. This would be a constitutionally correct way of averting the calamity of a war-time election. If it is understood that the extension is to be strictly and definitely limited, the chief objection is removed. An indefinite and unlimited extension of the life of parliament would be unthinkable. It would take the question of popular representation out of the hands of the people to whom it solely belongs. This is in keping with the democratic spirit of our system of government. The question involves no partisan feeling. The Montreal Star, a staunch Conservative journal, pleads for distinct limitation of the term of extension—for the Canadian people "keeping the reins tightly in their own hands." The Star says:

The extension of the Parliamentary term should be for a fixed and definite period. That is the present British practice. It is also in harmony with the British constitutional principle of keeping Parliament under the hand of the sovereign people. The present term—which closes next autumn—could be extended for six months or a year, which would give Parliament time to meet again and extend it still further, if that unhappily be necessary. What we want to do is to avoid a war-election—not to enable any group of politicians to defy public opinion, war or no war. The Canadian people, therefore, should keep the reins tightly in their own hands.

We are fighting in this great war for the triumph of the principles of democratic government—the form of government that insures the people not only liberty, but the right to define the terms and control the conditions upon what their liberty shall be enjoyed and preserved. We should be denying and destroying all this if we placed it in the power of any government to work its will in this matter—to decide without reference to the people how long they should retain power—without the direct mandate of the people. We must keep the government and parliament of Canada under the direct control of the people. By that we shall have constitutional government of the British brand; without that we shall have Kaiserism—government action independent of the will of the governed.

The Balance Is Swinging, etc.

Mr. Asquith's personal assurance of its necessity and the extraordinarily clever handling of the situation, has reduced Parliamentary opposition to insignificant proportions. The Irish constituted the majority of the opponents at the first reading but, having regard for the smallness of the opposition of the British members, have decided not to interfere further in a purely British matter since Ireland has been excluded from the scope of the measure.

Some important labor organizations are still hostile to the passage of the act but it is expected that most of them will be appeased by the assurances that nothing in the nature of industrial compulsion is contemplated. The readiness wherewith the differences on this hitherto burning question have been sunk so as to strengthen the Government's hands and present a united front to the enemy is indeed astonishing and has already produced a remarkable impression on both the Allies and their enemies.

It is impossible to say whether his tremendous success as organizer of the new recruiting movement will take Lord Derby. He himself, with his characteristic bluntness, long ago proclaimed to the public what his ambitions were; one was to win the Derby, the other to be Lord Mayor of Liverpool and the third to be Prime Minister. He did not, in announcing these ambitions, contemplate being the first recruiting sergeant of his country, as the war was still a remote and apparently impossible event. If his final ambition has a chance of realization at any time, the chance is perhaps greatest at this particular speech. The reason I make this statement is not merely because of his recent triumph, but because of the singular and complicated condition of our Parliamentary politics. We have now got to the point when it is very difficult to say what will happen from week to week, or it may be said from day to day even. Though the certainty of the final victory remains as strong as ever among the British people, there are of course moods of pessimism when things go as wrong as they have done in the Balkans and elsewhere. And during these moods anything may happen, and any man may be rushed to the front.

Lord Derby, like all his family, comes from Lancashire. The family have been great land-owners all through their career, and the evolution of England from an agricultural to a manufacturing country has added value every year to their position. A notable example of this is the growth of the town of Bootle. Some years ago it was merely a wet shore to the tumultuous river Mersey; then the growth of manufactures of shipping and docks transformed the Mersey into a great industrial centre; and the Derby family, instead of possessing a valuable piece of land, became the ground landlords of a flourishing town. Similar things have happened in other cities of Lancashire, Bury for example—with the result that the present Lord Derby is one of the richest men of the country.

He retains, however, in spite of his great wealth, that easy-going popular, even democratic kind of temperament and demeanour, which are characteristic of everybody in Lancashire; for Lancashire is the place where, up to quite recently at least, the workmen were accustomed to address their wealthy employers as "thou" and by their Christian names. Of good height, of stout, well-proportioned figure, with a full round face, rosy cheeks, bright eyes and a winning smile, Lord Derby can meet every man in Lancashire from the humblest to the highest with same ease, and speak to each in his own tongue.

Lord Derby has followed the usual course of the great aristocrat in England by being a keen sportsman, and his horses appear in every great race; and although he is not a betting man, he can always tell the odds and is always ready to convey the useful information to his friends. We have a few sporting members in the Irish Party, and they were always among the intimates of Lord Derby and always ready, and often very profitably, to follow his well-informed tips. Thus Lord Derby is that peculiar combination, an aristocrat proud of his descent for generations from the historic families, that have given a Premier and all the highest officials to the country, yet at the same time a thorough Democrat, at home with everybody.

Lancashire has a large number of seats, and to a large extent is a pivotal county in general elections, for its political allegiance is in most of the towns quite uncertain—unlike the other great county Yorkshire, where the trend is steady—and the result of it is that Lord Derby is now the greatest voice in Lancashire, and has more to say than perhaps any man in the result of a general election and as a result, of a new House of Commons. Lord Derby is businesslike and intelligent rather than intellectual; can make a blunt rather than a discreet sentence. What with wealth, good health, keen ambition and his essentially hail-fellow-well-met manner, it cannot yet be declared that he will not be Prime Minister as was his grandfather, the greatest of the family in modern times.

Big Gun Blundering of The German Navalists

One of the remarkable things about the war is the manner in which it shattered almost at a blow the German authorities' belief in the superiority of the German naval gun. For many years learned theorists had speculated upon the rival merits of the British method of gun-making and the German method. A few shots fired in actual war disposed of the whole problem, and disclosed the overwhelming superiority of the British weapon.

The British naval gun is manufactured on what is known as the wire-wound system; the German on the jacket and hoop method. Both have this in common, that the gun is composed of a number of tubes shrunk tightly on each other. But the British armament-makers also gird the inner tubes with strands of steel ribbon or wire, wound at enormous pressure, the object being to strengthen the tubes circumfletically to give them an elasticity and resilent background on which to absorb the tremendous concussion which shivers the gun when the explosion occurs. On a 15-inch weapon as much as 170 miles of wire is wound round the inner tubes at varying tensions, the maximum being about 50 tons. The Germans trust exclusively to the superiority of their steel, its purity, and homogenity, and they build their guns up only with a series of tubes and hoops.

The German naval authorities and the Krupp experts never ceased proclaiming the superiority of the German gun. They asserted that the British gun dropped at the muzzle after being fired a certain number of times, and produced elaborate statistics to prove that their 12-inch gun had an efficiency of 50.59 ft. lb. against 31.10 accredited to the British weapon. They also figured out that the "life" of a 13.5 inch British weapon, such as many of our best Dreadnoughts are armed with, only allowed of the firing of 60 rounds, whereas their own weapons were stated to be good for 220 rounds. The British authorities made no reply in the way of statistics to show that the Germans were wrong, and were quite content to allow to go unchallenged the German taunt that Britain had been duped by her great armament firms, who, on account of the extensive and costly plant involved, declined to abandon the inferior and obsolete wire-wound guns.

One consequence of the cock-sureness of the Germans in the incomparable superiority of their weapons was that they adhered to a very recent date to the 11-inch weapons, while the British had advanced to a 13.5. The result was that when war was declared no German Dreadnought had been completed which carried a gun larger than 12-inch. Our smallest main Dreadnought weapon, on the other hand, was of this calibre, and we had many which mounted 13.5; while soon after the war we introduced the still more formidable 15-inch weapon—the best gun, as Mr. Churchill said, the Navy ever had. Ship for ship, the British Navy accordingly possesses an immense advantage over its German rival in the size of its guns—we leave the Germans to claim any superiority they please in "efficiency figures." But that is not all. The Germans omitted to take cognizance of the fact that, independent of efficiency figures, the larger calibred gun discharges an enormously increased size of projectile, and an enormously increased projectile means a correspondingly increased weight of high explosive inside. The 15inch projectile, which weighs 750 lbs., contains about 80 lbs. of high explosive, which burst on contact with a ship. The 13.5 projectile weighs 1,400 lbs., and contains double the high explosive of the 12-inch, while the 15-inch projectile is of 1,930 lbs. weight, and the explosive of correspondingly increased proportion. The consequence of the German blunder in persistently adhering to the smaller-sized gun is that every projectile from a British warship has the potentiality of inflicting much greater damage amongst men or machinery internally, in virtue of a greatly increased "bursting charge" of explosive.

The longer range of the British guns and the vastly superior bursting charges of the shells, proved to the Germans, in the first encounter they had with Britain's latest battleships, that their jacket-hoop naval guns are obsolete. Never was there such a fiasco as the attempt of Germany to establish herself as a world-power, and then to find out, only after she had thrown down the gauntlet, that her Navy, "the second most powerful in the world," was absolete. That is why the ships built to challenge Britain's supremacy are relegated—the majority of them even without a trial in war—to the contemptuous duty of guarding a canal.

PRIVATE ROGERS SAYS HE IS ENJOYING HIMSELF

Rained on Christmas But Had Plum Pudding in Third Trench

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Rogers, Byersville, have received the following letter from their son, Private J. H. Rogers of the 21st Battalion, in Belgium, written on Christmas Day:

Dear Mother and Father,—I am glad to let you know that I am fine, hoping all at home are the same. It is Christmas Day and we are in the 3rd line trenches, but expect to have some plum pudding for dinner just the same. I just received some cigarettes from the Overseas Club or the Pollyanna Club, 568 George street. Well, its raining the same as ever. The war hangs on but we don't hear much about it except what we see on our own lines. There was a big battle—and they gassed us, but the wind changed and they got it all and our artillery blew them to pieces. Such is the western front, and I think the war will end here too. Well Mother the Germans aren't shaking hands this Christmas. They're getting it where the chicken got the axe. I hope you are having a good time at home, as I am enjoying myself, so don't worry about me. I wrote a letter two days ago and haven't much news for you this time, so Good-bye.

THE WEATHER

The temperature this morning at 7 o'clock was just zero. During the night, however, it had been down to 5 degrees below.

ROOSTER KILLS BABY BOY WITH STAB OF ITS SPURS

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Jan. 14—John M. Seaman, 2 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Seaman of this city, is dead at Ontario, following an attack by a large rooster at the ranch of the child's grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. V. Lawrence of that city.

John and his mother visited at the ranch. The chickens were a novelty to the boy and he was anxious to feed them. With prodigious bravery that was though only childishly cute he accomplished his desire. A few days ago he was so engaged when a large rooster jumped at the little fellow and buried its spurs deeply in his scalp.

Blood poisoning developed and the child died in a hospital after much suffering.

GALLANT LITTLE SERVIA

A Resume of Events Which Led Up to The Invasion of Servia, When Germany Crushed Another Little Land—A Nation Retreats to the Mountains.

Written for the Examiner by Frank Russell

PART TWO

(Continuation of article from Thursday's issue.)

Hungary Annexed Her

until her domination came to an end in June, 1389, when, in the battle of Kossovo, Servia fell to the Turks and became one of the Turkish provinces.

And Then Turkey.

Under the Turkish yoke Servia groaned mutinously until, in the beginning of the nineteenth century, "Black George" arose and endeavoured to release her from her tyrants, an endeavour which was partly successful, as Turkey allowed her semi-independence. The dream of Servia has always been to make that semi-state of independence complete, to link herself up with the other Balkan states, and so become the centre of a great Slavonic dominion.

Austria Was Afraid

of that dream of Servia. That a "race of little pig-keepers," as she called the Servians—pig-keeping being their main industry—should become an Empire, and, by such means, impose invisible barriers—barriers on the spread of Germanism—would never do. Accordingly, when some forty years ago Servia found herself independent under King Milan, she also found that in the hour of what she thought was her triumph, she was to receive a bitter check.

Austria Had Secretly Arranged

with Germany, Russia's great neighbour, that Bosnia and Herzegovina were to be the price of Austria's neutrality. These two provinces were accordingly placed under the protection of Austria, while Belgrade, the capital of Servia, became the battleground of Russian and Austrian diplomacy, and unluckily, King Milan, in the belief that he was serving his country, made friends with the latter.

His People Did Not Agree With Him.

The country was absolutely overrun with revolutions, until at last the King, throwing down his crown in despair, let it pass into the keeping of his sixteen-year-old son Alexander, who made an unfortunate marriage. The scandal caused by this mes-alliance was to some extent covered by the presence of the Emperor of Russia as principal guest at the ceremony, who by this means won over the boy king to the Russian side. But this action also set against the little nation once more; whilst the marriage so enraged the King's Ministers against their King Alexander and Queen Draga, that a conspiracy was formed, and in 1902 both of these sovereigns were foully murdered; so foully so that all Europe joined in protest, and for some years Servia was put under the bann.

Austrian Influence and Austrian Gold

* * * * *

I have said enough, I think, to show that though this peasant population are given to agriculture, beekeeping, and cattle-rearing, yet the political and military history of Servia has been a hard and stormy one, there being a constant quarrelling with her neighbours, ever fretting to get Bosnia and Herzegovina away from Austrian protection, nothwithstanding the fact that that protection had brought in order, law, and industry.

Good, Peaceable, Industrious Folk,

Religion, as is often the case, played the chief part in their complaint against their overlord. It was said that the Austrian authorities treated the Greek Orthodox Church and the Moslems with great injustice; that there was too much espionage; too much police supervision. At last the Bosnians begged for a European commission to investigate matters, and at once Austria showed her teeth by annexing the two provinces.

Servia Was Furious;

her dream seemed to be farther away than ever, and her capital, Belgrade, became the centre of an anti-Austrian campaign. She strengthened her armies, turned against her old ally, Bulgaria, and, to everybody's surprise and astonishment, defeated her.

Austria viewed all this with impatience and uneasiness. The little pig-keepers were becoming too strong for her liking; something must be done. And so the crime of a fanatic youth furnished the pretext she was on the lookout for, and just a month after that fateful Sunday, June 28th, when the Archduke was murdered, she declared war on Servia, and

The Torch Was Lit.

Then it was that this brave little industrious nation had four other nations attacking her simultaneously—

Four Nations Against One Little Peasant People.

There has been the great betrayer, Ferdinand of Bulgaria, supported in the rear by the Turks, fresh from slaying 800,000 Armenians, and now advancing with a powerful army from the East. The Germans and the Austrians with enormous gun-power broke in from north to south and from east to west.

As if that were not bad enough, they set going bands of Albanians, maddened by sheer blood-lust and passion for booty, to work in from the south-west. Only the south remained partly open. Then the Allied forces operating in circumstances of grave peril owing to were striving to bring relief to the little plucky Servian army. War has no parallel to this situation. The Servians had to lose their ancient capital, Belgrade; their war capital, Nish; their great military headquarters and arsenal, Kraguievatz; and at last fighting all the way.

Retire Into the Mountains,

With the army went the nation. Old men and maidens, young women and children, all have had to abandon their homes and join in the retreat of the army. They dared not remain behind! Three times had they experienced their land being invaded by the Austrians; on each occasion had they suffered tortures too terrible to describe, and a repetition of such acts could not be endured. They knew that their enemies were bent not merely on conquering them, but on nothing short of exterminating them—

Blotting Them Out of the Land of the Living,

just as the Turks had blotted out the Armenians.

So these poor folk have gone forth, homeless and starving, following the line of the military retirement. There was but little area of safety for them to seek; Bulgaria faced them on the east; on the north and west were the Germans and Austrians; to the south-west were the wild Albanians; only treacherous Greece to the south; and the barren principality of Montenegro to the west.

Over a Million Fugitives,

it is recorded, have been on this frightful march, in the bitter weather, without shelter, amid the snows and rains and mists of the inhospitable mountains. Montenegro (the Black Mountain) was their only hope.

Old men and boys and even

Women and Girls Have Been Fighting in the Trenches, joining the soldiers there, preferring death in their nation's cause to the massacre they well knew would follow their surrender. Many have been captured; soldiers whose ammunition was exhausted, or who have had to hold the pass while the main body retreated, and civilians caught upon the route.

Hundreds Dying Daily.

From the latest cable despatches up to the moment of this article going to press, we learn that thousands of Servians, largely women and children, are dying from sheer starvation and the rigors of cold; at the rate of hundreds daily. Ach Gott! What will not the self-styled Lord's Anointed of Potsdam have to answer for when arraigned before his "partner's" dread tribunal? Is he likely to get off clear because he has made a brag of, "Ich und Gott"? I trow not!

* * * * *

The Servians Have Lost More Than Half Their Army.

Let us now see how the Serbian Army has fared. Badly enough, poor gallant, brave fellows! When the Teutonic offensive began, the Servians had four armies of 75,000 men each. The First Servian Army, under General Misitsch lost 15,000 men, who were taken prisonets, and 200 cannon. In killed and wounded, General Misitch lost 8,000 men. This was only in the first two weeks, and since then his losses have been 40,000 men killed and wounded. Many of his men are known to have discarded their uniforms at an opportune moment and returned to their homes.

The Second Servian Army, commanded by General Bojeurtsch, suffered even heavier losses, as this force was attacked simultaneously on three sides. In November this general lost 50,000 men killed, wounded, and prisoners.

The Third Servian Army, under General Stepanowitsch, lost most of its guns, but the losses in men were only 35,000.

The Fourth Servian Army, which was hastily mobilized after the beginning of the offensive, and was commanded by General Kristisch, did not lose so many men, as it was not in many engagements.

The whole Servian Army now has from 120,000 to 150,000 men, scarcely half of the original army, and a large number of these are unfit for any further campaign owing to the lack of guns and ammunition.

* * * * *

We do not yet know the horrors of the full story, but our souls sicken, as well as the hearts of those who love a brave little land, and are taxed beyond endurance. What will be the future of

POOR SERVIA?

GERMANY BARS FOREIGNERS FROM BELGIUM AND TIGHTENS RULES ON AMERICAN PASSPORTS

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—That the German Government is not encouraging foreigners to go into Belgium or other enemy territory, occupied by German forces, was emphasized in a note just delivered to Secretary Lansing by Count von Bernstorff, telling of new regulations of the German Empire for the issue and vise of passports to be used in German territory. These regulations permit German diplomatic and Consular representatives to approve passports, only for admission into territory of the German Empire, and not for admission to enemy territory, occupied by German forces or to any other State.

The regulations are very rigid. They require all Americans who wish to enter Germany, and who have passports, to present their birth certificates or naturalization papers, with the passports. It was under these regulations that the German Consulate in Vienna two weeks ago refused to vise passports of Americans desiring to go from Vienna through Germany to Holland, when they wanted to return to the United States Ambassadors Penfield and Gerard have been endeavoring to obtain a concession for these Americans through the good offices of the German Ambassador at Vienna and by direct appeal to the German Foreign Office, but without success.

"That passport must specify whether the journey is to be made to Germany or across German territory.

"That American citizens applying to have their passports vised for use in Germany should produce their certificates of naturalization, if they are of foreign birth, or their certificates of birth, if they are native Americans. In case the bearer of a passport was a native of a country now at war with Germany or of Italy, the vise is only granted after special permission has been given by the German Government. This rule applies also to women who before marriage were citizens of a country now at war with Germany or of Italy.

"That passport will be vised for travel to Germany only if the reasons for the trips are unobjectionable and necessary. In the case of trips desired for business purposes, German representatives are required to ascertain whether the objeet could be achieved through correspondence and visits to relatives or friends are permitted only in the case of urgent necessity. The necessity of the trip is to be explained by the applicant for the vise.

"That passport will be vised by German representatives for admission to the territory of the empire only, and not for admission to enemy territory occupied by German forces, nor for admission to any other State.

"That a passport to be used for admission to Germany must be specially vised for every trip across the German border. The applicant for such vise will be carefully examined by the German officials before the vise must be made in person, and the German representatives are required to see that the photograph on the passport is that of the bearer and that the passport agrees with the facts. Only in exceptional cases can the appearance of the bearer when applying for the vise be dispensed with."

Say Persia's Boiler May Have Blown Up

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The possibility that the British liner Persia, which sank in five minutes, with heavy loss of life, forty miles southeast of Crete on Dec. 18, may have been sunk by an internal explosion rather than by torpedo attack, is being considered in official affidavits of survivors. These affidavits are now coming into the State Department from the American Consuls at Malta and Alexandria, who obtained sworn statements from survivors on their arrival at those places.

The internal explosion theory is based on assertions that the explosion was accompanied by much steam and smoke, which rushed into the dining saloon and other parts of the vessel While there is no positive evidence that the Persia was destroyed by a boiler explosion, there is just as much evidence in favor of this theory as there is in support of the presumption that the vessel was destroyed by a submarine.

One of the Affidavits which might be regarded as indicating that there had been a boiler explosion was that of Charles H. Grant of Boston, manager of the Vacuum Oil Company of Calcutta, the only American survivor of the tragedy. He said he was in the dining saloon of the Persia when the explosion occurred, and that the saloon was instantly filled with smoke, broken glass, and steam from the boiler, which appeared to have burst.

Lord Montagu, another survivor, is credited with the statement that "all our passengers were enjoying tiffin when a big explosion occurred on our port side abreast of the forward engine room." Other survivors speak of the explosion occurring abreast of the engine room.

None of the survivors is credited with having seen a submarine. Second Officer Bromley said he saw what he thought was the track of a torpedo. But none of the officers on the look out for U-boats saw any trace of one. The presence of smoke and steam in the dining room in connection with the explosion is regarded by naval experts here as meaning that there was a boiler explosion.

However, it is possible that a torpedo may have struck the engine room and exploded the boiler, thus accounting for the presence of steam and smoke. High officials of the Government to-day asserted that the State Department was without any legal evidence of the cause of the sinking of the Persia.

"We do not know," said a prominent official, "whether it was caused by a submarine attack, by a mine or by an internal explosion.

The Cabinet was in session more than two hours to-day, and it was understood that the submarine question, including the Lusitania case, was discussed. President Wilson and Secretary Lansing are awaiting word from Berlin on the Lusitania settlement. They expect the case will be closed within the next week.

Extension of German and Austrian assurances regarding submarine warfare in the Mediterranean to their Allies is still under consideration, but it was said to-day that no definite steps had been taken.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyses the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or side headaches, dizziness, your stomach sours, or is bad you have rheumatic twinges. or is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralise the acids in the urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

WHERE THE SHOE PINCHES

THIS man KNOWS where the shoe pinches, and he lays the blame on no one but HIMSELF. "I should have KNOWN better." This is the kind of reform that counts. Most people busy themselves trying to reform OTHER people. They think things would be just a little better if somebody ELSE did just a little different. But where the shoe pinches is probably with yourSELF, with MYself, with OURselves. When we get to the point of KNOWING this and acknowledging it, THEN we have made a start. Let's try this line of reasoning tackling our Community problems. Where does the SHOE PINCH? "Am I doing anything that is keeping BACK the growth of my community?" "Am I leaving anything UNDONE to advance the growth?" With THIS spirit we CAN co-operate. Co-operation wins every time.

25 CENTS DESTROYS YOUR DANDRUFF AND STOPS FALLING HAIR

Save Your Hair! Make It Thick, Wavy and Beautiful—Try This!

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, lustre and luxurience which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy and have the appearance of abundance, an incomparable gloss and softness; but what will please you most will be after just a few week's use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp.

Honour and Credit of Our City and County At Stake

Hon. Major Davidson Brings Question Before the Citizens of Filling Up the Ranks of the 93rd Battalion Next Week ---Appeals For a National Enthusiasm.

Peterborough, Ont.,
January 15th, 1916.

To the Editor, The "Examiner":

Dear Sir,—This would seem to be a time when every expression of opinion and interest in regard to the duty of the hour may have some value, and I am impelled to offer my small contribution towards the very difficult enterprise before us all as citizens of the City and County of Peterborough.

First, it is encouraging that under the leadership of Mr. Colthard, Capt. Burnham and others we have emerged from the deadly atmosphere of unreasoning satisfaction with the progress of recruiting and are waking up to a recognition of the actual needs of the situation and the importance of taking some strong and united action to meet them.

We seem to be agreed as to the necessity of arousing National enthusiasm, as the atmosphere in which are done deeds of national self-sacrifice, as enlisting is to most men, and especially to those who now remain as recruiting possibilities.

This stimulating of our community generally to a sense of the Patriotism, heroism and self-sacrifice, so loudly demanded to-day is, to my mind, the most proper and effective way in which we can carry out our object, though I do not undervalue other and more direct means which may also be necessary.

To this end, would it not be advisable to try to secure that on the three campaign days our city should be radiant with the flag of the Empire floating from as many public and private buildings as possible, that citizens should wear their colours and that National airs should be played by bands and sung in our schools and elsewhere? Let the Country's call be strikingly both heard and seen.

Coming from the general to the particular. The matter of enlistment is so very complicated and difficult to most men that we cannot wonder at them hesitating before making the plunge, but when this is once made, many of us can testify that it is a case of plain sailing and restful satisfaction.

All workers will remember, especially at this time, that suggestions of too direct a nature and personal appeals are apt to be resented. This work can and must be carried through without hurting or antagonizing those who in many cases deserve our sincere sympathy. The position of a young, unenlisted man is, to-day, not an easy one and many are painfully refusing to go after thoughtful consideration impelled by conscientious motives which all should respect.

Our young men need not, then, be apprehensive. They can rest assured that there will be no inclination to "rub it in," but simply to bring forward a great public issue for consideration and action only where this is possible and right—Ours it is to give expression to the fact that Peterborough calls upon all her sons who can to rally to the colours and is prepared to honour those who respond. And credit and high honour will be given, not so much to some of us who as officers have privileged (though also responsible) positions, as to young men with good education and positions who come nobly forward to fill up the ranks—the thing which is now needed. Field, Dean, Grahame, the Wallis boys and others have led the way in this regard. Who will follow their splendid example? It should be understood that every facility is offered to friends and chums to live and keep together.

The honour and credit of our City and County are certainly at stake today. Shall Peterborough fail to raise this Battalion, stamped all over with her name and identified with her in almost every particular? Shall the 93rd lose its number and identity and have to be absorbed in a composite regiment gathered from two or more unsuccessful Counties? Or again, shall we manage to fill up the Battalion only at the last moment with undrilled men and have to be held here indefinitely for further training? Let us with confidence expect that a clear, and decided reply will be given this month by those who are in the important positions of alone being able to give this reply.

J. C. DAVIDSON.

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout The Winter

These days the face and hands need special care and attention. Strong winds quick changes of temperature from indoors to outdoors, are severe on the skin. Their disfiguring effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Chapped, reddened, blotchy and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a weather-beaten complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night, and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in a warm atmosphere, cheeks and chin to sag, and wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used by the woman who keeps pretty much indoors these days. Dissolve one ounce of powdered saxolite in one half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this morning or before going out for theatre or social affair. It is a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle eraser.

FIXED ASSESSMENT OF $3,600 ON OPERA HOUSE RAISED TO $20,000

At Least Committee of Whole Council Recommended This Step---Ald. Langford and Ald. Saunders Solitary Friends of The Nurses---Ald. Weir and Ald. Edgar Would Offer Nothing.

SAYS THEATRE CONDITIONS BAD

Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., asked the Committee of the Whole Council last night for another ten years' fixed assessment of $3,600, or thereabouts, on the Grand Opera House, and they responded by recommending an assessment fixed at $20,000 for five years. During the past ten years the Grand has yielded an annual tax of $91.80, but under the Committee's proposed increase the yearly revenue to the city's coffers will be $685.16 on the basis of the 1915 rate.

When informed of the Committee's attitude Mr. Turner said that he had no remarks to make, but even that statement was a terse expression of his feelings. Mr. E. A. Peck, his solicitor, said that that they would have to accept this proposal as gracefully as they could, but that in view of the theatrical conditions they had anticipated more considerate treatment.

All the members of the Council were present excepting Alderman Stratton and Alderman Evans, and of the rest the only friends of the dramatic muse appeared to be Alderman Langford and Alderman Saunders, who were satisfied to continue the present assesment of $3,600 for a term of five years.

Alderman Langford pointed out that beginning with this year Mr. Turner will have to pay school taxes on the actual assessment of $38,630 on the Grand, which will amount to ~~$394.83 on the basis of the last tax~~ rate. This with the $91 taxes from the fixed assessment of $3,600 would total approximately $400, which at a rate of 25 mills practically means that Mr. Turner would receive a fixed assessment on the Opera House of $16,000.

Alderman Langford contended that a good Opera House was of greater value to a community than was generally appreciated, that for some time past the theatrical business had fallen upon lean and slender seasons, and that the theatre deserved encouragement. Hence in view of the increased taxes from the application of the school rates the theatre should receive some support and consideration. Peterborough, he said, is an industrial city, and mechanics and other workmen look for amusements where they locate for work. Alderman Langford felt that the theatre had not been making large profits, and for a few years he would not increase the fixed assessment. With conditions generally improved, the Council could then raise it.

Alderman Saunders accorded with this view, but the pair failed to fill their hand.

Alderman Dobbin agreed that the Opera House was a credit to the city, but he was figuring on getting a revenue of about $600. Alderman Edgar would have assessed the house for its full amount. Alderman McIntyre considered an assessment of $5,000. Alderman Weir expresesd no sympathy whatever and proposed no action. Alderman Galbraith agreed with Alderman Dobbin. Alderman Duncan liked at least $5,000 fixed assessment.

Alderman Weir and Alderman Edgar moved that no action be taken. Alderman Dobbin and Alderman McIntyre moved in amendment for a $20,000 fixed assessment including business tax. The amendment carried.

$222.40 Off Taxes.

It was estimated last night that the taxes on the actual assessment of the Grand would amount to $657.56, and on the fixed assessment of $20,000 it would be $635.16. With those figures, the advantage to Mr. Turner is about $222 a year.

In addressing the Committee Mr. Peck presented reasons why the theatre should be encouraged in Peterborough, and Mr. Turner revealed some of the costs of the house. He has to pay a license of $300, of which $250 goes to the Government, and $50 to the city. This latter is a recent increase from $10. Theatrical productions are scarce on account of the war—ye shades of the days of "Peggy from Paris," "The Yankee Consul," "Bought and Pair For," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Walls of Jericho," "The Bachelor," "The Gingerbread Man," "The Tenderfoot," etc., etc., when every week had one or two big attractions—and only a few shows are coming into Canada. Peterborough has the best theatre between Toronto and Ottawa, as illustrated by the visit of Harry Lauder, who receives the paltry salary of $5,000 a week. The Grand has 32 hands on its payroll, and last year the wages aggregated $7,000. Mr. Turner said he had given the house free for a number of patriotic purposes, and on Friday handed it over for Wednesday next to the Red Cross. But during the past few years the revenue has noticeably fallen off as the result of a combination of conditions affecting the theatrical business.

When the Committee boosted the fixed assessment, Mr. Turner asked that the increased city license be taken into consideration, but the request was turned down.

LITERARY RAMBLES

A phrase which comes glibly enough from the lips of the thoughtless is that the war has changed the ideals of the British nation. As we look across the ocean we see many changes taking place. We see the haunts of the dilettanti deserted, the great clubs of London and the provincial cities, once so exclusive in their character, throwing their doors open to almost anyone who is willing to pay the fees. Night clubs are a thing of the past, the drink evil is abating by leaps and bounds; women of wealth and fashion are giving up their daily pleasures in order to engage in the countless pursuits of business, to which their natural desire to do good no less than the call of their country impels them; the peculiar demeanour, bred of insularity, that at one time made the Englishman hated in Europe and disliked in the colonies has disappeared. He looks upon himself now as part and parcel of a great empire in which the other units are daily and yearly making their power and influence more widely apparent and whose aspirations and outlook upon life are identical with his own. These are only a few of the changes that are noticeable as the outcome of the war. They are remarkable enough but they have nothing whatever to do with any change in the Empire's or the nation's ideals; they are simply the sure signs that the people are awakening from their lethargy and that a grand forward movement is being made towards their attainment.

In the literature of the day the same thing is apparent. The frivol and froth that has characterized much of the fiction of the past twenty years is disappearing, and something of a more wholesome and virile quality is taking its place. There is a marked difference also in the tone of present-day poetry. An example is to be seen in the work of the late Rupert Brooke. As is well-known, this author died in April of last year from blood poisoning on board a French hospital ship at the Island of Scyros. Prior to the war he had spent his days much in the same way as the majority of English youths emancipated from school and university who find themselves cast adrift. He carried on a Bohemian existance, writing occasionally for different periodicals, but without proving himself of a much superior order of genius to the hundreds of others who were endeavoring to earn their living by their pens. He wrote much that was coarse and nothing that was outstandingly clever. Sickening of the fruitless life he was pursuing, he left on a trip to the Islands of the South Seas. That trip was productive of many brilliant letters which appeared in the columns of the Westminster Gazette. Shortly after his return to England the war broke out, and the call of his country found Rupert Brooke answering the summons. After preliminary trajhing at Blandford camp, he obtained a commission in the Royal Naval Division and took part in the expedition to Antwerp. There he received his baptism of fire in the Belgian trenches, sailing afterwards with the balance of the British sailors on the expeditionary force to the Mediterranean. He was not destined to see further service, for death claimed him as his victim, and he lies buried in an olive grove about a mile inland, on the island by whose shores he breathed his last.

That a noble genius passed in the passing of Rupert Brooke admits of no question. Read his words of thankfulness on casting off the shackles of Bohemianism:

Peace.

Now God be thanked Who has matched us with His hour
And caught our youth, and wakened us from sleeping,
With hand made sure, clear eye, and sharpened power,
To turn as swimmers into cleanness leaping,
Glad from a world grown old and cold and weary,
Leave the sick hearts that honour could not move,
And half-men, and their dirty songs and dreary
And all the little emptiness of love.

And who can doubt that the war purified his mind and enriched his power when he reads the following beautiful sonnet:

The Soldier.

If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is for ever England. There shall be
In that rich dust a richer dust concealed;
A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,
Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
A body of England's, breathing English air,
Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home.

And think, this heart, all evil shed away.
A pulse in the eternal mind, no less,
Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
And laughter learnt of friends; and gentleness,
In hearts at peace, under an English heaven.

Brooke died in his twenty-eighth year, but he has left a message that many another poet of thrice his years might have been proud to leave. He sums up in six lines that volumes of sermons might fail to achieve:

Blow, bugles blow. They brought us for our dearth,
Holiness, lacked so long, and love and pain,
Honour has come back, as a King, to earth
And paid his subjects with a royal wage;
And nobleness walks in our ways again;
And we have come into our heritage.

There is a message in those lines for every one, but for none so much as the slacker.

PROPOSES TWO CENT FILMS IN SLUMS OF BIG CITIES

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Flora Finch, the film comedienne, is at work on a plan to establish a chain of motion picture houses oin the slums of many large cities where the price of admission will be 2 cents. She has already interested several charity workers and philanthropists in her plan, and it is thought the rest of the required funds can be raised by popular subscription in the cities where such houses are to be established.

The houses will be built on sites far removed from regularly established theatres, and Miss Finch, after investigation, is of the opinion that the price of admission will be sufficient to support each theatre, providing that no license fee is charged by the city.

Dear Mr. Shiner, — Thanks very much for tobacco and cigarettes received through the Overseas Tobacco Fund These gifts are greatly appreciated by the boys in the trenches. Kind regards to all S.O.E. members. Hoping to return shortly.

Letter from Co. Q. M. Sergt. Sam Thomas, C. Co. 21st Battalion:

H. A. Cranfield,
Sec. Overseas Tobacco Fund.
239 Perry street, Peterborough:

Dear Sir,—Received your letter of Dec. 6th, and was pleased to hear from you again. I conveyed to the boys the wishes of your worthy town, "the compliments of the season" and in return please accept our best wishes for a prosperous New Year. On Dec. 22nd, 1915, I received one sack, the first to arrive since you wrote me. It contained 120 packages. Each package contained one package of smoking mixture and five packages of cigarettes, just exactly what you said I should receive. The case was delivered to me by the Army Service Corps in good condition. I made the distribution and the remarks from the men assured me that they appreciated their gifts and that they would answer the cards thanking the donors. I thank you again on behalf of the Peterborough boys for the work you have done in trying to make us feel that we are not forgotten. The boys are roughing things fine. We have had about ten dry days since last September. It is an awful country for rain and mud. The trenches were in very bad shape a little while ago, but repairs have been made and the dugouts are a little more comfortable now. Sometimes the trenches are half full of water, but the Germans are just the same if not worse, as we can see them bailing out their trenches all the time. Things are very quiet along our section of front, although occasionally shells come over, but we return ten to their one. Well, dear friend, I will close now, thanking you in anticipation, I remain,

Yours truly,
SAM THOMAS.

The case referred to in above letter is the first shipment sent from Peterborough and some of the cards were published a few days ago and they are still coming in.

NORMAL SCHOOL STUDENTS ENTERTAINED BY THE TEACHERS

The students of the Normal school were entertained by the staff last evening when a very enjoyable time was spent. The chair was taken by Principal Walker and a short musical programme was contributed. Miss Sophie Elliott rendered an instrumental solo, Dr. Park a violin selection and Miss M. Armstrong, a vocal number. Slides of a more or less humorous nature by Mr. Keyes.

Refreshments were then served, after which the balance of the evening was spent in promenades and games.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PETERBORO' UTILITIES COMMISSION NEW DEPARTMENTS ORGANIZED

Initial Reduction in Hydro Rates Resulted in a Saving to the People of at Least Thirty Thousand Dollars—During the Year 1632 Meters Were Installed—The "Cause of "High Bills"—Five Members of the Department Responded to the Call "To Arms."

MOTOR TRUCK IS NEEDED

The first annual report of the Peterboro Utilities Commission has been prepared and submitted to the commissioners, Mr. H. O. Fisk, manager of the commission makes some interesting observations concerning the work of this department since its inception a little over one year ago. Chief among these is the fact that about thirty thousand dollars has been saved to the consumers as a result of the initial reduction in the Hydro rates for Peterboro. During the year just closed several departments have been organized including a respoitory for complaints.

The Report.

The report contains the following: "About the middle of December 1914, as your manager, I took charge of the work of the Utilities Commission. At that time, with the exception of the office, the organization was very incomplete and the old Light and Power methods and system of charging was still being adhered to.

The first of January 1915 Hydro rates for Peterboro were adopted, resulting in a saving to the people of our City of at least thirty thousand dollars ($30,000.00) for the year.

Early in the year the following departments were organized;—meter, testing and repair; estimating, complaint and adjusting; street light systems repairs; construction and maintenance.

Meter Department.

During the past year 1683 meters have been installed, after having been duly tested and verified by the Government Inspector, 332 meters have been re-vertified, due to the lapse of the five year period, 260 were found unfit for service and scrapped. The amount paid for verification fees to the Dominion Government was one thousand and two dollars and seventy-five cents ($1002.75.)

Complaint, Adjusting & Estimating Departemnt.

This department investigated 235 complaints, among which were creeping, noisy and stopped meters, high bills, interruptions to service, low voltage and voltage variation.

High Bills.

In nearly every case were practically traceable to the use of carbon filament lamps and the trouble was removed when tungsten installation was substituted.

Interruptions were due to wind storms, swaying tree tops which have grown up through the wires, causing the service to break down. This same trouble was the cause of a number of burned out transformers, which I will refer to later.

A poor voltage complaint from East City, due to unsteady power in a factory in that vicinity was overcome by re-arranging the line in such a way that the energy for Domestic lighting was brought over a different line from that supplying the factory before mentioned.

Street Systems Repair Dept.

The lamps on the old street light system were manufactured by the Royal Electric Co., of Montreal, in its day the largest of the kind in Canada. It has, however, been out of business for a number of years, consequently repair parts are hard to get. However, these lamps have been all overhauled, procuring such parts as we could from other manufacturers, not excepting our own Peterboro Lock Co., and they are now operating in as good condition as they ever did.

The outages for the last quarter have been less than one per cent.

Early in the year it was almost impossible to procure globes for this style of lamp. We also experienced considerable trouble in getting a carbon equal to the ones formerly received from Nancy, France, before the war. However, the matter of double coating the present carbons with copper, at a slight additional cost, solved the life problem, which bothered us much earlier in the year. Our street lighting system has been supplemented during the year by an addition of 154 tungsten lamps. These lamps are doing good service and seem to be well received by the people, although they are only a temporary expedient, pending the installation of a new system. We experienced some trouble from lamps being broken by stone throwing. In June a notice offering a reward of lead to conviction was posted on lead to conviction was posted on every lamp pole, which practically eliminated this trouble.

Construction & Maintenance Dept.

During the past year 121 new poles have been erected not including those temporarily erected to take care of the outfall sewer pumping operations.

Nineteen transformers were taken down and erected in other places, having a capacity of 129 kilowatts. Also 26 new ones were erected, representing a capacity of 253 kilowatts.

During the year nine transformers were burned out, 22 K.W. capacity representing a value of $249.00 were destroyed by reason of swaying tree tops, causing the wires to come together, short circuiting and burning out the transformers. 4 K.W. capacity representing a value of $58.00 failed from old age.

It might be said in passing that the tree proposition is a most serious one and that we are particularly fortunate in coming through with such a small loss during the past year from this cause.

A slight fire occurred in our Simcoe street sub-station, September 15. This was caused by a heavy surge on our line, caused by lightning, resulting in the almost complete destruction of the switch board wiring. The repairs to this cost $160.72.

The last week in December a complete inspection of our system was made, resulting in the finding of eight customers at that time and four somewhat previous to that time, which resulted in increasing our revenue to the extent of $364.72.

Five of our men have heard the call of their King and Country and have loyally joined the colors.

In conclusion I might say that the work orders issued for the past year amounted to 4728. New and re-connected services 1310; services cut off 858.

I would like to draw the attention of the Commissioners to the amount of travel involved in carrying into effect of nearly 5000 work orders and suggest the purchase of an automobile, capable of carrying about 2000 pounds. The saving in time alone would warrant the expenditure and I might say further that my experience with my own car on two or three occasions of emergency during the last year have shown me clearly that the same men with auto transportation could repair more than double the services out of commission in the same time, than could be done with a livery horse even under forced draught.

Trusting that you will give the automobile proposition your earnest consideration, I remain

Your obedient servant,
H. O. FISK,
Manager.

Our Loved Ones In the Trenches

Oh how we often sit and think
Of those we love so dear,
Who are so very far away and fighting every day.
And the hardships they endure
Oh how we wish this war would cease,
And our loved ones could return
To those at home who wait for them
And pray for their return.

Oh how we watch for news each week
From our dear ones at the front,
And how it makes us sit and think
When we read what they go through.
The mud and slush and rain and rats
Is terrible I'm sure.
And how we picture them at nights,
As we get into our nice warm beds,
And there they are in bud and slush,
And they never even complain,
But write to us at home and say they're as happy as can be.

But when we think of those at home
Who live here at their ease,
Why don't they join the colours now
And help to win the day.
Why don't they think of those poor souls
Who have been there so long,
Sometimes I often wonder if they think of them at all.
It's time that these men would wake up,
And see their duty is
To go and help their comrades there
Who's fought for them so long.

For the sooner all these men get there
The sooner there'll be peace.
And peace and victory we're sure to get
When Our Gallant boys are there,
For they'll show the Huns that Jack Canucks
Are men who never are afraid
To fight and keep right on
Till they surely win the day,
And of what joy on that great day
We get the news of peace

So come on boys and show your friends
You're not afraid to do
The same as the other men have done
And mean to do it to.
And fancy when you meet your chum —over in Berlin,
Just see his face light up,
He will shake you by the hand and say,
Thank God, you've come to help.

A SOLDIER'S WIFE.

MUST SALUTE GREEKS.

General Sarrail Instructs Officers and Men to be Friendly.

PARIS Jan. 14.—Genarel Sarrail commander of the French army in the East, his issued a new order to his troops, from which the Saloniki correspondent of the Temps quotes the following as the most important passage:

"I repeat again: You must all, both officers and men, observe towards the officers of the Greek army of rank superior to your own the authorized rules of deference and the outward marks of respect. You will be good enough to entertain relations of friendliest comradeship with military men of your own rank."

Rats With Hobnailed Feet Visit Men of 21st Battalion

Newsy Letter From Quarter-Master Sergeant Sam Thomas to Mr. Percy G. S. Webb—Rain, Mud and Other Things Try The Endurance of The Men.

CASUALITIES LIGHT

Mr. Percy Webb, of the Customs House, has received an unusually interesting letter from Quartermaster Sergeant Sam Thomas, 21st Battalion, dated from Belgium, December 20th, 1915. Sergeant Thomas wrote in part:

"I received your letter of Dec. 10th, and was very pleased that you mentioned Mr. Buller, Mr. Jimmy Lang, and Mr. Frank Galvin. I am glad to know they are all well, and will you kindly convey my very best respects to them, and wish them for me the compliments of the season with a victorious New Year.

Ted Shrimpton oftimes comes over to me and pays me yor best regards. Ted is well, and we have time and again offered him promotion but he declined. He is a bomb-thrower, and one of the best at that. I tell you, Percy, without exaggeration, that the Peterborough boys shine in every unit of the Battalion, and it is an admitted fact that C Company of the 21st is regarded for its great capabilities by its Officer Commanding, and we all look to our C. Company officers and our Colonel with pride and affection. Although we have not an officer in our company from good old Peterborough, Major S. M. Gray from Cornwall, thinks the world of his Peterborough boys, and the men think the same of him. We are proud of him, and I personally hope that Providence will guard him from all harm. He is a good man as well as a good officer, and I cannot emphasize his good name too much.

Well Percy, this is an awful country for rain. Since last September we have had about five or six nice days; of the rest up to date its painful to relate. Rain, rain, and then more rain. The land is low and swampy, and you're mud to the boot tops all the while. The trenches are just the same. They are cold, wet, dismal, and d—— miserable, which adds discomfort to all ranks. We have six days in and six out in reserve, and six in the supports, then back to rest, billets about four miles in the rear of fireworks display for six days, then repeat all over.

The lads are toughing it well. Although worked pretty hard on working parties they grouch but little. The company casualties are small. Two killed in action, two died of wounds, and twelve wounded—only two Peterborough boys, Privates Ballard and Chambers.

The position we are holding is in the toe of a horseshoe. It is the most advanced part of the line, I understand, and we are low, and anything to be done is done at night, no lights and no noise, because the snipers are very busy once the sun goes down. Its been very quiet along our sector of the front for the last week. They threw their asphyxiating gas the other morning at 5 a.m. That made me and a good many others see the fairies for awhile. I assure you that it is anything but pleasant. Its chlorinated gas, just like chloride of lime. It gets you almost on the first inhale.

You should see the trench rats over here. They are the size of any ordinary cat and have hobnails on their feet, at least you would think they had when they walk over you at night. The mail man collecting letters in the trenches, by accident dropped a few from his bundle, and on turning around noticed a couple of rats scurrying away with them and chewing them up; possibly they thought they had first right of censoring. These are the things our boys are contending with in combination with other little things, proper old soldiers with long service badges. The men deserve the greatest credit for the manner in which they endure the various conditions.

Well Percy, I am getting tired. Its 11:30 p.m., and I have just returned from the trenches with the grub for to-morrow. I must finish with best regards to Mrs. Webb, yourself, and to all I know in the Customs House."

SAM.

ENJOYABLE EVENING AT ST. ANDREW'S

Yesterday evening the young people of St. Andrew's church met together to enjoy a social evening, to discuss further means of becoming better acquainted, and incidentally to enjoy a supper of which the main article of diet was pork and beans.

After supper it was decided that there should be one main organization to promote sociability and make arrangements for future social evenings together. It was felt that this organization must not in any way supersede or hinder any other organization of which there are several, but must be a connecting link joining them all together in a social way. Mr. Roland Glover was elected president of the whole organization.

This being done, the ladies and gentlemen met separately to discuss further organization. The ladies elected the following officers:

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Rollins.
Pres.—Miss M. Rae.
Sec'y—Miss L. A. Richardson.
Treas.—Miss MacNab.
Executive committee — Misses N. Mather, K. Rees, S. Rae, F. Robertson, E. Tremaine, B. King, L. Mowat E. Telford, E. Allen, M. Shearer, H. Brown and Mrs. Morgan.

The gentlemen decided to form a society to be known as St. Andrew's Young Men's Club. This club was to meet at regular intervals to discuss matters of general interest to the church, and to promote in any way a stronger fraternal spirit amongst the male members of the congregation. The following members were elected as officers:

Hon. Pres.—Rev. Jas. Rollins.
Pres.—Mr. R. Langford.
Vice-Pres.—Mr. W. Evans.
Sec'y—Mr. W. Armstrong.
Treas.—Mr. T. J. Gillespie.
Pianist—Mr. H. Treneer
Executive Committee — Messrs. A. McWilliams, Walton, F. Gillespie, McMillan and F. Saunders.

The next meeting of the club was to take place on Jan. 25th and all men of the congregation should take advantage of this opportunity to attend a gathering met for general improvement.

The St. Andrew's Young People particularly desire to thank the J. M. Greene Co. for their great kindness in letting them have the use of an Edison Diamond Disc Phonograph, which added very materially in helping to make the evening an enjoyable one.

Canada's Fighting Forces at The Grand Opera House

Pictures Depict Canada's Fighting Forces in Various Activities, including the Battle of Ypres—Will Be Repeated This Evening

INSTRUCTIVE LECTURE

"Canada's Fighting Forces," which was presented last evening in the Grand Opera House and will be repeated again this evening, was witnessed by a large and appreciative audience. The pictures are in six parts and depict Canada's fighting forces in various activities, including the battle of Ypres. They are the best that have been seen in Peterborough, dealing with the present war and are authorized by the Canadian Government. The value of the pictures is enhanced by the instructive and educative lecture given by Sergeant Fred Wells, returned prisoner of war from Germany. Sergt. Wells gave a lucid description of life in a German prison camp, while Corporal White explained how he won the D.C.M. at Ypres. The latter hails from Vancouver, and was a member of the 5th Western Cavalry, who were in the thick of the fighting at Ypres. He was attached to the medical detail and was struck on the knee cap by the casing of a shell. His medical officer being taken prisoner, Corporal White stayed with his men for three weeks, refusing to go back for treatment. Not until May 22nd did he leave; by that time water had formed on the knee. For heroically staying in the trenches and for a number of deeds of great bravery which his Colonel became aware of, he was recommended for the Distinguished Conduct Medal and in due time this was awarded.

Corporal White is very modest in his reference to himself. Speaking of the stretcher bearers, he says that at Ypres they went out in broad daylight to rescue wounded. Three out of sixteen of his section are still at the front.

Sergt. Wells in his reference to conditions in the German prison camps, created a deep impression on his audience, as he referred to the joy and relief experienced by the Canadian boys on the receipt of parcels from the different women's organizations. He spoke with a feeling and an earnestness as he referred to the heartfelt expressions of gratitude by the many fervent prayers uttered by the boys on receipt of the parcels.

It might be stated that the pictures are not being shown for financial profit by any organization, but rather to provide funds to secure necessaries and comforts for the Canadian boys imprisoned in Germany.

The pictures are wonderful and should attract a much large audience this evening.

Peterboro Nurse Tells of Russian Boy in Hospital on Lemnos Island

An interesting letter has been received from Mrs. M. K. Douglas, of Peterborough, now a nursing sister, on the island of Lemnos, as follows:

No. 3 Canadian Stationary Hospital,
Ward T., December 3rd.

A hospital ward produces many stories of hardship and heroism, but few, if any, can equal that of a young Russian boy, named Aaron Brunick, who is at present in my ward. For months, as he slowly learned our language, his story was hidden, but as his knowledge of English increased so his story came to light.

At the outbreak of the war he was in Palestine, together with his mother, brother and sister. Fearing that Turkey would enter the war, and having no love for the Turks, he and his brother took ship for Egypt. He said in his quaint English: "Me stay, me have to fight for Turks; me no like Turks;,, me come away to fight Turks." On arriving at Alexandra he enlisted in the Zion Mule corps, although only thirteen years of age, and was accepted, and after a short training period, was sent to the peninsula soon after the landing. For months he toiled there, doing a man's work, facing a man's death. Mules hard to handle at any time, became unmanageable under shell fire, and bolted with their heavy loads, being stopped only with great difficulty and danger. Many were killed while he was driving them, but fortunately their dangerous loads failed to explode. Comrades were killed at his side, but still he continued his dangerous but necessary work. No trench offered him security, no ridge sheltered him, but, in the open, back and forth he had to go, exposed to fire of every description.

I have often wondered that his reason did not fail in these terrible days. The strain, however, was beginning to tell on his young mind and finally he was sent here, his nerves completely wrecked.

Quietness, good food and pleasant surroundings have worked wonders in him, and to-day no one would think that he had passed through the horrors of a campaign and seen death in all its reality.

MANY HELPED TO MAKE SAN TOY A SUCCESS

The "San Toy" production, given so well for two nights, owes much of its success to the most valuable assistance of so many kind friends in assisting in preparing the costumes and stage properties, for had all the necessary paraphernalia been purchased, or even hired (and in some cases hiring was out of the question) the cost would have been prohibitive. Mr. W. H. Barry spent many days in the work, as did Mrs. Chris. Wood with the dresses. The gilt headdresses and the china ornaments were designed and made by Mr. Barrie. Uniforms, furniture, electric lights, were kindly lent by Mr. Jamieson, Mr. Shook, Mr. Sturgeon, Messrs. Comstock, Mr. C. Wood, and the San Toy Company gratefully acknowledge their indebtedness. Mr. R. J. Devey, on behalf of the company, thanks all who patronized the performances and for their enthusiastic applause of the many and varied scenes. Wigs and Naval Uniforms were hired from A. E. McKenna of Toronto.

Mrs. Austin, who was a member of the original Daly Company of San Toy, in London, very kindly made up quite a number of the performers here.

To which the Toronto Globe says: As far as the records show Billy never played for any O.H.A. team, senior, intermediate or junior, and the only sensation in his connection with the O.H.A. was the one he felt when his application for a card was refused.

Saturday Market Quotations

Pork, Beef and Wood Offered in Large Quantities—Butter and Eggs Maintain Their Prices

If the wood, beef and pork which appeared on the Market Square this morning had been missing there would not have been much left. Hardwood in 4-foot lengths ranged from $5.50 to $6.00 a cord. Mixed wood, 4 ft., $5.00, and 2 ft. lengths, $5.75 a cord.

Beef and pork were offered in large quantities, the former selling at 10 to 12 cents, the latter at 14 to 16 cents. A few quarters of lamb sold at 17 and 19 cents, though one dealer was asking 20 cents for the hindquarter.

One vendor had potatoes at $1.75 a bag.

Vegetables were very scarce. Cabbage were quoted 40 cents a dozen; turnips, 40 cents a bag; onions, 25 cents a peck.

Two crates of live fowl enlivened the proceedings outside, and vied with the circle around the sun in attracting the farmers' attention. Hens brought $1 a piece, while the non-laying, rooster variety captured $1.25 each.

Ladders, with cedar sides and oak rungs, were held at 20 cents a foot.

Basket Section.

Eggs continued to bring their old price of 40 cents a dozen, while butter showed a tendency to stiffen up a little, some farmers' wives asking 32 cents. A few were quoting 31, but the majority stuck to the standard price of 30 cents a pound.

Fowl were few and far between, chickens being in the majority. These sold at 50, 60 and 75 cents each, while their mothers realized 95 cents and $1.00 each. Geese averaged 16 to 17 cents a pound, while one little lone turkey was labelled $2.50.

Oranges, per dozen, were 25, 30 and 40 cents; lemons, 30 cents.

Cream sold at 35 cents a quart. "Great White Light" lamp burners were quoted at 35 cents each.

The case of Enos Meyette, who has been languishing in gaol on a charge of unlawfully entering the premises of a Simcoe Street resident, was disposed of this morning, when Police Magistrate Dumble imposed a fine of ten dollars and costs, amounting in all to nineteen dollars. Failure to pay the fine will earn for the accused, two months in the county gaol, with hard labour.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

The gymnastic exhibition given by the Boys' Intermediate Leaders Corps, last night, in the "Y" gymnasium, was a success in every way. A large audience enjoyed the programme and received an insight into the work for boys that the Y.M.C.A. is doing in this department. Mr. Roper, Physical Director, had the boys in the best of condition and the different movements were executed in a very finished manner.

The programme included marches and calisthenics by the Junior Boys; parallel bar work by the Intermediate Leaders; demonstration of group games by the Intermediate and Junior Boys; tumbling and long-horse work by the Senior Leaders and a very pretty illuminated club drill by the Intermediate Leaders, brought the evening's programme to a close. Much credit is due Mr. Roper for the very efficient manner in which the boys under instruction gave such a pleasant and instructive evening.

The Junior boys are enjoying a toboggan party at Jackson Park this afternoon.

Twenty boys were out for Bible study this morning.

The I. C. S. Exhibit

Instruction By Correspondence Demonstrated by the Local Representative

The wonderful inventor, Edison, is credited with saying that "Instruction by correspondence is the cheapest and best way for the poor man." Some people may not accept Edison's statement; but, whether or no, there are many who have made their mark in the world through the instruction given on the International Correspondence School plan, of Scranton, Ohio.

In this connection, attention is called to the interesting exhibits made by the local representative of this School, Mr. Donovan, which are now on view in his temporary window, No. 160 Charlotte Street. Young men who want to improve their spare time to train themselves for big work, should get in touch with Mr. Donovan, who will explain how they can qualify for new positions.

Biggest Mail Order Sale in History of Local Theatre

For the Appearance Here on Monday, January 24th, of Harry Lauder, the Scotch Comedian

The biggest mail order sale yet experienced in the annals of the local theatre, is for "Harry Lauder" and his company of international artists, who come to "The Grand" next Monday, January 24th.

No less than seventy-four letters were received on the noon mail yesterday, containing orders for tickets varying in number from two to fourteen. All the $1.00 and $1.50 tickets have been alloted, and but one row of 75c. seats still remain. However, there are some splendid locations left at $2.00 and patrons who contemplate taking in the performance, should mail their orders at once, with remittance to cover number of seats required. Friday morning, January 21st, the box office will open for the sale of the remaining seats for the general public should any be available, which from present indications, look very doubtful. Those who have sent in mail orders without enclosing a self-addressed envelope for the return of the tickets, will be able to get them by calling at the box office after it opens next Friday.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—In looking over the lists submitted of all those who had given to the Patriotic Fund, the generosity of the working men and working girls is to be commended. Not very large amounts, it is true, were subscribed by them, but nevertheless they did subscribe in a far greater proportion than many of the heads of fashionable families in this city. A number of men subscribed as far as they were able and in addition to their subscription, members of their families have enlisted and gone to the front. These men have done their part, but there are men who subscribed a miserable pittance to the Patriotic Fund, and these men have fat bank accounts, large houses, and their families put on all the style imaginable, as though they were the patriots and saviors of the country, while a miserable pittance was subscribed by the head of the family toward the relief and assistance of the soldiers' wives and families.

If I had been one of those well-to-do, small subscribers I would have given the subscription anonymously to save my name from the ridicule of the people of this community.

Yours truly,

CITIZEN.

LITTLE TRAGEDIES.

The country is waiting and watching to see what the Ontario Government will do with J. R. Fallis, M.P.P." If Mr. Hearst fails to repudiate him he must be held to endorse him, and that is inconceivable to those who follow the Prime Minister and give him their confidence. The ethics of the horse-trader cannot be allowed to rule in the Government of this Province."—Orillia Packet.

THE DEATH OF DR. JAMES JONES

Was Married to Miss Dennistoun, Daughter of James Dennistoun, Formerly of Peterboro'

Word has been received by Mrs. Charles Burke, Toronto, of the death in St. Paul, Minn., on January 11th, of her brother, Dr. James R. Jones, one of the foremost physicians of Winnipeg, Man., and only son of the late Thomas Jones, of Markham Street, Toronto.

Deceased was born in Toronto, and was educated at the University and Medical College, Toronto. He shortly afterward went to London, England, and after serving on the staff of the St. Thomas and other hospitals, became head of the staff of the Hospital for Ladies, an office which he held for some time, and a position which he had the distinction of being the only Canadian to fill. Returning to Toronto, he lived here for a while before going to Winnipeg, when that city first commenced to boom. He had since practised medicine there. He was a member of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, London, England.

He married Miss Dennistoun, daughter of James Dennistoun, Peterborough, who survives, with one son, Captain James D. Jones, surgeon, now in France with an English regiment. Mrs. P. M. Wright of Weston is a sister.

SIR JAMES WATSON'S OPINION CONSIDERED MOST VALUABLE

You catch a little cold to-day, and by to-morrow it has reached the throat, next day the lungs are affected and you wish you had used "Catarrhozone" which kills colds in five minutes. In the first place Catarrhozone soothes the irritated membranes and relieves congestion,—then it cuts out the phlegm and destroys the germs. It enables the blood to retain a natural supply of oxygen, lung-food, and vitality. In any cough bronchitis or Catarrh, it's guaranteed to positively cure. Beware of dangerous substitutes offered under misleading names for genuine Catarrhozone which is sold everywhere, large size containing two months treatment costs $1.00, small size 50c; trial size 25c.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE 93RD BATTALION INTERMEDIATES DOUBLED THE SCORE ON COBOURG

Local Soldiers' Team Won Slow Game [From Lakeshore Bunch By 4 Goals to 2—Bagged Three Goals in Second Session.

THE BAND WAS THERE

The 93rd Battalion Intermediates climbed up on even terms with the Peterborough Electrics, last night, when they defeated Cobourg St. Michael's in a ragged game at Brock Street Rink, by 4 goals to 2. The two city teams are now tied with two wins and as they clash at Brock Street Rink on Monday night there is every indication of a lively evening.

Last night's game was far from a good exhibition, except in the last twenty minutes, when Cobourg threw six men up on the forward line and made things interesting. For the first two periods the visitors played as if they were afraid the soldiers had laid a few mines in front of their nets. They were going up alone, and shooting from well out, and naturally did not get many goals. Neither team played their positions, and the result was there were generally half a dozen men on the puck, while team play was sadly lacking. It was even up, 1—1 at the end of the first period, 4—1 in favour of the soldiers at the end of the second, and 4—2 at the finish.

The 93rd Band was out in force and their music was one of the best things of the evening. A big bunch of the boys in khaki were also on hand to cheer for their team.

For the 93rd, Widdifield in the nets played good hockey, especially in the last period, when the visitors threatened to pull the game out of the fire. On the forward line all worked hard.

Drumm, the youngster on the Cobourg defence, did the prettiest rushing of the night, while Guy and Lavis were both good in spots. Butler was clever in the nets.

Referee Jerry Laflamme made an impartial referee, who lost nothing in the way of offsides. The teams lined up as follows:

Cobourg		93rd
	Goal
Butler		Widdifield
	Defence
Drumm		Matthews
Guy		Dupuy
Lavis	Rover	Montgomery
C. Reddy	Centre	Wedlock
I. Reddy	Right Wing	Blewett

The play was listless from the face-off. "Pep" seemed to be lacking, and frequent offsides kept Referee Laflamme busy ringing his bell. Both teams were playing one-man hockey, and trusting to sniping from outside the defence to get goals. After ten minutes of this kind of going Delanty took Widdifield's measure with a neat shot from the side. Soon after Dupuy got away and, shooting from outside the Cobourg rear-guard as Guy bodied him, fooled Butler with the tying goal. It was 1—1 at the end of the period.

The second session opened at a faster clip and the soldier team showed considerable improvement over their work in the first period. They did most of the attacking, and won the game by their aggressiveness in this period. Wedlock put them ahead when he slammed in a counter on a pass from behind by Ketchum. The latter made it 3 to 1 on a hot shot from a scrimmage and soon after Wedlock batted another past Butler in a scrimmage. That left it 4 to 1 at the end of the second session.

In the closing period Cobourg showed their best hockey of the night. Both defence men moved up and, playing six men on the attack, they had the soldiers on the defence for most of the period. Widdifield saved frequently while Cobourg lost scoring chances by having no one in centre to look after rebounds. The visitors got the only goal of the period when C. Reddy scored from a scrimmage. They had half a dozen good chances but failed through slowness around the nets.

Summary:

First Period—

1—Cobourg, Delanty.
2—93rd, Dupuy.

2nd period—

3—93rd, Wedlock.
4—93rd, Ketchum.
5—93rd, Wedlock.

3rd Period.

6—Cobourg—C. Reddy.

What Fleets Do To Zeebrugge Is Told By Admiral

LONDON, Jan. 15—The naval operations off the Belgian Coast last summer and autumn are described in an official despatch from Vice-Admiral R. H. S. Bacon, commanding the Dover patrol, who begins by explaining the great care taken to continue the fire to purely military and naval objectives so as to inflict a minimum loss of life and distress to the civilian population among which were large numbers of citizens of the allied countries.

"In order to carry this principle into effect it was at times necessary to modify and even to postpone projected attacks," the despatch says. "The results, therefore, have been effective rather than sensational."

After speaking of the extreme accuracy of the naval fire, which he attributed as being due to novel methods and careful training, Vice-Admiral Bacon reviews the various attacks on Zeebrugge, Ostend, Westende and other points along the coast at various dates in brief, and sums up the damage to the Germans, which, he says, included the destruction of one torpedo boat, two submarines, one dredge, three military factories, thirteen big guns, two ammunition depots, several million storehouses, and in addition, wharves, observation and signalling stations, and the Zeebrugge locks, were damaged. The British loss consisted of three armed trawlers, of which two struck mines, and 34 men killed and 24 wounded.

Exceeded All Expectations.

Vice-Admiral Bacon says that the gunnery results exceeded his expectations. His fleet consisted of eighty vessels of various classes, manned partly by men of the regular navy, but more largely by officers and men of the navy reserves and deep sea fishermen.

"The protection of such a moving fleet by destroyers in waters which are the natural home of the enemy's submarines, has been admirable.

Vice-Admiral Bacon says: "But still more remarkable is the aptitude shown by the officers and crews of the drifters and trawlers, who in difficult waters and under conditions totally strange to them, maintained their allotted stations without a single accident. Moreover, these men under fire exhibited coolness worthy of the personnel of a service inured to discipline. The results show how deeply adaptibility is ingrained in the seafaring race of these islands."

CALLED GUARD, SAVED BOY.

MONTREAL, Jan. 15.—Private W. Smith, of the Composite Regiment, will receive the Royal Humane Society's medal for life saving.

Smith was on sentry duty at the Lachine Canal when a boy fell in the water. He was under orders not to leave his post so he turned out the guard, and when it had relieved him, with his uniform on, jumped into the water and rescued the boy.

Two City Teams Will Battle For Top of The Race

There will be doings at Brock St. Rink on Monday night when the 93rd Battalion and Peterborough Electric Intermediates will clash for the first time in an O.H.A. Intermediate game. Each team has victories over Campbellford and Cobourg to its credit, and as there is keen rivalry between the two, there is every indication of a real old-time battle. The 93rd Battalion rooters will be out in force headed by the Band, and as the Electrics will not lack for supporters, there promises to be some tall noise in evidence. Both teams are supremely confident of victory. The Electrics will have the strongest lineup that has represented them in an O.H.A. game this season, as the best of the Junior players will be in line Monday night—along with Spratt, Evans and company. It is likely that Lou Marsh will referee the game, which is called for 8:15 o'clock.

The following from the Tullamore and King County Independent (Ireland) will be read with great interest. Mr. Frank Schoales, of 486 Bolivar Street, City, is a brother of the four gallant soldiers mentioned. The Irish paper says:

"His many friends will regret to hear of the death in action of Sergt. George Schoales, of the East Lancashire Regiment. He went to France in November, 1914, and was present at several of the great battles, been mentioned in a despatch from Field Marshal Sir John French, dated 31st May, 1915, for gallant and distinguished service in the field.

"He is one of four brothers, all serving at the front. William, famous Army in Ireland, has received promotion on the field for gallant conduct, while his brother Adam has been recommended for the D.C.M. and promoted in the field to Sergeant-Major. His other brother, Jack, also a famous boxer, is serving with the Canadians, and has been present at the battle of Ypres, where the Canadians made such a gallant stand. He is at present home wounded."

Copy of War Office Letter.

War Office, Whitehall, S.W., 14th December, 1915.

Sir,—I have it in command from His Majesty the King to inform you, as next-of-kin of the late Sergeant George Schoales, No. 9694, of the East Lancashire Regiment, that this non-commissioned officer was mentioned in a despatch from Field Marshal Sir John French, dated 31st May, 1915, and published in the "London Gazette," dated 22nd June, 1915, for gallant and distinguished service in the field.

His Majesty desires to condole with you on the loss you have sustained, and to express his high appreciation of the services of the late Sergeant George Schoales.

I have the honour to be, your obedient servant.

(Signed) Teck,
Lieutenant-Colonel,
Assistant Military Secretary.

Mr. Francis Schoales, Clara, Kings Co., Ireland.

COBOURG, Jan. 14. — Lieut.-Col. Herman Rogers, officer commanding the 20th Battalion, now in France, passed through town on his way to Toronto. He was joined at Grafton by his mother, Mrs. Rogers, widow of Lieut.-Col. R. Z. Rogers, and his little daughter Dorothy. Col. Rogers is home on six days' leave, and his wife will return with him to his old home at Grafton to spend the time there. His brother, Capt. R. P. Rogers, officer commanding No. 1 Tunneling Company, is now overseas, and the brothers passed each other on the ocean. Lieut.-Col. Rogers went to the front as second in command of the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force, and was later promoted to the command of the 20th Battalion.

James D. Clarke, a son of the late Lieut.-Col. Charles Clarke, of Elora and a former Speaker of the Ontario Legislature, is the Lieut.-Col. commanding the South Waterloo Regiment, the 11th Battalion. Lieut.-Col. Clarke has been manager of the Galt Reporter for several years, and previous to that was on the staff of the Peterborough Examiner. He has had considerable experience in the Canadian Militia, and before accepting his new command was officer commanding the 29th Regiment, Highland Light Infantry.—Printer and Publisher.

Miss Eva Bouskill, 473 King Street, one of a number who sent scrap books to the front, has received a letter from Pte. S. S. Stuart, 21st Canadian Battalion, in which he encloses a picture postcard of two young children, which was picked up on the battlefield by a member of the 21st Battalion. Pte. Stuart thinks the owner came from Peterborough. The card may be seen at the Examiner Office.

A visiting minister preaching in a small town, near which a well-known race meeting is held, forcibly denounced the "sport of kings." The principal patron of the church always attended the home meetings, and of this the stranger was afterward informed.

A GROCERY STORE THAT ADVERTISES ALL YEAR ROUND

If there is any time when business is likely to be dull in a retail grocery store, it is round about the second week of January, when the wintry weather and the slippery highways keep shoppers at home.

It was with pleasure, therefore, that an exception to this rule was found in the store of Porter S. White, George street, which commands a steady trade all year round. The clerks seemed to be as busy as ever, and customers were steadily coming in with orders to be filled for the next day, Saturday. Some one spoke up and said something about there being no need of having dull times in a store if the storekeeper was on to his job, kept a clean stock of foodstuffs, bought at closely as possible, and did a reasonable amount of honest advertising.

"Yes, yes, we know. Advertising seems to be as necessary as keeping stock right these days. Some people say it will make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before. We keep on advertising all the year round, and we have an idea that we get fairly good returns from it."

But Advertising, you say, is only to get trade. You've got to hold it some other way. Well, that's up to the storekeeper. He must do as Porter S. White does — he must take paints to hold his trade; once he has got it. And the way a customer is treated, as well as guaranteed the purity of his goods, is about the best policy for a grocer to adopt, as an aid to his advertising.

But, lest the reader forgets, note this one fact: Porter S. White advertises all the year round—not spasmodically.

A man proposes, woman supposes, that is if she thinks she will.

How Terms of Agreement Between Great Britain and Denmark Are Honoured

LONDON, January 15.—Basil Clarke, the special investigator of the Daily Mail in Copenhagen, insists in his latest article on the passage of goods through Denmark to Germany that the carters at Copenhagen take the goods off the ships, carry them for a little ride around the docks, and then take them back to the ships again, thereby complying with the terms of the agreement between Great Britain and Denmark, "for delivery at Copenhagen."

They are loaded on to the ships again, he states, and then taken off for transport by train to Germany.

Explaining why the beef is only half a crown per pound in Denmark, he says:—"Denmark is now eating pork instead of beef. The Esjberg cattle market sales show that on one day when there were 154 head of cattle on the street, Hamburg purchased 141; Kielsen, of Kiel, 430; Franz, of Berlin, 440, and an Austrian buyer 527, leaving 223 for the Danish buyers.

The Daily Mail in an editorial continues its agitation against what it terms the "sham blockade" of Germany.

"The British nation," it says, "is now face to face with the fact that the so-called blockade of Germany is a sham. The evidence gathered by Basil Clarke, and the admissions of Lord Lansdowne supplement each other. If the war is to be won the blockade must be tightened and made a reality. If the blockade is to be tightened there is only one way—put the Admiralty in charge, let the sailors take the necessary action and let the Foreign Office stick to its proper business of explaining the sailors' business to neutral states in soothing and dignified terms.

"From New York the warning reaches us that fresh protests against the present half-hearted blockade are expected from the United States. If the allies are wise they will lose no time in putting the blockade on an American basis, so that American legal rulings and precedents may be cited in our behalf. The first step is for Great Britain, France and Russia jointly to declare a blockade of the entire German coast."

The editorial instances the allied submarine activity in the Baltic as removing the greatest difficulty in the path of the blockade, and says that the extension of the list of contraband is a matter of extreme urgency.

MUST BE A REAL BLOCKADE.

"There is good American precedent for this," it says. "In the case of the Confederacy the United States seized all cotton, because, as Mr. Bayard said, it was as much munition of war as powder and ball, for it furnished the chief means of obtaining these indispensables of warfare. The more widely the contraband list is drawn the better as the American Supreme Court has allowed a cargo when contraband to be seized on suspicion, even though on a neutral ship bound to a neutral port. By taking three steps we place the blockade strictly on a legal footing, and are acting on the advice of our best friends, who for months have been asking in wonder why we do not proclaim a blockade.

"If there must be friction with neutrals—and the sham blockade has generated this as much, if not more, than the real articles would have done—let us make certain that the precedents are on our side. Then we can point out that it is impossible for us to sacrifice our vital legal rights for the sake of neutral powers. We can remind critics that the United States in 1861-1865 did not relax the blockade of the South because Lancashire was starving—and we did not ask them to do it. So the British nation is not going to let go. Its very existence is at stake. It is going to insist on a real blockade of Germany, and make short work of its Ministers if they do not convert their sham blockade into a real struggle hold.

Russians Have Won Important Successes

PETROGRAD, Jan. 14.—The southern Russian front is quiet and may remain quiet for some days to come. This does not mean that the Russian offensive is abandoned or has been in any sense a failure. What the Russians have done is to establish themselves firmly on the left bank of the River Styr, dislodge the Austrians from the east bank of the middle Stripa and push up on the Bessarabian front. In appearance these results are insignificant compared with the effort put forth. In fact the Russian success of the great European war was not of merely local importance. It is no secret now that the plan of the offensive had been carefully elaborated by the Russian staff in conjunction with the staffs of the allies, and that the time and extent of the operations was carefully calculated with a distinct purpose in view. This purpose was to foil the German initiative and check the development of German plans at the critical moment.

The Russian offensive covered the period when we were strengthening our positions in the Near East. It held off the Germans while we were fortifying and landing troops at Saloniki and evacuating Gallipoli. So far it has served the purpose. Moreover it constituted a sharp warning to the Germans that the initiative of the war is gradually slipping from their grasp.

Pause is Necessary.

A pause is now necessary because warfare has become modernised on the Russian front. There is to be no more roving backwards and forwards. What is gained, must be held, and fortification has become as necessary an element in any advance as infantry attacks, the splendid valour of the Russian soldiers being reinforced not only by guns and ammunition, but by hard thinking and circumspection, and as the positions gained are a menace to the vital points of the enemy front, the present pause is a good augury that the offensive can be continued with success whenever it is found necessary.

That the enemy does not reply by a fierce counter-offensive is to be explained in his heavy losses, which amount in all to nearly 100,000, of whom over 10,000 are prisoners. The losses were particularly heavy in General Bothmer's army on the Stripa, largely because Bothmer, in order to insure the steadfastness of his troops, held them on the farther bank and burnt the bridges behind them, so exposing them, without the possibility of escape, to a terrific Russian fire.

TO MAKE ANOTHER TOUR

LONDON, Jan. 15.—All the diabolical plots in the world can't keep Mme. Sarah Bernhardt from making another tour of America, she said to-day. The interview came just at the end of her performance of "Les Cathedrals," a striking indictment of the German destruction of cathedrals in France and Flanders that packs two big houses daily in London.

"I have received scores of threatening letters from America," said the "divine Sarah." "They were signed with terrible Teutonic names."

A shrug of the shoulders. "But I defy them. I would have gone sooner had it not been for my physician's orders. I will go in October."

OBITUARY

THE LATE PATRICK MURRAY.

The funeral of the late Patrick Murray took place on Monday morning to Saint Luke's Church, Downeyville, and from there to Saint Luke's cemetery. The pall-bearers were, Messrs. Thomas Murray, John Sullivan, John Leahy, George Newman, Robert Winn and Sandy Mahood.

The deceased had been in poor health for a long time and death was not unexpected. He is survived by his wife, one brother and two sisters. The sisters are Mrs. Tetro and Mrs. Grady and the brother is Mr Thomas Murray, all of Peterborough.

HUGH DONALDSON.

The village of Coldsprings, Northumberland Co., has been deprived by death of one of its most respected citizens, in the person of the late Hugh Donaldson, who passed away at the family residence, on Tuesday last, January 11th. The deceased had been ill for a considerable period, and his demise was not unexpected. He died at the age of 67 years, leaving behind him his wife, and one son, Mr. Thomas Donaldson, of the G. Walter Green Co., Limited, of this city, and one daughter, Mrs. Joseph Thurston, of Moose Jaw, and one sister, Mrs. Thos. Larmour, of this city. Interment took place on Friday, in the Presbyterian cemetery, Coldsprings. The late Mr. Donaldson was a highly respected member of the Presbyterian Church of Coldsprings, of which he was an old elder. He was highly thought of for his honesty and straightforward dealings, and he will be missed by many who were intimate relatives and friends, in the vicinity in which he lived.

What we believe is truth to us, else we would never believe it.

FOWLER'S PEBLO GLASSES

EYE TALKS SERIES

No. 7.---A Question Of Appearance

THERE is an idea in some peoples mind, that glasses are no improvement to the looks. Just consider this—If you have to make an effort, even the slightest, to see clearly, just take the mirror and try to see an imaginary speck in your eye. Then notice the drawn up appearance of your forehead, the wrinkles around the eyes, and the tense look of concentration there is on the whole face. Be honest in your judgment. Then drop in to A. A. Fowler's Optical Parlors, and let him put a pair of suitable Pebio Glasses on you. A look in the mirror then will show you a smooth, placid, face, with no appearance of strain, actually seems ten years younger. Which is the best looking? Your friends will say give us the smiling care-free face with the Pebio Glasses on it.

ALL SAINT'S CHOIR SLEIGH DRIVE

Annual Event Was Much Enjoyed Last Evening

Last evening the choir of All Saints' Anglican church held their annual sleigh drive, which is always an enjoyable event. Two closey packed sleighs left the Parish Hall at 8 p.m. and the route taken was via Auburn to Nassau and home, returning by East City. At the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Chamberlen street, they were, on their arrival, entertained to dainty refreshments, after which games and music were the order, and the time to break up came all too soon. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were very gratefully thanked for the kindness and thought they had shown in asking the choir to their home, and for giving them such a pleasant finish to an enjoyable evening.

Judgment For 14 Cents in Lakefield Case of Years Ago

Several cases were tried at the Division Court in the Town Hall, Lakefield, on Tuesday last, Judge Huycke presiding.

Payne vs. Hill—This was a suit upon an account consisting of various items of different natures all of which were over six years before suit commenced, except the last one for nine pounds of oat chop, 14c, which bore date of May 15th, 1909. The suit was commenced on May 15th, 1915. The defendant claimed the benefit of the Statute of Limitations which bars personal claims after six years and also set up a contra account for more than the plaintiff claimed, all of which was over six years. Notwithstanding a strenuous argument on the part of Mr. Langley for the plaintiff that the case was one of mutual accounts and unaffected by the Statute unless six years had elapsed since the last item on either side, reference being made to Statutes passed in the reigns of James, Anne and George IV., as well as the Ontario Statute, the Judge held that all the items were barred on both sides except the claim for 14c, and judgment was given plaintiff for 14c without costs against Mr. Hill and dismissed without costs against Mrs. Hill. Mr. O. A. Langley acted for plaintiff, and Mr. V. J. McElderry for defendants.

Ayotte vs. McMurray and Ayotte vs. McManus—John F. Ayotte claimed $45.37 against Patrick McMurray and $41.25 against Michael James McManus for pasture of cattle. These cases arose out of a dispute as to whether the agreement was for 50c each for yearlings and 75c for two-years-olds per month or for the season. The defendants said it was for the season, and the plaintiff said it was per month. The agreement was not in writing and there were only the plaintiff and the two defendants present when it was made. After hearing the evidence of the parties and a number of witnesses, judgment was awarded plaintiff in the case against P. McMurray for $36.75 and costs, and in the case against M. J. McManus for $33.75 and costs. Mr. O. A. Langley acted for the plaintiff in each case, and Mr. V. J. McElderry for the defendants.—Lakefield News.

Will Not Make Peace Until The Foe is Driven From Russia, Says the Tsar

Emperor, Inspecting Western Front, Declares That No Compact Will Be Made With Teutons Otherwise Than With Consent of Allies, to Whom He is Bound.

PETROGRAD, Via London, Jan. 17.—"Rest assured, as I said at the beginning of the war, I will not make peace before we have forced the last of the enemy out of the limits of the mother country, and not otherwise than with the consent of our Allies, to whom we are bound, not by paper, but by sincere friendship and ties of blood."

Emperor Nicholas in these words, addressed to one of his armies on the Russian western front during the week preceding the Russian Christmas, once more replied to the rumours of a separate peace in Russia, which from time to time have been current.

The Emperor, after inspecting the armies of the southern front, reviewed those of the Commander-in-Chief of the forces in the west.

The Imperial train stopped at Zamirie, on the Alexandroffsky Railway. The Emperor rode in an automobile, accompanied by General Everth, to a field where reserves were on parade. The troops passed in review before the Emperor, who was mounted on a big bay horse, the various companies shouting a salute in unison as they passed. All officers wearing the Cross of St. George took places beside the Emperor, and after the review he conversed with each officer separately, asked questions and generally interested himself in their personal and official welfare.

The Emperor then addressed the officers, saying: "I speak to you, most heroic representatives of our army, wishing to deeply and sincerely thank you for your mighty valor and heroic efforts in the present campaign. I beg you to pass to your men my words thanking them also for the heavy strain they manfully endured, which all Russia and I personally value."

Emperor Nicholas then gave his assurance as quoted above that he would not make a separate peace, and afterward again rode in front of his troops. Addressing the troops, General Everth called for cheers for the Emperor, saying: "For the highest welfare of our national leader, our dearly beloved Emperor, Hurrah!"

Cheering continued long after the Emperor had dismounted and left the field in his automobile.

On the following day Emperor Nicholas inspected the army corps commanded by General Kuropatkin, the hero of the Russo-Japanese War.

Greetings to the Russian people from various prominent men of other countries are published in Petrograd newspapers in observance of the Russian New Year. Among the messages displayed most prominently is that sent by Mr. David Lloyd George, British Minister of Munitions, which contains the following:

"The time is soon coming when on both fronts we will face the enemy in conditions of complete equality as regards munitions and with the numerical advantage on our side."

VICTORY OR NO PEACE.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Reuter's Petrograd correspondent says that Emperor Nicholas, in an Imperial order to the Russian army and navy on the occasion of the Russian New Year's Day, proclaimed that there can be no peace without victory. The order follows:

"The year 1915 has passed, and it was filled with memorable instances of sacrifices by my glorious forces. In a hard struggle with an enemy strong in numbers and rich in resources they have harassed that enemy and checked his invasion, their breasts forming an invincible shield of protection for the fatherland.

"On the threshold of the year 1916 I send to you my greetings, my brave warriors. In heart and thought I am with you while you battle in the trenches, imploring the aid of the Most High on your work, your valor and your courage. Remember this: Our beloved Russia cannot be assured of her independence and her rights, cannot enjoy the fruits of her labours or develop her resources, unless a decisive victory is gained over the enemy.

"Let it therefore be impressed on your minds and consciences that there can be no peace without victory. However great the suffering, however numerous the victims the struggle may cost us, we must bring victory to our mother country.

"Latterly I had occasion to greet certain regiments on the fields of Molodechno and Vileika, which had become famous for the battles fought there in September last, and I realized how warm was the heart, how high was the spirit and how firm was the determination of all to do their sacred duty in defence of their country. I enter on the New Year with firm confidence in the grace of God, in the moral power, in the unshakable resolution and in the fidelity of the whole Russian nation and in the martial valor of my army and navy."

BELGIAN CLERGY ASKED TRIBUNAL ON ATROCITIES

Requested Germans to Join Them in A Complete Investigation of Charges and Counter Charges of Atrocities.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—The Belgian bishops, headed by Cardinal Mercier, recently addressed to the Catholic Episcopate of Germany and Austria a letter proposing the establishment of a tribunal of inquiry into the atrocities alleged to have been committed during the German invasion of Belgium.

It was proposed to investigate and establish the truth concerning the atrocities alleged by the German Emperor and German official documents to have been committed by Belgian civil population and those committed by German troops.

The Belgian Episcopate suggested that the tribunal be composed of three members of the German Episcopate and three members of the Belgian Episcopate. They were to be under the presidency of a neutral bishop or archbishop designated by the Episcopate of Holland, Spain, Switzerland or United States.

The joint letter seems to have been left without a reply, and the fact of itd having been sent has been kept a secret. Now a group of Belgian patriots at Havre has obtained a copy and published the letter.

The letter referred to the German Emperor's telegram to President Wilson accusing Belgian citizens, priests and women of committing abominable criminal acts on German soldiers and declaring that his heart bled to see measures of repression rendered inevitable. The Belgian bishops deny absolutely the truth of these accusations. They further say:

"You will summon before this tribunal whomsoever you wish. We shall ask to appear all priests of parishes where civilians, priests monks, nuns and laymen were massacred or threatened with death on the plea that some one fired. We shall ask all these priests to sign depositions on oath.

"Then, unless it is pretended that the whole Belgian clergy is perjured you will be obliged to accept, and the civilized world will not be able to reject, the conclusions of this solemn decisive injury. You have the same interest as we in the constitution of this tribunal of honor."

DELIVERY SAID TO B A SHAM

How Denmark Complies With Agreement With Britain.

LONDON, Jan. 17.—Basil Clarke, the special investigator of the Daily Mail at Copenhagen insists in his latest article on the passage of goods through Denmark to Germany that the carters at Copenhagen take the goods off the ships, carry them for a little ride around the docks and then take them back to the ships again, thereby complying with the terms of the agreement between Great Britain and Denmark, "for delivery at Copenhagen." They are loaded on to the ships again, he states, and then taken off for transport by train to Germany.

Explaining why beef is half a crown per pound in Denmark, he says: "Denmark is now eating pork instead of beef. The Esbjerg cattle market sales show that on one day when there were 1,546 head of cattle on the street, Hamburg purchased 141; Kielsen of Kiel 280; Francy, of Berlin, 460, and an Austrian buyer 327, leaving 212 for Danish buyers.

The Mail in an editorial says: "If there must be friction with neutrals—and the sham blockade has generated this as much, if not more, than the real article would have done—let us make certain that the precedents are on our side. Then we can point out that it is possible for us to sacrifice our vital legal rights for the sake of neutral powers. We can remind critics that the United States in 1861-1865 did not relax the blockade of the South because Lancashire was starving and we did not ask them to do it. So the British nation is not going to let go. Its very existence is at stake. It is going to insist on a real blockade of Germany and make short work of its Ministers if they do not convert their sham blockade into a real strangle hold.

Allies Complete Their Second Defence Line

BERLIN, Jan. 17. — Despatches from Sofia say that information has been brought there by a person who left Salonica on January 8, to the effect that the Allies continue to land forces, on a considerably increased scale, at Salonica and at Orfano Bay, fifty miles to the northeast of Salonica. Despite the heavy forces already landed and concentrated in the Salonica camp, no purpose of taking the offensive has yet been displayed on the part of the Allies, who, according to this informant, have completed their second line of defence and are working actively to finish the first line.

The Allies at Salonica are said to have grown exceedingly optimistic and their officers express the belief that they can make a second Ypres of Salonica.

Other despatches from Sofia give details of the attack by the squadron of twelve aeroplanes on the British camp at Kilindir, near Salonica, on which occasion, it is stated, several conflagrations were started by the dropping of incendiary bombs. Details are also given of the counter attack by French airmen, two of whom were forced to descend.

BEATEN, ROBBED IN BEACHVILLE

Italian Rendered Unconscious By Bulgarians. Who Are Arrested

WOODSTOCK, Jan. 17.—One of the most daring hold-ups that have been committed in these parts in some time was perpetrated in Beachville, when the home of an Italian employee of the lime kiln, named workmen, named George Chris and Dike Christian, presumably Bulgarians. When the Italian refused to hand over his money he was beaten and rendered unconscious, his assailants taking with them about $100.

Proceeding to Woodstock on the 8 o'clock car, they purchased new hats, and after inquiry at the Grand Trunk station bought tickets for Niagara Falls, N..

In the meantime the local police had been notified and arrested the two men at the Grand Trunk station at midnight.

At first it was thought that only the victim's wages had been stolen, some $30 being received last night, but this morning it developed that a much larger sum had been taken.

A thorough search of the men was made, when about $40 was discovered wound around the ankles of one of the hugs, while the other admitted having hidden his share in a hole in the flooring of the police cell.

On the nominal charge of vagrancy they were remanded to jail for a week.

TURKS TORTURE GREEKS; 131,000 ARE DEPORTED

MILAN, Jan. 14.—An American missionary who has arrived in Athens states that in Turkey flogging, torture and massacre of Greeks are the order of the day. Enormous numbers of Greeks who departed to the interior of Turkey have died from hunger and disease.

It is stated that 80,000 Greeks have been deported from Bulgaria, 40,000 from the Dardanelles and 45,000 from the European shores of the Black and Mediterranean seas.
